WITH FOUR BEAUTIFULLY COLOURED ILLUSTRATIONS, AND NUMEROUS SMALLER ENGRAVINGS.

Cheap Edition: Tinted covers (without coloured plates), 3s.

THE CHRISTIAN PROGRESS says:—

"A most minute inquiry into the deep significance of the Tabernacle, its Priesthood, and Offerings. It will be a most helpful guide to the student of these subjects, and lets in a flood of Gospel light upon the old dispensation. It is also a MARVELLOUS VOLUME of scriptural exposition; and all who study it will find much to learn in its pages."

FOOTSTEPS OF TRUTH says:—

"We heartily commend this work to all students of the Bible; and especially to young Christians. Its teaching is calculated to root and ground them in the faith."

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MOSES

AS SEEN IN THE TABERNACLE AND ITS VARIOUS SERVICES.

Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

THE BRIGHOUSE NEWS says:—

"This volume is a beautiful, charming, and able exposition of the ceremonial economy of the Hebrews. Priests, sacrifices, tabernacle, are all made to tell their doctrinal and symbolical significance. . . . . A pleasant and profitable exposition of a very important part of God's Word."

THE CHRISTIAN says:—

"No young Christian, and especially no preacher, should be ignorant of the truth which this small volume very simply but very forcibly enunciates."

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Mr. Matthew Burnett, Temperance Evangelist.

An esteemed correspondent relates the following facts, which are, of course, very gratifying to us, and which we may be forgiven for commending to the imitation of other readers :—

I have taken The Christian for very many years, and have induced others to subscribe. You will be amused when I tell you that for a long time I lent my copy to eight different persons; then sent it to my daughter in North-West India; she lent it to three ladies, and one of them sent the same copy to a friend in New Zealand, who sent it to her friends! Do you think a penny a week was ever better invested, or will bring a richer reward?

Another lady I persuaded to become a subscriber sends her copy every week to my sister in Cape Town; it is then read by twenty ladies belonging to the Dorcas Society, and finally sent to the Soldiers' Home, where it is much appreciated.

The holiday season, while it is marked by much that is pleasant and invigorating, never fails to bring some special sorrow with it. Coach accidents and boating fatalities have brought gloom to many hearts where gladness was anticipated. Modern facilities for locomotion add to the normal uncertainties of life, and they only are truly wise who have their loins girt, at all times ready for the inevitable call, however suddenly it may come.

It is warmly advocated that a large Tabernacle should be erected in London for Rev. J. McNeill. The Presbyterian Messenger (the leading organ of English Presbyterianism) says :—

That solution has no attractions for us. Leaving Mr. McNeill aside for a moment, we doubt the wisdom of putting enormous sums into bricks and mortar to provide for very large congregations. Smaller congregations make a less splendid show, but they are more easily looked after, they can be more effectively organised for work, they are less dependent on the one man who gathered them, and have more promise of permanence. The Metropolitan Tabernacle is notably successful; but before we can safely imitate it we must not only find another C. H. Spurgeon, which would not be easy, but we must find one who is willing to forego the alluring opportunities which are pressed upon every London minister of reputation, and to devote himself almost exclusively to building up his own congregation.

We are quite of this opinion. The manifold and exceptional gifts of Mr. Spurgeon have made the Metropolitan Tabernacle the centre of a network of Christian agency of extraordinary extent and influence; but the gift of Mr. McNeill is, we imagine, more exclusively of an evangelistic character, and we think that men like him would be more advantageously utilised in visiting different places in London and the provinces, than in being tied to one vast congregation over whom he could exercise only a very partial pastorship.

It is to be hoped, as the lengthened correspondence in the columns of The Record on the Keswick Conference comes to a close, that the phrases, "Keswick Teaching," and "Keswick doctrine" will not be revived. On the other hand, the letters are mostly valuable, and that of Rev. H. C. G. Moule is an admirable example of the spirit in which controversy should be conducted. These things may be said: Such conferences interpret a wide-spread yearning for a deeper realisation of what Christ can do in the heart and will of his trusting servants, but it becomes those who have reached this higher experience to guard against misjudging others, and also against such an overbalancing of truth. The onesidedness of man is often in painful contrast to the completeness of inspired Scripture.

The Methodist Times last week, in noticing an appeal before the Wesleyan Conference by Rev. F. W. Macdonald in relation to public prayers, comments strongly on the laxity and irreverence in worship which are, it is declared, on the increase. It speaks of children talking and looking about them during prayer; of whisperings and correspondence going on among choirs; of cases where half the congregation dribble into chapels after the first prayer; of rambling prayers, with a rapidly uttered volume of words on the part of the ministers, which fail to fix the attention of worshippers. To devout persons this complaint cannot appear unimportant.

Miss Phelps's recent article in The Forum with regard to the degeneracy of much of the modern society in America, has revealed the existence in that country of somewhat widespread disintegrating forces. It must not be forgotten, however, that those evil tendencies are at work, to a greater or a lesser degree, in all civilised countries. America, therefore, is far from being alone in the struggle. As a set-off against Miss Phelps's laments over the decay of manners, it is pleasant to record that the different religious bodies of the United States now number nearly 22 million members, with over 103,000 ministers, showing a gain for the past year of more than a million members, and 4,360 ministers. These figures represent a power for good that cannot fail to have a powerful influence upon the future of American society.

There is a growing conviction in many quarters that Biblical instruction ought to occupy a higher position in our church testimony. If the Holy Scriptures are "inspired of God and profitable for teaching," then the best way to counteract false doctrine and promote true edification, is to display their contents, at once expounding the letter and pointing out the spiritual force and meaning. An American monthly, The Old and New Testament Student, has published a symposium on this important subject. That the minister of the Gospel should be a teacher of the Bible is admitted by the several writers, some of whom, however, express deep sorrow that it is so general for preachers to neglect definite work of this type.

Our average American ministry ought to be educated to greater skill in teaching the Bible both to learned and to unlearned hearers. Few preachers in our time are so equipped as to be able to repel by clear and candid reasoning the more novel and subtle attacks of sceptical critics of the Bible. Few are so familiar with the mountain ranges of Scripture as to be able to lead congregations to spiritual heights from which the outlook dispels scepticism.

This is admirably said. Another contributor, Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston writes :—

Bible-readings, so-called, are now largely employed by the lay evangelists of the Moody school. Let scholars disparage them as they will, these Bible-readings conform to a right method: that of comparative Scriptural study. It is a simple method, to which the Concordance furnishes the principal aid; but it is an effective method for interesting and instructing the people. We wish that this manner of preaching might largely supplement the present form of formal sermonising.

Other writers maintain that Bible-class teaching should be highly beneficial to ministers in their expository preaching. Teaching services are in many places a very definite need to-day, and if some sermons had to "go" to make place for them, so much the better it would be, alike for the churches and those outside.

A writer in the New York Post has lately contributed a word-sketch of London as it is to-day, in the course of which occur the following passages :—

The very flower of material civilisation is before the visitor—all that wealth, and art, and training can effect to adorn life, where, for the most part, struggle and want, and sin and sorrow, are thrust aside... We have before us a greater than Rome. We are at the mainspring of the most extensive empire the world has ever seen, exercising through modern science a direct, immediate, and unquestioned rule, such as was never imagined in former centuries. Above and through all there is Paganism enough; but it is revealed less in the degradation of the poor crossing-sweepers, and the worn, anxious-looking flower girls, and small dealers crowding many of the thoroughfares, than in the hard faces and demeanour of the faultlessly dressed aristocratic men who throng the pavements in the vicinity of the clubs.

Mighty and brilliant and rich though Rome was, the radical cause of her fall was the immorality, the luxury, the materialism, and the selfishness which that very wealth and power engendered: she herself "winged the shaft that quivered in her heart." Let England, therefore, amidst all her progress remember that it is not in great scientific achievements, in commerce, in wealth, or in naval or military armaments, but rather in the purity of social life, in a scrupulous commercial honesty, and in the conduct of public affairs in accordance with "the laws of eternal righteousness," that the real stability of a nation consists.

A railway worker writes to us, lamenting the sad extent to which, together with his fellows, and cab and 'bus men, he is a stranger to Lord's Day rest. Describing operations at a Midland railway centre, he says:—

Goods and similar traffic which could be worked on week-days is regularly worked on Sundays. The consequence is, railway men hardly ever know what it is to attend public worship with their wives and children. Years gone by, I used to look forward to my Sundays with pleasure; indeed, I had a Sunday-school class, and engaged in other Christian work. Now I scarcely ever have this privilege; and yet, I believe, Christian men hold high official positions in connection with the railway companies.

This breaking up of family life is especially disastrous in its consequences upon the rising generation. In the first place, the father's occupation on the Sabbath is calculated to secularise the home of which he is the head. Then, again, the children are deprived of that attention which dutiful Christian fathers should bestow upon their moral and spiritual culture.

It is pleasant, in these days of laxity in such matters, to note a good example of zeal for Sabbath observance. It appears that on a recent Sunday at Hong-Kong, whilst the crews of other ships in harbour were kept working, so that no religious service could be held on board, the captain of the ship Edendale, of Sunderland, refused to allow his cargo to be landed, and he and some of his crew went ashore and attended service at the Seamen's Church. But that, as in this case, a commercial loss should be entailed upon the shipowner by refusing to desecrate the Sabbath, is a most unjustifiable hardship. It is stated that a protest against this Sunday labour was lately signed by a very large number of officers and crews frequenting the harbour, and presented to the Governor, but that owing to the adverse influence of a few merchants, eager to become rich, it has produced no effect. Hong-Kong is a Crown colony, and was not long ago held up to admiration by a British official as a model settlement. If it be so, then it is the bounden duty of the home Government to protect those captains and crews and others who object to be deprived of their needful day of rest.

A passage in the long article of The Times on Dr. Newman (August 12) respecting the attitude of the people of England deserves to be kept in remembrance. It speaks of persons who after the Tractarian movement followed Romeward, and says:—

The following has been almost wholly confined to the educated and refined, to the classes to whom religion is a luxury, an amusement, an agreeable relief from the frivolities and vulgarities of the hour. Several thousand have thus accompanied Newman, not into the wilderness, but into magnificent churches, and into well-furnished and well-frequented drawing-rooms. But that multitude which responded to the Gospel-call on the shores of Gennesareth holds aloof and hears not the voice of a shepherd. The wise and prudent are many in the crowd that has left us, but of the babes there are none.

Among the very numerous press articles upon the late Cardinal Newman (most of which appear in their eulogies to have forgotten or ignored the essential antagonism between Protestantism and Romanism) one only, that in our vigorous contemporary, The English Churchman, points out an important lesson which all may learn from a life full of contradictions. It is that Newman firmly adhered to the principle that great religious movements are not so much the result of societies as of individual exertion. To use his own words: "Living movements do not come of committees, nor are great ideas worked out through the post." This saying contains a truth which is in some danger of being obscured in these bustling days, when the tendency is to multiply associations for every imaginable purpose. Such combinations are to a certain extent necessitated by the present state of society; but have not all the great movements which have changed the current of civil or religious history owed their first mighty impetus to the enthusiasm, the fervent faith, and single-mindedness of some one man?

The current number of The Quarterly Review contains a powerfully written paper upon modern French fiction, and to those who are interested in the moral and spiritual welfare of France, the writer's views, plainly and forcibly expressed, will be intensely painful. No such unhappy picture of the decadence of French literature has been presented before, and the subject is full of warning to us, for, unfortunately, the signs are not few of the development of a tendency on the part of a number of our popular writers to decry the laws of morality and of ordinary social life, and to elevate into their place the degraded instincts, not of the animal, but of la bête humaine.

A prosecution some time ago saved us from the inflowing tide of unclean translations of some of the worst efforts of the French mind in the direction of obscenity and impurity; but no sooner have we been freed from the stream of filth of one kind than another breaks in upon us from Russia, and our bookstalls and windows are disfigured by cheap issues of volumes which push their indecency and depravity forward under a cloak of social philosophy. What the effect of all this upon our youth must necessarily be, it is not difficult to foresee, and it is to be regretted that in the best interests of the coming race, means cannot be devised, and that speedily, to save our young people from that which can only poison the springs of their life.

Russia would thrust the Jews out of her borders because many of them are engaged in occupations whereby they prosper at the expense of the Russians themselves. The public-houses are largely held by Jews, and as money-lenders the Jews batten on the improvidence and misfortunes of the people. This state of things is largely owing to Russia's policy in the past, which has been to put the Jews under disabilities, restricting them as to occupation, and confining them as to residence. Spread over the land, in the enjoyment of equal liberties with the general population, the Jews would not have been able to exert the exclusiveinfluence they now exert, for wider scope would have been afforded to their natural talents and abounding energy. Russia has thus reaped as she sowed, and her unwise policy goes far to extenuate any objectionable or prejudicial attitude the Jews may have assumed in relation to the people at large.

All who wish well to the native races of Africa must rejoice at the decisive attitude taken by the Royal Niger Company with respect to the traffic in intoxicants in the territories over which they have jurisdiction. At the recent annual meeting of shareholders Lord Aberdare, the chairman of the Company, made a very satisfactory statement, in the course of which he said:—

We have lost no time in taking advantage of the International agreement [of the Brussels Conference], and we have this morning made a regulation absolutely prohibiting the importation of spirituous liquors, for sale or barter, into any place within the jurisdiction of the Company north of the seventh parallel of north latitude, that is to say, into about nineteen-twentieths of the regions over which the Company has treaty rights of jurisdiction. We trust the day is not far distant when the same policy may be enforced in the remaining twentieth of our territories; but, until the Company's military force is greatly strengthened, the attempt would inevitably be attended by disastrous failure All we can do there is to pursue our present policy of discouraging the importation of spirits within these restricted limits by levying on them the highest practicable duty.

The chairman also said that their restrictive policy with respect to liquors had lessened their trade considerably, and, of course, reduced the dividend; but the directors felt sure that, apart from questions of philanthropy, the pecuniary interests of the Company would be ultimately advanced by such a course. It is pleasant to meet with a commercial speculation that is conducted on such high moral grounds, and to find directors who care more for the bodies and souls of men than for worldly gain.

The following extract from Dr. Junker's recently published "Travels in Africa during the Years 1875-78," suggests reflections as to the responsibility of our modern society, which ransacks every quarter of the globe for luxuries, for some of the horrors daily enacted in Africa:—

The enormous destruction of elephants to supply the civilised world with ivory is shown by the calculation that in the twenty years from 1856 to 1876 Africa supplied Europe on an average with 1,500,000 lbs. of ivory annually, besides 250,000 lbs. imported to India and 150,000 lbs. to America, representing altogether at least fifty-one thousand elephants! How long can this slaughter last to furnish such articles as billiard-balls, umbrella handles, piano notes, &c.? And what unspeakable miseries of every kind inflicted on millions of wretched natives, directly or indirectly, through the ivory trade itself! If only the moans and groans and heartfelt agony could be heard that have been caused by a single tusk in its wanderings for thousands of miles before it reaches our workshops!

Ivory-raiding and slave-raiding are closely connected. If ivory must be procured, common humanity demands that Africa should be opened up for roads and steamers and other means of communication and carriage, which will not involve untold cruelty and death to so many human beings.

We have from time to time noted any signs which seem to point, remotely though it may be, towards the gradual growth of a healthier social opinion and practice among the natives of India. It is stated in a recent issue of The Daily Chronicle that a Bengalee member of one of the religious sects which have arisen out of Hindooism, and are shaking off the restrictions of caste in marriage, has lately married a Nepaulese girl, and this is said to be the first instance of an inter-racial marriage in that country. The caste system is the acknowledged source of much pitiable ignorance, superstition, and misery. The fetters which have been forged by centuries of oppressive custom are not to be easily broken off, but much improvement may be expected from the gradual spread of education, going hand-in-hand with Christianity among the women who form the key of the position to be attacked in India. Hence the urgent need for liberal support being accorded to the various societies engaged in zenana work.

A correspondent writing in The Times of aturday tells a very unwelcome story as o the traffic in Italian children who are rought to this country at a tender age to ng and play in the streets for the aggran-isement of their proprietors. The money ains are declared to be great, as these dark-yed young musicians excite compassion; ut the results to the children themselves re disastrous, if the word of this writer is o be accepted :—

They do not go to school, they become very idle, nd begin early to drink, smoke, and take to all inds of vices. They grow up immoral, illiterate, icious, and low, a degraded class, exercising a most ndesirable influence among the surrounding popu-tion. The girls, especially, nearly all go to the ad, because they are sent into low drinking-shops, ublic-houses, and similar places. When they grow p they all become beggars and vagrants by pro-ession, and always remain so, for they have learned o other trade, and many can neither read nor rite. Some remain in England, but many go over Italy and bring over children themselves. ometimes, when they are seventeen or eighteen ears old, they run away from the padrone and set p upon their own account.

Recent legislation both in Italy and in his country has done something to check he traffic, but not enough. The Times' orrespondent suggests that, pending more ringent measures of prevention, the charit-ble public should refrain from giving alms o these musical mendicants. As all the ains are said to go to the hirers or owners f the children, there need be no scruple in cting on this suggestion. In a leading rticle on the subject, our contemporary rongly counsels a tightening of the com-ulsory method of attendance at school by he Boards all over the country.

Mr. Plimsoll's recently published pam-hlet (Kegan Paul & Co.), with reference to he Transatlantic traffic in live cattle, eveals a condition of things which is dis-raceful to everybody concerned. The nimals, "packed like sardines," because he cargo does not pay unless the ship is verladen, have to stand during the entire assage, and this, of course, in itself means orture. Every such ship in rough weather "a place of agony, mutilation, and eath," and the details given by Mr. limsoll are really too sickening and heart-ending for repetition. Surely a subject like his is a fitting one for the attention of the egislative councils on both sides of the tlantic. In the race for wealth men should ot be permitted thus to outrage every eeling of humanity.

Possibly tired of waiting for practical ction on the part of the State in regard to he Housing of the Poor, the people of Manchester have taken up the matter of the ondition of many of the labouring classes that city, and a capital of £250,000 has een subscribed with the view of providing, n commercial principles, for substituting ealthy dwelling places for the fever dens nd unwholesome cellars in which such umbers of the toilers are compelled to live. he high death-rate in the Manchester strict points to the urgent necessity for a ovement of the kind, but upon moral and piritual grounds, as well as sanitary, the ep now taken is to be heartily commended. here are, however, many other cities and wns where improved accommodation for he working classes is required quite as much s it is in Manchester and Salford, and it is be hoped that we shall soon see move-ents in these places for the amelioration of e lot of the crowded poor.

"Ministers at the Play."

What The Daily News describes as a sight unique in dramatic history was witnessed at the Shaftesbury Theatre on Thursday afternoon of last week. Mr. Willard had invited the ministers of all denominations to attend a performance of "Judah." Very many accepted the invitation; so that not only clergymen of the Church of England, but grave, sober-looking Dissenting ministers, most of them with their wives and daughters, were to be seen in large numbers in every part of the house.

This is undoubtedly a "unique" sight. Times have changed evidently. Mr. Willard thinks so, and congratulated himself before his clerical audience upon "the progress which had been made during the last twenty years." The Daily News thinks so too; and in a leading article on Saturday last, after congratulating Mr. Willard, adds: "On the whole, however, the clergy of all denominations are more to be congratulated than Mr. Willard." There are thousands of Christians in the country who do not think so. They regard as humiliating retrogression what Mr. Willard and The Daily News call progress. Time was when ministers were alive to the evils existing in the churches, and humiliated themselves before God in order to seek his favour; we have almost reached the time when the churches need to call for a day of humiliation for their ministers, and to pray for a more decided evidence of conversion in them.

It appears that ministers of the Gospel are emphatically "a good audience." They could "applaud warmly, or laugh the heartiest of laughs upon occasion." Of one scene in the play we learn that the hero, dressed in clerical garb, has to swear to "a deliberate lie in order to shield the woman he loves." Some expression of disapproval of such a scene was expected from an audience composed of ministers of the truth. But the article tells us—to the evident surprise of the writer—that the scene "was got over without the slightest hostile demonstration." This is more humiliating still. We have heard of a godly man, who had been led ignorantly into a theatre, who, as soon as the performance commenced, got up and said with a loud voice: "This is no place for a child of God," and left the building. That these preachers should allow falsehood, and even perjury to pass unreproved, was not to be wondered at. Their acceptance of the invitation placed them in a false position. Men who are acting falsely are powerless to reprove falsehood. Their Master accepted invitations from men who were not his friends at heart; but He never failed to witness for the truth, and against wrong wherever He was.

The most humiliating fact yet remains to be told. At the conclusion of the performance, Mr. Willard mentioned that "out of 1200 replies he had had from ministers of different denominations, only eight were from gentlemen who condemned the theatre. But then those eight did condemn it utterly," he added, amid laughter. Falsehood and perjury passed unreproved; but the few faithful witnesses against evil were greeted with contemptuous laughter! In this vast number of ministers of the Gospel the evil leaven is evidently at work.

We believe that throughout the whole country there are hearts grieving over this very painful fact. Christian parents will dread to expose their sons and daughters to the influence of the teaching and example of these ministers of the Gospel. This is the Down Grade with an emphasis. Mr. Spurgeon's bold protest was directed chiefly against false and pernicious teaching; an equally vigorous protest is now needed against worldly living. It is such manifest unfaithfulness as this that drives out of the churches the most spiritual and best-instructed members we have got.

It would be interesting to know who were the eight at whom their brethren contemptuously laughed. Let us hope that by this time, some of those who joined in the laughter have come to see that their eight brethren were right, and they were wrong. Some explanation of how they came to accept the invitation, and of regret for having put themselves into such a false position is the only way to undo or lessen the mischief they have wrought.

Mr. Gladstone on the Pentateuch.

Mr. Gladstone's defence of the Pentateuch, in the September number of Good Words, will probably be regarded as the ablest of the series of papers on "The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture" which he has contributed to that magazine. His exceptionally wide historical studies in relation to the most ancient classic literature, give him an advantage in his reply to the critics in regard to the date and authorship of the Books which contain the Mosaic legislation. Admirably and very forcefully does he bring out the following points, among others:—

Every imaginable difference prevails among the critics themselves as to the source, date, and authorship of the Books; substantial authorship and final editorship must be recognised, and vague, unscientific methods, which do not do justice to this distinction, must be protested against; a religious retrogression marked the career of the Israelites down to the Captivity, and it seems a wanton paradox to refer the production of the Mosaic Books to the epochs of a lowered and decaying spiritual life; to the accretions of supplemental matter, the name of Moses is given as adding credit to them because that name was written on Jewish legislation as with a pen of iron; the Books bear the clearest traces of early religious beliefs, which do not accord with later ones derived from the East after the Captivity; and there are regulations which confine within narrow limits the growth of wealth and enterprise which secured a conservative, chosen people that were altogether unlike the nations of later times.

The whole article is a valuable contribution of high reasoning and scholarship, and a powerful refutation of the sceptical specialists.

THE CONGO FREE STATE.—The next official bulletin will contain a decree prohibiting the importation or sale of distilled alcoholic liquors in that region, where the use of these liquors has not been developed—that is to say, in the whole of the Congo territory situated beyond the Jukissi river. Retailers of alcohol in the coast districts west of the Jukissi will be subjected to a graduated licensing duty.

ENGLAND AND PORTUGAL.—The Times says with respect to the Anglo-Portugese agreement in Africa:—"Upon the whole this country may be very well satisfied with the agreement. It closes disagreeable disputes, it opens the great waterway of the Zambesi to trade and civilisation, it confirms our claims to vast regions and valuable rights of way, and it costs us nothing more than recognition of the right of Portugal to what we can well spare or would hardly care to acquire."

THE THREE GARDENS.

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN WHERE THEY LAID HIM.

IV.—Mary Magdalene.

The evangelist John confines himself to the movements of Mary Magdalene. His narrative throughout is artless, unimpassioned, exquisitely tender, profoundly suggestive, with an inimitable air of good faith. It abounds in those delicate touches which attest personal knowledge, and shows how deeply and indelibly the things narrated had impressed themselves on his memory.

Mary Magdalene, out of whom the Lord cast seven devils, is usually named first in the sisterhood of holy women who ministered to Jesus of their substance. The mention of her name at once suggests the thought of personal love to Jesus, the pure love of a woman's soul, faithful to the very last. This love explains her "ministering," and is itself explained by his grace and truth. A deep wrong has been done to her memory by groundlessly identifying her with the "woman that was a sinner" (Luke vii. 37); and the wrong has been perpetuated by hymns, poems, sculptures, paintings, and institutions termed "Magdalene asylums." Archdeacon Farrar gives a kind of half-countenance to the tradition which represents her as having lived an abandoned life, by saying that "it is not in itself improbable, and cannot be disproved." It is a sufficient reply that there is no evidence in its favour.* As she appears in the Gospel narrative previously, she is little more than a shadow to us, till now, for two days' space—from the crucifixion to the resurrection—she stands out in sharp distinctness, like a figure on a ridge, whose outline is thrown clear against the sky. John says nothing of her purpose in visiting the sepulchre, of the state of her mind, of the love and grief, and fear and longing, that struggled in her breast, nor whether she ran swiftly, or went with slow and fearful steps: all that he tells us is the fact of her going.

Passing through the garden and reaching the rock-hewn sepulchre, she finds it open—the stone "taken," "lifted," away. It is strange that this awakened no memory of the Lord's words, that "He must be crucified, and rise again the third day." One would have deemed it impossible to forget such words. Yet the open sepulchre suggests no thought of the truth. At once, making no scrutiny, and waiting for no vision of angels, she leaps to the conclusion that the dead Christ is "taken away." This might have been done by Joseph and Nicodemus, who had not been acting in concert with the disciples, and who, for aught she could tell, might have meant the new sepulchre for a mere temporary resting-place. Or, more probably, it might have been done by his enemies, who wished to cast fresh indignity on the dead, and to inflict a deeper outrage on the feelings of the living. It does not seem to have occurred to her that the Lord was risen.

Immediately she hastens to the city to tell Peter and John what she has found. We feel instinctively that whatever reasons of convenience there may have been, these were the two to whom it was most natural to go. This is the first mention of Peter since his denial of Jesus in the hall of the high priest's house; and we take note that he has not forsaken his old companions, nor lost their confidence; on the contrary, he is the associate of that John whom Jesus loved, and it is in his company that Mary finds him. Like one under strong emotion, she announces her news without preface, "They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid Him." There is something inexpressibly pathetic in this. It is the cry of one who has been robbed of the last thing her heart has to cling to. One word is worthy of special notice: she does not think of lifeless clay, but "the Lord;" and so throughout. Jesus is still "the Lord" to her. It is not simply that the old familiar name slips out unconsciously; but here is a revelation of her heart. Whatever the cross may have done, it has not made her cease to think of Him as the Christ. Such a faith as she had cherished, so precious and dear to her, rooted so profoundly, and so justified by her whole knowledge of Him, was not even thus to be torn up. The thought does not seem to have glanced for a single moment into her mind that He was an impostor, or self-deceived. The upcoming of that old name "the Lord" is like a flicker of light in a darkening room, which tells that the fire has not died out. It is, as far as it goes, the indication of a secret hope in her breast that all is not lost, but that somehow light shall yet "arise in the darkness."

And light is already "sown" for her, and shall speedily spring up. Her eyes shall see her Redeemer, and his cross shall become her boast. For that cross is the glory of the Gospel, its power, the sign of hope for all nations. Around it gathers the penitence, the faith, the gratitude, the joy, the wonder and worship of human hearts; love kneels forgiven at its foot, calm-browed, looking upward to God with eyes in which no trouble is, and onward to future worlds and eternal ages! The Church's grandest songs that reverberate through the mighty dome of heaven are inspired thereby; and, for aught that we can tell, shall outspread its influences to the farthest world in God's universe.

At Mary's tidings, so startling in their possible significance, and so unexpected, Peter and John at once hasten forth to the sepulchre. It is not that they mistrust Mary; but they are as much surprised as she; and, hoping to discover something that she has missed, they will examine for themselves. No need to urge them to make haste. Their "going" soon turns into running, so profoundly are they moved. They start together, but John outruns Peter, and arrives first. It is not, as has been fancifully written, love outrunning fear. We have no warrant for saying that the memory of his recent fall was like a weight of lead clogging Peter's feet; it is simply the younger and swifter outrunning his fellow. Mary, as we afterwards gather, follows more slowly.

The behaviour of each on arrival at the sepulchre is characteristic. John does not enter; only bends his head downward and forward before the low portal, so as to see within. He uses his eye. It is not fear that restrains him, no dread that he may make some discovery more painful than even the grave's emptiness; he is acting naturally. In the ancient Church he was symbolised by the flying eagle, not only for the loftiness of its flight, but for the keenness of its vision—"kindling undazzled eyes at the full midday beam"; and the symbol holds physically as well as spiritually. Without referring to the Book of Revelation, illustration is found in his distinguishing the blood from the water which flowed forth with it when the soldier pierced Jesus' side with his lance; and again, when in the early morning Jesus stood unknown on the dim shore of the Sea of Galilee, John was the first to recognise Him and to say, "It is the Lord." While John uses his eye, Peter, on the other hand, equally in character, enters the sepulchre at once, resolved to explore—true to the impetuous quality of his nature, which made him so ready to speak, to venture into danger, to draw the sword.

The sepulchre was found to be empty. There was no Christ within, only his death-dress. The linen clothes with which Joseph and Nicodemus had swathed the body, lay in one place, and in another place lay the napkin that had been about the sacred head, folded together by itself. At first glance this may seem a trivial matter, such as only the fondness of love would notice; but not so if we reflect. There is nothing torn, nothing disarranged, no sign of violence or hurry: everything betokens deliberation and composure. The Living One had gone forth with "grand tranquillity." The grave clothes are folded up and laid aside, for the Lord has no more need of them; his state of humiliation is at an end; He is risen to die no more; length of days is given Him for ever and ever.

Following Peter, John went in also, and "he saw and believed." Both these words are to be taken in their most pregnant sense. "He saw"—as one whose eyes are opened—saw what lay behind appearance—saw so as to "know." "And believed." Believed what? Not that the grave was empty and the grave dress left behind—such an interpretation is too shallow; but the truth dawned upon him, The Lord is risen, the Lord is living. Thus is he the foremost of New Testament believers in the risen One; as Peter had been the foremost to confess, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

It is specially noted as a reason why the two disciples were unprepared for what had taken place, that "as yet they knew not the Scripture, that He must rise again from the dead." The types and shadows, the prefigurative persons and ordinances, the Psalms, the prophecies, the spirit and scope of the history contained in the sacred book—from the Eden promise down to the latest prophetic voice—taught the expectation of a Messiah conquering death, and entering through suffering into glory. But the writing was, so to speak, in cipher. And beside as curtain folds, hung across a window intercept the light which beats against it, so heavy curtain folds of prejudice, miseducation, and carnal liking, had hindered the entrance of the truth into their minds as into the minds of the disciples generally. In the case of the two Emmaus friends, and afterwards with the eleven, Jesus took the ancient Scriptures, and pointed out what was "written," and showed them how prophecy and event harmonised. "Thus it is written," He said, putting his finger on place after place, "and thus it behoved the Messiah to suffer and to rise from the dead the third day."

* John Bunyan, in "The Jerusalem Sinner Saved," reproduces the legend in which Mary Magdalene is represented as the sister of Martha and Lazarus, and a woman of abandoned character. She is induced by Martha to go and hear Jesus preach. It was the day when He spoke the three parables of the lost sheep, the lost piece of silver, and the prodigal son. As she listened her heart began to tremble. "Her eyes ran down with tears apace, and she was forced to hide her face with her handkerchief, and so sat crying and sobbing all the rest of the sermon."

Two passages may be referred to for illustration. The first is Psalm xvi. 9-11 (compared with Acts ii. 25-31, xiii. 35-37): "Therefore my heart is glad and my glory rejoiceth; my flesh also shall rest in hope; for Thou wilt not leave my soul in Sheol, neither wilt Thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. Thou wilt show me the path of life; in thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore." Whatever may have been the sense and application of these words present to the psalm-writer's mind, their meaning is not exhausted till we take into account Christ's victory over death and the grave. It is not a mere temporal deliverance from impending danger, but deliverance both for the "flesh" and the "soul" of God's Holy One from "the grave," and entrance on "fulness of joy" in the vision of God. How could the transition be made except by his resurrection? The other passage in Isaiah liii. 10: "It pleased the Lord to bruise Him; He hath put Him to grief; when Thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, He shall see his seed; He shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand." There is obviously some mysterious peculiarity in the case. It is after being "cut off from the land of the living," after "giving his soul an offering for sin," after "making his grave with the wicked, and with a rich man in his death," that this life of continuance is represented as coming on. These two passages may be taken as representative of the Scriptures which foretell Messiah's victory over death and the grave. But the disciples, Peter and John, did not as yet understand them. Had they understood, they would have gone to the garden expecting what they found—the grave tenantless, because the Lord had risen.

REV. W. H. RAYBOURNE.—A correspondent fears that our notice last week of the meetings at Keswick by Mr. Raybourne may lead our readers to suppose that he was on the platform of the Convention tent on the occasion referred to. We need scarcely say that Mr. Raybourne's meetings had no sort of association with those in the tent; they were held in the Victoria Hall, and were attended, so far as we saw or learnt, by comparatively few persons. Another correspondent objects that the report of the closing meeting was exaggerated and incorrect. Our informant, however, was one whom we believe to be accurate, and we heard enough ourselves to convince us that there is no improbability on his account.

ROSS BIBLE-CARRIAGE AND STALL.—Mr. John Coates, of Landseer House, Ross, has for upwards of thirteen years devoted his spare time to the prosecution of evangelistic work in Herefordshire and Gloucestershire. On Saturdays he visits market towns with the Bible-carriage, and circulates Gospel books; he preaches as occasions offer, and rejoices in the fact that God has greatly blessed his labours. The Agnes Fraser Bible-carriage has been placed in his hands by Mr. P. M. Byres, of Manchester, and he is looking forward to visiting during the present season many places hitherto unreached. Friends sending books or tracts for distribution may rely upon the best possible use being made of them.

THE MISSIONARY BUREAU.—Of the 173 candidates who have offered during the present year fifty-nine have, from one cause or another, been found unsuitable; seventy-five are still before the committee, and promise well; while of the thirty-nine who have been accepted, some have gone to their spheres of service, and others are expected to sail in the autumn. The committee has resolved to encourage missionaries to go forth, depending for support on churches, Christian people, or friends, the Bureau undertaking to act as a medium of communication between the missionary and such friends. The demands upon the Bureau at present are such as to hamper its extended action. The secretary is Mr. R. Caldwell, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

The Russian Stundists.

When the present Czar ascended the throne of Russia there was every reason to hope that the tentative steps taken by his father to give freedom of religion to all classes of his subjects would be confirmed, and that still larger measures might be expected, bestowing on all branches of the Christian Church the same State privileges. There was a widespread feeling that the various distinctions as to religion which favoured one part of the people, and entitled another section only to the common benefits which justice could not refuse to a loyal people, should be abolished; and that the dissenters from the Orthodox Church, who might be fairly considered as among the most intelligent and the most devoted subjects to the Czar, should enjoy large concessions of civil and religious freedom, which until then had been vigorously withheld from them.

These expectations were never realised. A meagre enactment removing certain insignificant disabilities was indeed published. I shall have occasion afterwards to refer to it, to point out its futile provisions, to show that it was in reality a measure of repression rather than a charter of liberties. But such as it was, it put heart into the dissenters and gave them for a short time a recognised position in the state. Keen watchers of the Government feared that when it was discovered that the law might perhaps ameliorate the condition of the dissenters or put them on an equal footing with the orthodox, it would be repented of, and be made to become a dead letter. These fears have been unfortunately realised, and the Government has relapsed into its old policy of

PERSECUTION AND BANISHMENT.

There can be no longer any doubt that the Holy Synod has become alarmed at what may be roughly styled the Protestant movement in Russia. It is a modern movement, and altogether alien to the old well-established heresies which have hitherto received the hostile attentions of the Church. While the Old Believers, the Molokans, and other prominent Russian sects are historical bodies, dating from the time of Ivan the Terrible and Peter the Great, indigenous to the soil, and exhibiting no anxiety about the increase of their number, or the eternity in store for those who differ from them, the Protestants—Stundists, Baptists, and others—are of quite recent growth, have an European origin and European connections, and are led by fervid presbyters who carry active proselytism into the very ranks of the orthodox. It is the connection with Europe that troubles the Holy Synod. The movement is not of home growth.*

A FANATIC STATESMAN.

Before proceeding to give an account of a representative Russian Protestant communion, its origin, growth, progress, sufferings, it might be well to introduce the great central figure of Russian ecclesiastial administration, M. Pobedonostseff. His official title is Chief Procureur of the Holy Synod. In his hands are all the corners of the Russian Orthodox Church. His influence with the Czar, until quite recently, has been enormous. He is not a man of the first order of genius, nor is he a first-rate administrator. But if he is lacking in the highest attributes of statesmanship, he has abundance of tenacity of purpose, and the fervid zeal of a conscientious fanatic. Hatred of foreign, and especially of German and English, influences in religious matters, is a passion with him. Over the beneficent action of the Orthodox Church in the past he casts his eyes, and finds in it the salvation of Western Christendom. Into the future he looks, and sees Orthodoxy triumphing over the schism of Rome and the heresies of Luther and Cranmer and Knox and Calvin. Give him the crass ignorance and unreasoning faith of the orthodox peasant rather than the fresh, healthful spirit of inquiry and protest. Do not investigate the question whether the things that be are the things that ought to be. Do not tell him that faith and reason are united. He will answer that faith is then no longer faith. No wonder if in the hands of such a man

PROTESTANTISM SHOULD FARE BADLY.

The Stundist movement is strictly confined to Southern Russia. A line drawn from the fortress of Brest-Litovski, near Warsaw, to Astrachan, at the mouth of the Volga, might be taken as the northern boundary of Stundism. A little German colony called Rohrbach, pleasantly situated on a tributary of the river Bong, is its birthplace. About forty-five years ago a pastor named Bonekemper, holding the views of the Reformed Lutheran Church, settled here, and observing that the colonists were not exactly what he thought they ought to be, he instituted "Ezbauung's-Stunden," or "hours for religious edification." These Stunden were a peculiarity of this colony, and were continued for many years.

When Bonekemper died about twenty-five years ago, he was succeeded by his son. It is to the younger man that the spread of the movement beyond the limits of Rohrbach is due. He was an energetic man, part of whose education and training had been received in America. He possessed an advantage which his father lacked—a thorough knowledge of the Russian language; and, desirous of extending the movement so successfully commenced by his father, he invited the Russian villagers in his neighbourhood either to take part in the German meetings or to hold meetings of their own. Some, whom contact with their Teutonic neighbours had enabled to acquire a little German, attended the Rohrbach Stunden; others formed "Stunden" in their own villages and were called by their orthodox neighbours in derision, Stundists. The infection

SPREAD FROM VILLAGE TO VILLAGE.

Bonekemper and others interested in the matter supplied the Stundists with New Testaments and Russian translations of English and German tracts. At length, towards the beginning of 1870, the movement burst beyond the confines of the Cherson Government, and entered on the north Ekaterinoslav, on the east the Taurida, and on the west Bessarabia and Podolia. Their tens grew to hundreds, and their hundreds to thousands. Early in 1875 they were heard of in the province of Charkoff, in Volhynia, Kieff, Tchernigov, Poltava, on the Dnieper, on the Dniester, on the Volga, and their thousands reached tens of thousands. A sort of loose organisation gradually rose into being. In districts where they were numerous, they appointed and collected money for the general uses of the society.

When, about 1882, they had grown to hundreds of thousands the active attention of the Government was first seriously invoked by the repeated and bitter complaints of the village priests. Many of their flocks were no longer what they had been; they were vexed and puzzled with hard questions; there was a spirit of inquiry abroad; their people were reading the Bible; they were holding private meetings in their own cottages; were irregular in their attendance at church; grumbled about paying the church dues; and it had even come to their ears that these people, who were called Stundists, had blasphemed the holy Icons, alleging them to be nothing else than painted wood and metal. This was a state of affairs not to be borne. Inquiries were set on foot, village priests were directed to send detailed statements to their bishops, the bishops were to report to the Holy Synod, and M. Pobedonostseff was to give the matter his close consideration.

* A home-grown movement was the "Redeemer" Society. Its doctrines were full of the most pernicious notions, aimed at the very foundation of all social ethics. Another sect was the Nietovtchini, which had as its leading doctrine the righteousness of suicide as an escape from the dominion of Antichrist. These people were allowed full course, until some crime, more than usually terrible, committed by them, obliged the civil authorities to adopt active measures for their suppression.

There was but one result to be anticipated. It was resolved to take active measures to win back to the orthodox fold those straying sheep. This was soon seen to be

A EUPHEMISM FOR PERSECUTION.

The Stundist meetings were formally forbidden; the Tract Society which printed tracts for them in St. Petersburg was suppressed, and their stock of tracts and brochures, all of which, be it remembered, had previously received the imprimatur of the censor, was confiscated; and several prominent Stundists were brought before the courts of justice charged with the propagation of doctrines inimical to the orthodox faith. Convictions were not always obtainable. In a large town like Odessa or Charkoff, where the jurors were more or less enlightened, the Stundist stood a good chance of an acquittal, but in small country towns he was invariably convicted. If convicted, he was sent to prison for a period varying from four months to several years' transportation, or banishment for life.

But the authorities did not rely solely on the ordinary and sometimes uncertain processes of law. In Russia they have a system called "administrative," another of the euphemistic terms employed in the gilding of despotism. When evidence of guilt is not forthcoming, or when there is only a suspicion of guilt, or when it is convenient to get rid of a troublesome person without any ado, the system of "administrating" is brought into force, and the suspected person is deported, often at the shortest notice—sometimes no notice at all is given—to some distant part of the empire, to remain under police surveillance for periods of from three to fifteen years, and often for life.

In another paper I will present two or three types of Stundists to the readers of The Christian, and will try to give a short statement of the views held by these Protestants of the Steppes. B.

A PLEA FOR CHINA.

Suggested at a Missionary Meeting, July 10, 1890.

"O tell us slowly, slowly"—
So spake a little band
Of China's heathen women,
Who could not understand.

They listened on with wonder,
They heard with bated breath
Of Jesus' love for sinners,
His life, his cruel death,

His glorious resurrection:
Say, why did they not know
The Saviour who redeemed them?
The God who loved them so?

Had no one been to teach them,
Nor stilled their famine cry?
Must they go on in darkness,
In darkness live and die?

Will ye not "go out quickly"?
For souls are dying fast,
Ye cannot always reach them,
The time will soon be past.

The Bridegroom King is coming:
Haste, haste thee to thy knees;
Pray for the living fire,
Give up thy sloth and ease.

Then answer Him that calleth,
Lord, "Here am I, send me;
Oh! none can tell the gladness
Of leaving all for Thee."

The Opium Curse.

CHINA.

A very striking account of the suicide of a Chinese woman through swallowing a large quantity of raw opium, is sent to us by Mr. W. Hope Gill, of the C.I.M., Wan-Hsien, Sz-chuan, China. He describes how, being called in to deal with the case, he strained every nerve to ward off the last enemy, though in vain—the dose taken had really been enough to have poisoned twenty or thirty people. Mr. Gill was able to seize the opportunity of preaching Christ to the crowd of people that filled the yard, and they thanked him heartily for the efforts he had made. He goes on to say:—

"I reached our house again with feelings indescribable, thinking of this dreadful suicide committed by the means of the accursed abomination that my own country brought to and forced upon this mighty Empire. I could not but cry to God to intervene soon on her behalf; to stop the importation of opium into the country, and to bless with much success every effort now being made to this end. May every true child of God feel his individual responsibility in the matter.

"I add a few words concerning the spread of the Gospel, and the awful spread of opium-smoking and eating. It is with no small amount of thanksgiving to God, that we now see so much active effort put forth for the total abolition of this nefarious traffic with China. We who are engaged in spreading the glorious news of a Saviour's love, are confronted on all hands by this demoniacal drug question, as a paramount hindrance in our work. Some brethren spend no small amount of strength and labour in curing smokers of the habit.

"We are also full of praise to God, that the active step has been taken by the recent General Conference of Missionaries in Shanghai, in issuing an appeal to the Church of Christ for 1,000 more men evangelists for needy Sinim, within the next five years. May we all be kept much in prayer, and prove ourselves faithful in doing our best to hasten the overthrow of Satan's power in this land, and the establishment of his kingdom; crying to Him to incline the officials to allow us to rent mission premises, and live amongst their people in peace. Without such stations the evangelisation of the people will be no easy work. He who will send out the 1,000 heralds of the Cross, is able also to give us favour in the eyes of the officials."

SINGAPORE.

The last mail from the East brings particulars of an anti-opium agitation by the Chinese inhabitants of the British colony of Singapore. There was a large response to a circular issued by the authorities of the Chinese "Thien Hok" temple, calling a meeting for July 17 to consider the desirability of requesting the British Parliament to prohibit the growth of opium in India, and its export therefrom. From noon till 3 p.m. the Chinese gathered in large numbers, and up to three o'clock 990 names were added to the prohibition petition. Among the most anxious to sign were the opium smokers themselves. Short speeches were delivered, and many Chinese gentlemen took copies of the petition to secure signatures from those who were not in attendance. The editors of the Chinese newspapers Lat Pau and Sing Pau were present, and Mr. Tan Kim Ching, the Siamese consul, presided.

ABERYSTWYTH.—We have been favoured with a visit by Pastor Owen Tidman, of Blaenavon. He has conducted Bible-readings, also held evangelistic services on the beach. The meetings for Christians have not been attended so largely as we would have desired, but the Lord's presence has been richly realised, and the precious Word has been unfolded in such a way as will, we trust, constrain us to love it more than ever. The open-air meetings have been greatly blessed. A. B.

IDLENESS.

Idleness is the most corrupting fly that can blow on the human mind. Men learn to do ill by doing what is next to it—nothing.—Fellthan.

Though to-day may not fulfil
All thy hopes, have patience still;
For perchance to-morrow's sun
Sees thy happier days begun.

To every one on earth
God gives a burden, to be carried down
The road that lies between the cross and crown.
The lot is wholly free,
He giveth one to thee.

It is as if the Psalmist (cxix. 53: cp. Ezra ix. 23), looking round on the sea of life, saw men rejecting the guidance of right reason, throwing overboard the divine pilot, and drifting rapidly with the tide of wickedness toward the breakers and quicksands; and as he gazes, the thick mist of horror falls on him, and he faints away.—Corderius, quoted by Dr. Kay on The Psalms.

THE BLESSED MAN.

TRUE ZEAL.

Let us take heed we do not sometimes call that zeal for God and his Gospel, which is nothing else than our own tempestuous and stormy passion. True zeal is a sweet, heavenly, and gentle flame, which maketh us active for God, but always within the sphere of love.—Cudworth.

PRAYER.

Prayer, like Jonathan's bow, returns not empty. Never was faithful prayer lost at sea. No merchant trades with such certainty as the praying saint. Some prayers, indeed, have a longer voyage than others; but then they return with the richest lading at last.—Gurnall.

Watchfulness will not avail without prayer, nor prayer without watchfulness. "Watch and pray," saith the Lord.—Sir Richard Hill.

GRIEF FOR OTHERS' SIN.

The sinner looks on godliness as matter for mirth; but the godly man looks on sin as a horrible thing, because he forsees the fearful nature of its punishment. We ought then to grieve over our erring brethren. "I beheld the revolters and was grieved." (Ps. cxix. 158).

O leave to God at sight of sin incensed to be!
Sinner, if thou art grieved, that is enough for thee.
Archbishop Trench.

HEARING AND DOING.

There is a constant danger that we lose sight of the distinction which our Lord long ago made between hearing and doing. We are prone to think that there is some virtue in hearing the Gospel, even though the hearing end in itself. But our Lord is most positive and emphatic on this point. The hearing of the Gospel without doing it is but as a house upon the sand. It is the hearing and the doing which is represented by the house built upon the rock which all the force of the winds and the waves could not overthrow.—George Dana Boardman.

THE McALL MISSION IN FRANCE.

I have been revisiting Paris this summer, after a long absence, and was greatly struck with the advance since I was last there. One thing specially filled me with thankfulness and joy. It was not that agencies and halls had been greatly multiplied; it was not that public opinion in France is more open and the people more ready to listen than ever; it was not that the McAll Mission has got such a hold in Paris that it was possible to hold an enthusiastic meeting of friends and adherents in one of the largest Protestant churches, filling that church on a drizzling wet Sunday night. There was something better, more beautiful than even these things, it was the internal progress.

Over and over again, where I had left a Mission-Hall, I found a little Christian Church. Sometimes a church in name and form, with Pastor and ordinances, such as Rev. Charles Greig's, or Rev. R. Saillens'; often the name and form are still wanting, but the church is none the less there. My readers probably know how Dr. McAll's heart has been set for years on a plan of uniting the Mission to the existing churches. Many difficulties stood in the way, but at last

THEY HAVE BEEN SURMOUNTED.

No new denomination has been formed, but each hall has (if possible) been affiliated to some one of the existing denominations, so that all may impartially help and be helped. In cases where the situation would bear it, a pastor has been appointed within the hall itself.

For example, a beautiful little building has just been erected at Bercy, to serve the double purpose of church and hall; it is a sort of annexe, or "Chapel of Ease," to Rev. Theodore Monod's church, from which it is two miles distant. Mr. Greig, who for years has toiled as an evangelist on the spot, now ministers there regularly on Sabbath afternoons to an audience, not large, but very earnest. Sabbath schools, classes, all sorts of work go on in the cheerful class-rooms belonging to the place; and one feels that an element of permanence has been gained.

The work in the hall of the Bouvelard Bonne Nouvelle struck me specially, from the circumstance that six years ago I had seen that hall opened in a part of Paris where its very presence was a

DEFIANCE TO THE GOD OF THIS WORLD.

"What! you can't open a meeting right on the Boulevards," said some. "Absurd!" The first night crowds of bewildered pleasure-seekers looked in, not knowing well what had brought them, or what new kind of entertainment they were to expect. Now there is an attentive general audience, and an inner circle of about 60, who meet for prayer and study, who help each other, and hold together. This little band is in connection with the Eglise Libre. Though for the time it has no regular pastor, the Rev. Samuel Anderson leads their prayer-meeting, in which men and women join freely, or tell what God has done for them.

The church hall in the Rue St. Denis is worked in connection with the Baptists. M. Saillens, its pastor, has long been a marked man. If he were in England, thousands would flock to hear him. In France, one is thankful if hundreds go, for although the work is a great work, it is not on a large scale as to numbers, and especially in these quarters, near the "Halles," or central markets of Paris; one wonders where the people come from at all. The hall would hold 600; a curtain drawn across left space for about 250, which was filled. This was on Sunday afternoon, and these were regular worshippers, many of them having touching histories, and having gone through

A DEEP CHANGE OF HEART.

In the evening the curtain was drawn back, and the hall was comfortably, though loosely, filled. This is one of several of the new large halls. The early halls of the Mission were all much smaller, and in less prominent situations.

Those opened on the great thoroughfares involve a very formidable rent, and a greater risk in case of failure. But on the other hand, they are open every evening in the week, while the others are open only once or twice, and to a smaller audience, so that their influence is much more powerful—more powerful in the sense of being more extensive, not deeper. In several of the poorest halls, in quarters almost unknown to the great world, there are little bands of working, praying people, whose power with God and with man who shall measure?

"More decided conversions!" "More steadfast Christian character," used to be our cry. Now God has answered in large measure. One is constantly hearing of generous actions performed by these poor people, which might put us to the blush—a very poor woman taking upon her to maintain one poorer still; a deserted child adopted; a wild and passionate girl taken in and borne with for Christ's sake; a holiday given up for the sake of a stranger who needs it more; bands of girls meeting to plead for their companions—such things are not rare. These things come into their hearts, and they do them simply, without thinking that they are making sacrifices, or asking what others do. And thus they are working out upon the mass of heathenism (for heathenism it is) around them, in many a place.

I should like to say a word about

THE MEDICAL MISSION.

The doctor is a young French practitioner. His heart is thoroughly in his work, and the people love and look up to him. "Doctor," said a man, "I have a pain here," laying his hand on his side, near his heart. The doctor examined and questioned him, to try to find out the seat of the disease. "Oh, no," he said, "I mean it is your words, and what I hear at the meetings that have given me the pain; it is here, I cannot get rid of it." Right glad was the doctor to deal with that pain. I went out with the doctor and Mrs. McAll one night to Issy, beyond the walls of Paris, one of the youngest and smallest of the stations. About 60 people crushed into a room that could hold no more, with bright faces of welcome met us. They were to have tea and biscuits that evening, I believe their first experience of that sort. Walking up the long street, Dr. McAll said to me, "Issy is a little township of from four to five hundred. It is supposed to be a strongly Catholic place, as many of the charities are held in the hands of religious orders. Yet since we opened a year ago, we have never met with the smallest difficulty. Round Paris, outside the gates, there is a ring of about forty of such townships, some much more populous than Issy, eight, ten, or twelve hundred. Yet in hardly any of these is there Gospel teaching, as there are no Protestant pastors. We ought to open a station in every one of these, but people will not see the need."

FOLKESTONE.—A correspondent who has recently seen something of the work of visitation and tract distribution engaged in by Mr. R. J. May, of Folkestone, writes to us expressing a high opinion of its value. Mr. May, who took up the work successfully carried on by the late Wm. Cooke (or "Cookie," as he was familiarly called), goes out into the streets and byeways every Sunday with his tracts, cards, and little books, sowing the good seed with a patient hand. The children are objects of his special care; for them he conducts a weekly service and a Band of Hope. Our correspondent states that Mr. May is in need of a fresh supply of literature. His address is 11, Saffron-place, Dover-street, Folkestone.

The Naval Manœuvres of 1890 have closed, and the ships have returned to their respective ports. What the result of all the evolutions may be we cannot tell, but it is blessed to be able to record amid preparations for war, and the clash of arms, a great work for the Prince of Peace.

Many were the prayers that went up from Christian seamen at the Sailors' Rest, that God would bless the mobilisation to the extension of his kingdom, and that on board every ship a band of men might be raised up to work for Christ. Their prayers have been abundantly answered, in connection with this work, every ship and gunboat, and almost all the torpedo boats, at Portsmouth, Devonport, Chatham, and Sheerness, were visited by myself, my lady helpers, or my ship visitors; cheerfully and brightly men came forward, saying that they would help their "Mother" to carry out her work on board, and the glorious result was that no ship or gunboat in the gigantic fleet which has been prowling round our coast, but had its band of praying men, doing the Master's work.

Meetings were held on board many of the ships, with the cordial consent of the commanding officers, and chaplains; to look upon the earnest faces of two or three hundred man-o'-war's men, with their Sankey hymn-books, singing the beautiful Gospel hymns, and listening earnestly to the words we were able to speak about Jesus and His love, wiping away starting tears, and telling us how they wished they were Christians, is in itself a sufficient answer to the atheistic article entitled, "Fooling Jack," which you alluded to in your last issue.

Another good answer lies in the fact that we had over 300 enrolled workers for Gospel temperance in this fleet alone. The men have been very active. Numbers of pledges have been taken, and many were led to Christ.

I was able to hold two Gospel meetings on Sunday, July 27, in the Bath Saloon, Torquay, while the fleet lay in Torbay. About 300 seamen and many hundreds of the public attended the meetings. The seamen stood up, one after the other, and testified to the reality of Christ and his salvation. One young fellow said, "I've served the devil well, and thought I was happy; but one hour as a Christian gives more joy than all the world's pleasures." Another told the large audience that "he had been led to steer by the Bible, and that his chart had guided him safe." The audience listened, spell-bound, some young officers present saying that "they had never heard the like before, and would walk twenty miles any day to hear such earnest words again." Here is another answer to the atheist, and perhaps the best that can be given.

Our building operations at Portsmouth are going forward, and we hope to have a large block of dormitories open before many months have passed. Our books record 105,000 sleeping during the year at Portsmouth and Devonport (25,000 more than any previous year). Week by week (almost day by day, glad tidings of the converson of brave fellows at home and abroad come in, so that we are not surprised at any abuse or scorn which may be heaped on us by enemies of Christ. The naval authorities assist me more than ever. I ask the prayers of your readers.—Yours in Christ's service,

Agnes E. Weston.

CONVALESCENT BLIND.—A lady desirous of commencing a small Convalescent Home for Blind, will be glad to hear of a house at a low rent for this purpose, in the south of England. Address, M. J. L., Princess House, Y.W.C.A., 108, Bromp ton-road, London, S.W.

Eastern Illustrations.

By GAWIN KIRKHAM.

IX.—FOLLOWING THE SHEPHERD.

In passing through Ramleh, on the way from Jaffa to Jerusalem, I noticed an Eastern shepherd leading his sheep. He went before them, and they followed him. I did not see one straying or lagging behind, nor was there a dog to urge them on. They were following their shepherd willingly and uncompelled. How naturally such a scene suggests John x. 4: "And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him, for they know his voice." Good Shepherd! thou Shepherd and Bishop of our souls, may we know thy voice, and render glad and ready obedience when we hear it. May we ever keep our eyes on Thee, and follow Thee so closely that our feet may never stray from thy paths.

X.—FORERUNNERS.

On the second day of my stay in Cairo, I witnessed a very pretty sight. A handsome carriage and pair dashed along, to the admiration of all beholders. But I was most intent on watching two Arab servants, who ran before the carriage to clear the way. They were prettily dressed, chiefly in white. Their dress was tucked up so that their progress should not be impeded, while in their hands they held aloft a thin staff. Occasionally they called aloud as they ran, so that all might hasten out of the way of their master. Here was a picture of John the Baptist, the Forerunner of his Master, Jesus Christ, preparing the way for Him, by calling men to repentance and faith (Matt. iii. 1-3). And here was also a picture of the open-air preacher at the end of the dispensation, preparing the way for the Lord's second coming, as John the Baptist prepared the way for his first coming.

XI.—MARRIAGE CUSTOMS.

To show how little the language of the East changes, I may mention the following. Miss Adams, the head of the Orphanage at Nazareth, related a conversation between two of the girls about a wedding, when one of them said, in reference to the procession of the bridegroom to the house of the bride, "I was not ready when the bridegroom came, so I did not see him." It is the custom of the bride to gather her friends to her house to await the arrival of the bridegroom. When he arrives there is a knock at the door, and the announcement made that he has come. At once the bride and her attendants file out, and only those who are prompt can join the procession, as the street rabble soon closes in behind. How important that the Christian should be ready, so that when his Lord cometh, he may open to Him immediately (Luke xii. 36).

XII.—A DEVOUT MOHAMMEDAN.

In taking a walk towards the bow of the Austrian Lloyd steamer Pandora, when crossing the Sea of Marmora, I was struck by the sight of a man on his knees. He was a Moslem, and had divested himself of his slippers and had spread his mat for his usual sunset devotions. As I watched him he rose to his feet, and seemed absorbed in deep thought. Then he bowed himself, and fell on his knees, prostrating himself till his forehead touched the deck, and remained in this attitude some time. He repeated this rising and bowing several times, and seemed utterly oblivious to all around him. He was not reminded of the hour of prayer by hearing the Muezzin (the usual Mohammedan call to prayer), but the force of habit drew him to his knees with the sunset hour. Such conduct puts Christians to shame, and should extort the passionate cry, "Draw me; we will run after Thee" (Song of Sol. i. 4); and lead to the earnest resolve, "Evening and morning and at noon will I pray, and cry aloud; and He shall hear my voice" (Psalm lv. 17).

Swiss Notes.

We have spent a delightful fortnight in the comfortable Hôtel et Pension Victoria, Glion sur Territet. It is nearly 2000 feet above Zermatt, and nearly 8000 above sea level. It is close to an ancient forest of stone pines, each of which has some distinctive character—graceful, or grotesque, or grand branches growing in all queer directions, and knotted roots grasping the rocks, teaching how faith can gain strength from difficulties. The mighty Matterhorn rises in front, its frowning crest soaring sublime from its gigantic base.

Other mountains of the chain look across at us; the Dent Blanche, the Gabelhorn, Rothhorn, and the crest of the Weisshorn, with the pinnacles of the Mischabel on the opposite side of the beautiful valley, which opens out to view at a distance of forty miles; the Oberland Mountains, including the Aletschhorn and the Jungfrau. Within an easy walk of two hours is the Gorner Grat, rightly celebrated as commanding perhaps the grandest view in Switzerland. Forming a vast circumference are Monte Rosa, the Lyskamm, the Twins, the Breithorn, Jeodule Glacier, Matterhorn, Dent Blanche, Rothnorn, Weisshorn, Blumlisalp, Jungfrau, Dom, Alphubel. The vast Gorner Glacier is immediately below, fed by a dozen other ice streams.

But your readers will rather know what religious advantages the visitors enjoy. There is a very pretty commodious English Church, chiefly erected by the zeal of Dean Lefroy, of Norwich, who is at present acting as chaplain. Courteous to all, a zealous, skilful, and cautious mountaineer, fitter than most professional guides, it is his pleasure to conduct his friends on ice excursions. I was one of a favoured party whom he led across the ice to the foot of Mount Rosa, where we lunched on the border of a small lake embedded in ice. Another day we had a picnic under a great rock overlooking the glacier. A terrible thunderstorm broke over us. The roar succeeded the flash again and again without interval. It seemed as if the electric battery was discharging itself against our rock. The Dean with promptitude gathered up all the ice axes of the party, and carried them through the pelting rain to a safe distance.

His guidance on the mountains illustrates his safe guidance in religious teaching. I have been greatly edified on three Sundays by his eloquent, evangelical, and practical sermons, specially suited to the select congregation of cultured people, including many climbing young men. His great aim was to show that the Gospel alone is the true religion of humanity, effecting by its grand truth of the cross, and the power of the Holy Ghost, what no other system has ever done. On one occasion he urged with power Christ's own text, "Believe the works;" and on another Elijah's appeal—"The God that answereth by fire let Him be God;" showing that the moral miracles of Christ on all classes of mankind, and the power of the Spirit in giving light and purity as by fire, were demonstrations of the truth and power of the Gospel, and the best reply to the prevalent infidelity. There was prayer, a sermon morning and evening, and afterwards a song service for hymn singing. The prayers and lessons were read with sympathy and devotion. Many Nonconformists were present and attended the Holy Communion. Numerous clergy of all churches were delighted hearers of the Word.

It is sad to think how many people able to travel in luxury, and spending on an average at least twenty shillings daily, should grudge their share of providing for the religious privileges provided for them. The collections were for the Church of England Colonial Mission, and the Dean stated with surprise that many of the coins at the offertory were five centime pieces, value one halfpenny. There was also a daily meeting for Scripture reading and prayer, held immediately after dinner in a private room; in which Churchmen and Nonconformists, English and Americans took part; among others, Rev. F. B. Meyer, who left for Chamounix to take part in the Conference there. On the table of the Salon I was glad to see copies of The Christian and a number of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons.

Before I conclude I must mention an incident which the Dean related to me. He often goes on the ice alone. One day last week he was on the Findelen Glacier. Among other boulder rocks on the face of the ice, he selected one as a resting place and lay down on it, sleeping for half an hour. He then rambled about among the ice cliffs for about an hour and returned to his resting place. But the rock was gone. He traced it by the path it tore to a new position twenty yards below. Had it moved when he was sleeping it is not likely he would have been awake in this world to tell the tale. The promise was practically illustrated—"He shall give his angels charge concerning thee, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone." Newman Hall.

August 21.

THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

The monthly meeting on Wednesday, last week, at the Home of Industry, was a small but happy gathering of Christian workers. Miss Lang, of the China Inland Mission (sailing for China on Sept. 4), spoke for a short time, telling of the joy it was to her to have been called of the Lord to such privileged service. Her very forcible remarks were based upon Luke v. 4: "Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught."

Miss Pook, who hopes to sail for China on September 18, for the first six months of the present year was a worker at the Home of Industry, where she gained much helpful experience. She told of the Lord's leading to the foreign field. The special texts which were instrumental in laying the desire upon her heart were "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver," and "God is able to make all grace abound towards you, that ye always, having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work." A few members of the Y.W.C.A. (herself among the number) joined together in prayer that one of their number might be led to go forth to the foreign field, and she was present on this occasion as the answer to those prayers. The Lord had not sent her out at once, but the years of waiting had been a time of preparation. Miss Pook cherishes very grateful remembrance of the kind help and loving sympathy received from Miss Macpherson and her band of workers.

Mr. Charles Inglis followed with an address from Luke ix.: "Seven points of weakness in the disciples." All the failures of God's people in the Bible are recorded, that we may see where they failed, and seek grace and strength to avoid like failure:—Self-boasting — what they had done (10); want of sympathy (12); want of watchfulness (32); want of faith (40, 41); want of humility (46); want of large-heartedness (49); want of patience (51-55).

St. Augustine's Creed has been a help to many in their work:—"A whole Christ for my salvation; a whole Bible for my staff; a whole Church for my fellowship; a whole world for my parish."

NURSES' MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—A committee of ladies interested in colonial and foreign mission work has been formed for the purpose of raising a fund, by means of shilling subscriptions, to send out hospital trained nurses to minister to the needs of our uncared-for sisters in distant lands. In some countries the medical mission is the sole means of overcoming the local prejudice against Europeans, particularly in Persia. The hon. secretary, Miss D. M. Image, 53, Gloucester-road, London, W., will gladly give fuller information to those willing to co-operate in this truly womanly work.

For the Young.

THE CHURCH ON THE SANDS.

We give extracts from reports of meetings held at various watering-places by workers of the Children's Special Service Mission:—

Blackpool, August 18 (Mr. J. Spiers and Mr. Westall).—Mr. Spiers began the mission here on the 13th, with a gathering of about 700, many old friends turning up. On Thursday night a tempest raged, which continued all Friday, making it impossible to have an afternoon meeting; but on Saturday, though the wind was still high, there was a good gathering, 1000 hymn sheets being distributed. A fine church of four rows of seats that was constructed on Saturday evening was wholly demolished by the very high tide, so that the beautiful and attentive gathering on Sunday afternoon was not so comfortable without any seats.

Bridlington, August 18 (Mr. H. Hutchinson).—All through last week we had large gatherings on the beach, and were only obliged by the rain one day to have our morning meeting in the Institute, where we had a crowded gathering. Our morning prayer-meetings have been most hallowed seasons of spiritual refreshment, and our evening meetings in the Sailors' Institute have largely grown in numbers, and much blessing has been experienced. We have been so pleased to have Mr. Pewtress with us for a week, and he has been a real help. Mr. Wilson will (D.V.) remain with us all this week; he has rendered most invaluable service. Rev. Stanley Morse, B.A., and Mr. Gunther will remain the month out. We are a very happy, united band, and the Lord is giving us many tokens of his favour. At our open-air service last evening, we could not have had less than four or five thousand within reach of the preached word, and the deepest possible attention.

Penmaenmawr (Messrs. Howard Staines, B.A., and Sidney R. Webb, M.B.).—We have to record our thankfulness to God for the propitious weather; only one outdoor meeting was interfered with by the rain. There has been a very earnest tone in the meetings, and we have heard of several decisions for Christ. The work among the boys has been very marked, and, although we have not had large boys' meetings (about twenty being present), they have been very much blessed. The morning prayer-meetings have been well attended, and the addresses given by various ministers and laymen have been helpful in the highest degree.

Rhyl (Mr. T. L. Sayer).—The lantern service on Wednesday evening was most successful. After the children's meeting, a procession was formed of children and adults, who marched up from the West to the East Parade, headed by the banner; opposite the East Parade a halt was made, and, after singing several hymns and some earnest words from Mr. Sayer, the crowd dispersed. On Friday afternoon a meeting for boys only was held in a room at Craig-y-don, at which forty boys were present, though it was a beautifully bright afternoon. Several text-searching and question competitions have been enthusiastically taken up by the children, answers to the question, "What is a Christian?" being especially good.

Ilfracombe (Mr. W. R. Moore and others).—The mission commenced Friday, August 1. From the Saturday until Wednesday Dr. Carless helped, and gave several of the addresses on the beach and in the Town Hall; with his wonted energy he proclaimed the old, old story, yet ever new, with love and much power. On Sundays we have had spendid meetings, at which Mr. George Williams, Dr. Pring, and others have taken part. Tuesday nights we hold our lantern service, to which large numbers of visitors and others are attracted; this opportunity is used to put plainly before those standing around the needs of salvation, and they are lovingly exhorted to decide for Christ.

Littlehampton, August 16 (Mr. Livesey Carrott).—The first service was held on August 3, when we had an attendance of between 400 and 500, a very large majority children. On the week days as many as 200 and 300 have been present, and in some cases there have been unmistakable signs of conversion to God. There are many here who have been in previous years, who say the numbers are much larger than formerly. Although there are difficulties, yet these are insignificant to the blessings which we have had.

Great Yarmouth, August 15 (Mr. S. J. Hewlett and others).—On Sunday last a flower service was held in St. George's Church, at which there was a large attendance, the flowers being taken to the local hospital at the close of the service; Mr. Hewlett's message was the means of blessing. The work here amongst the boys has been specially interesting, and we believe there are several who are seeking to follow the Lord Jesus.

Scarborough (Rev. C. H. Nash, B.A., and others).—The work is going on grandly. The numbers have greatly improved at all the meetings, including the prayer-meeting. Capital boys' meetings also. There have been good times of sowing, and of reaping, too, we trust; but are looking for greater things soon. A first-rate band of lady workers has been organised, and the result is a girls' meeting and a maids' meeting every week. Games for the girls have also been started.

Llandudno (Mr. E. Arrowsmith and others).—We had a wonderful service in the Happy Valley, on Sunday, the weather being superb. Over 4000 hymn sheets were given away, and £50 collected for the Mission. Sixty-six came to the boys' meeting in the evening, and there was an excellent attendance at the address to parents afterwards. The Bible object-lesson yesterday went off capitally; nearly 400 children present, and 125 objects were shown, some of them evincing much originality. We held it on the beach, and a large crowd collected. There is good work being done at Pensarn and Colwyn Bay.

Eastbourne (Mr. A. G. Dodderidge and others).—Good services in St. Paul's last Sunday, and grand meeting for "grown ups" on the beach in the evening. We are getting well hold of the boys; cricket is immensely appreciated. It is wonderful how the Lord has graciously raised up friends all round.

CHILDREN'S SEASIDE SERVICES.

Arrangements now in force in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission:—Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Llandudno, to Sept. 14; holding services also at Colwyn Bay (Rev. H. S. Hume, M.A., in charge), Llanfairfechan and Pensarn. Mr. George Banaster, Tynemouth. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Bridlington, to Sept. 6. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes, Whitby, to Sept. 4. Rev. C. H. Nash, B.A., Mr. R. L. Barclay, B.A., and others, Scarborough, to Sept. 8. Mr. Josiah Spiers and Mr. R. Westall, South Shore, Blackpool, to Sept. 10. Mr. J. H. Greene, Saltburn. Messrs. S. J. Hewlett, G. Goodman, and Maggs, Yarmouth. Dr. F. Churchill and Mr. Ernest Lampen, Southwold. Revs. S. L. Dixon, H. J. Watney, and Cecil J. King, Messrs. H. Hankinson, A. G. Dodderidge, F. F. Key, and others, Eastbourne. Mr. J. Reginald Naylor, Rev. H. J. Gibbs, and Mr. L. T. R. Hutchinson, Bournemouth. Mr. H. L. C. de Candole, B.A., and Mr. Sidney Warren, B.A., Southsea. Rev. W. T. Storrs, M.A., B.D., and others, Sandown, Isle of Wight. Mr. James S. Tyler, Worthing, to Sept. 6. Mr. Livesey Carrott, Littlehampton. Mr. Louis Parkinson, Deal. Rev. Walter Senior, M.A., and Captain Winn, Margate. Messrs. E. and C. H. Collier, Herne Bay. Rev. Alfred Waller, Southend. Mr. W. R. Moore, B.A., Ilfracombe. Mr. J. Crofton Rainey, Paignton. Mr. H. G. Harris, B.A., Weston-super-Mare. Captain Bruce Moorhouse, Rhyl. Mr. Reginald Callender, B.A., Weymouth. Mr. G. H. Chaplin, Clacton-on-Sea. Rev. E. A. Stuart, M.A., Kirn (by Greenock). Mr. E. J. Wareham. Clevedon. Mr. Ernest E. H. Reed, St. Leonards. Mr. J. Attenborough, Seaford. Mr. Horace Petter, Seascale. Mr. C. E. Faithfull, West Brighton.

Mr. Newton Jones, the Sunday School Union evangelist, has been holding services since July 1 at Yarmouth, Lowestoft, and Redcar respectively. Large numbers have attended the Cathedral sand services, and many have testified to blessing received at the meetings. Special indoor services were held at the close of each visit, to enable the workers to draw in the net, and with encouraging results.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Aug. 31, John ix. 30—41; Mon., Sept. 1, John x. 1—18; Tues., Sept. 2, John x. 19—30; Wed., Sept. 3, John x. 31—42; Thurs., Sept. 4, John xi. 1—16; Fri., Sept. 5, John xi. 17—31; Sat., Sept. 6, John xi. 32—46.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—Meetings under the auspices of this Mission, for the children of visitors, were conducted twice daily, during last week, at St. Leonards-on-Sea, by Mr. Ernest Reed, late of Weston-super-Mare, and the Misses Thorpe, assisted by several ladies. It is intended to continue the meetings for the next fortnight or so.

"I GROW."

What do you do in the ground, little seed,
Under the rain and the snow,
Hidden away from the bright blue sky,
And lost to the madcap sparrow's eye?
"Why, do you not know?
I grow."

What do you do in the nest, little bird,
When the bough swings to and fro?
How do you pass the time away
From dawn to dusk of the summer day?
"What! do you not know?
I grow."

What do you do in the pond little fish,
With scales that glisten so?
In and out of the water grass,
Never at rest, I see you pass.
"Why, do you not know?
I grow."

What do you do in the cradle, my boy,
With chubby cheeks all aglow?
What do you do when your toys are put Away, and your wise little eyes are shut?
"Ho! do you not know?
I grow."

Always growing! by night or day
No idle moments we know;
Whether at work or cheerful play,
Let us all be able to say:—
"In the goodness of God,
We grow!"

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.—From the report for the year ending March last, we learn that this Mission has received many marked tokens of the Master's blessing. Upwards of 5,000 men attended the services, and in many instances the Gospel proved to be the power of God unto salvation. Some twenty profess to have found pardon and peace, and several of that number have been received into the Church by baptism. The Gospel addresses on Saturday afternoons are always well attended, and a spirit of real earnestness pervades the meetings. The night school, at which foreign Jews are instructed in English, is a very useful agency; moreover, it has been blessed to the spiritual enlightenment of some who have attended. Mrs. Lipshytz, wife of the missionary, conducts a meeting of Jewish women, and engages in other efforts to win them for Christ. We regret to observe that the balance-sheet shows an amount due to the treasurer. The missionary is Mr. C. T. Lipschytz, Barbican House, 11, Stavordale-road, Highbury, London, N.

Mr. HENRY COOK'S GOSPEL SHIPS.

It is nearly four months since we left England for work at Havre, and through the various locks and stations in the canals of France, and up the Seine. We have recognised the Lord's hand in guiding us. Thousands were drawn together on board to hear the Gospel; some heard with great joy and believed the Word; many were refreshed, and blessed God that ever the Herald of Mercy reached Paris.

All the way up and down the river we scattered portions of the Word of God, Gospel books, &c. Our last meeting at the Pont de la Concorde, Paris, was with Dr. and Mrs. McCall. After leaving Paris, our first stoppage was at Suresnes. Here we were welcomed by Rev. Mr. Gibson's wife, family, and their Christian helpers, who worked happily to get in the people. The vessel remained there five days, and at evening meetings the Gospel was faithfully preached. Passing down the river, we mourned that we could leave no dear man or woman of God to live and labour among the people. As they came out in little crowds assembling at the locks, we just sang a hymn and preached the Word, and gave away Testaments and Gospel books. There was delight on their countenances when we told them we hoped next year to pass by again, and, further, that if the Lord should give us a larger vessel with an auxiliary screw, we might visit them often.

From Havre we sailed to Fécamp, where a mob of young men came down to annoy and insult us; nevertheless we have had large meetings on board. One sighs for the poor people with no one to teach them in love. Shall France, whose doors are open for us everywhere, be left out of the hearts of the Lord's people in England? Simply because they once had the light are they never to have it again?

The old Mission schooner, the Mystery, while on her way to Waterford, in Ireland, was so severely strained in a late gale as to require extensive repairs. As she is too small to justify an expenditure of £300, we have been compelled to sell her for what we could get, £82; this, with £30 so far collected, will go towards a new ship, which we sadly need before the next spring. Fully £3,000 will be required for a screw vessel to cover about six knots. This is not a large sum for such a glorious work.

Some 10,000 little bags are needed for the home work this autumn, also tracts and books to put into them; and cuffs, comforters, Bibles, &c.

H. Cook.

Stoke-road, Gosport.

Mr. Monro Collings, describing the work of the Mystery in Ireland, writes:—

"The first port we visited was Dunmore, a small watering-place. Here we met with a right hearty welcome from the Vicar, Rev. P. Gilmour, and the Christian friends. After two weeks of service, not without tokens of blessing, we proceeded up the river to Waterford, which was reached on Thursday, August 1. Our opening services passed off quietly, but on Monday evening a crowd gathered on the quay ready for any mischief, purposing to do all they could to stop our meetings, and as, they expressed it, 'send the ship and the black devil (myself) out of Waterford.' As the people left the vessel after the service, they were pushed, hustled, and hooted at, but this served us as a good advertisement; and the following evening, long before the time to begin, the vessel was packed with people eager to hear the Word of Life.

"Oftentimes we found it hard to speak because of the deafening noise the men and boys were making on the quay, but ultimately a strong force of police arrived, and kept them in check. It was not difficult to sustain the interest after it was once aroused, and nightly we had the cabin well filled. The results must be left with God, but this we can say:—One Sunday evening after I had been preaching on the subject 'A Dead Man's Story,' fifteen persons lifted the hand as a sign that they accepted the salvation so freely offered them."

STREET ARABS UNDER CANVAS.

The event of the year in our Ragged School experiences twenty years ago was "the treat," when, singing and cheering all the way, the youngsters were conveyed in trollies, coal-waggons, &c., to a field three or four miles off to amuse themselves while their teachers toiled for their comfort and pleasure. From this was evolved "the day in the country," with its journey of ten or twenty miles by rail to some picturesque school-resort, where refreshment contractors cater with the ease begotten by daily experience, its glimpse of nature's beauties, and whirl back to the dingy city late at night. The latest development is the "stay in the country" at holiday homes, rural cottages, seaside camps, &c., a plan inaugurated, I believe, across the Atlantic by The New York Tribune, which enlisted the sympathies of its readers in this kindly enterprise.

The boys in our London Homes have just returned from a three weeks' sojourn under canvas, at Holtye Common—a well-drained, breezy tableland, on a ridge of hills between Tunbridge Wells and East Grinstead, with a wide sweep of views in Kent, Surrey, and Sussex. We had purposed camping by the sea, but happy traditions of two previous encampments at Holtye turned the scale in favour of the old site, which perhaps could scarcely be surpassed for our object. It is some miles away from any town; out of the track of beanfeasts, &c., with their hideous addenda; with cricket facilities on the common, abundant scope for rambles, several ponds for fishing; and last, but not least, a kindly-disposed country folk, with a pleasant smile and an encouraging word for the boys, and a ready spirit of hearing for "the joyful sound."

We had a large marquee, in which the boys slept on a deep bedding of bright wheat-straw, another in which they took their meals, another in which stores were kept and meals prepared, eight army bell-tents for the masters, a few cripples, &c., and visitors; a small head-quarters tent, and a large circular one for family prayers, morning and evening, and evangelistic services on the Lord's Days. Each boy was provided with a military knapsack, which contained a change of clothing and served for a pillow at night, and a brown blanket. The cooking was managed in two large portable coppers, except the baking, which was done for us near by.

With the exception of two or three unsettled days, we had favourable weather throughout, and no illness or accident worth noting, but a miraculous escape of one lad from what seemed certain death through the falling of a large tent-pole with heavy iron gear on his head. We had 140 to 160 under our charge, many of them rescued from the streets only a few weeks or months; but we had not a single complaint against any one of them during our three weeks' stay in the neighbourhood, save a grumble from one caretaker, to which I attached no importance. Unfettered by ordinary discipline and duty, idiosyncrasies of character came out, and gave us a valuable insight into the temperaments of many. Two features, very distinctive of street arabs, were very clearly recognisable, namely, extreme kindness to the very young or very weak, and pitifulness for all dumb animals, even to the extent of climbing a tree at the risk of one's neck to put back an old deserted nest blown down by the gale, in the delusive hope that it would console some evicted mother-bird to find her home replaced; or of going about with a field mouse under one's clothing as a warm shelter when its nest had been devastated by the mowers in the hayfield.

The physical advantages of this change of air—growth, development, appetite, buoyancy, tone, all the elements of health—were astonishing; and though the skin may soon lose its wind-swept, sun-bathed bronze, the frame and system of many a poor boy will retain the benefit for years to come, and be strengthened by it to successfully battle against the incipient encroachments of disease, either inherited or induced by the pestilential influences of slum-life.

Our generous friend Mr. Oswald A. Smith, whose charming estate (Hammerwood) adjoined our camp, by the hospitable invitation to spend an afternoon in his grounds, gave the boys a peep of an English country gentleman's home that will be photographed on their memories for life; intensified, shall I say, by the gift of a bright, brand-new Jubilee shilling to each. Then another friend, Mr. Huntington Stone, brought two detachments of working youths to spend Saturday to Monday in camp with us, and was heartily welcomed as a true boys' friend.

On Sunday evenings 400 or 500 country folk gathered, some from five or six miles off, and filled the tent and stood all around it, while for about two hours the wonders of Calvary and eternity were displayed in the ever-new redemption story. Those dear, simple folks with their wistful faces—the clouds of concern gathering on them, or the waves of hope and joy rippling over them—shall we not meet them before the Throne when praying and preaching, trusting and hoping, are swallowed up in the joy of harvest home?

Already we are preparing for another winter's campaign (our twenty-first), and earnestly beg the prayerful remembrance of all fellow-saints, that strength of body and heavenly wisdom may be granted us, and that no good thing may be lacking for the welfare and comfort of the dear boys saved from utter homelessness, or from vicious infidel influences, and committed in the providence of God as a solemn trust to our care. TENT WORK AT SOUTHGATE.

Rev. C. Wickerson, who is pastor of a congregation at Southgate village, has been making special efforts during the summer months to counteract the infidel propaganda, which, by means of the press and by open-air and other meetings, takes place in this attractive northern suburb. He has been specially desirous of rescuing the children from such baneful influences. Thus, a tent, lent for the occasion by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, has been erected in the grounds of a friend at Chase-road, who shows deep interest in the work, while the preachers have been evangelists from the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

The meetings are thought to have been the largest and most successful open-air services ever held in Old Southgate; and they are still being continued on Sunday evenings after the regular service in the chapel, which is in consequence curtailed by about half an hour. Large supplies of Christian literature have been given to children to take home. A converted working man has awakened great interest among those of his own order. The endeavour now is to replace the inconvenient iron building at Old Southgate by a brick building suitable for the extending work.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS FOR INDIA.

In response to urgent appeals from India, where of late years Sunday-schools upon the English and American principle have been successfully established amongst native children, Rev. Dr. Phillips, an experienced missionary well acquainted with the country and its peoples, and widely known and sincerely esteemed among his colleagues in the mission field, has been appointed by a special committee of the Sunday-school Union, of which Lord Kinnaird is chairman, as organising secretary or Sunday-school missionary for India. His duty will be to awaken interest in the movement amongst European and native Christians — to organise unions, and arrange for conventions of teachers and delegates, and to establish a Sunday-school literature for both teachers and scholars. He will work generally under the direction of the Indian Sunday-school Union, whose head quarters are at Calcutta. Before leaving England, Dr. Phillips will address meetings in both London and the provinces in explanation of the movement.

The young members of the International Bible Reading Association (a body some 300,000 strong) have by a halfpenny subscription already raised about £500 towards the first year's expenses. But as the work developes, very large sums will be required, and any Christian friends who discern "the great door and effectual," opened by this movement, may send help to the treasurer of the Indian Sunday-school Mission Fund, 56, Old Bailey, E.C.

The Late JOHN PATTERSON. J.P.,

Christian Merchant, Liverpool.

LIVERPOOL has recently lost one of its most honoured citizens in the person of Mr. John Patterson, whose robust Christianity has done much to mould the character of those with whom he came in contact.

Mr. Patterson had a godly ancestry. The blood of the defenders of Londonderry, in 1688, ran in his veins, and from an early age he was noted for his intelligent and earnest piety. He was born in Letterkenny, county Donegal, in May, 1822; and being a Christian of great faith, his mother took hold of God's covenant for both her sons; she never laid them to sleep without praying with and for them, and although early removed, her memory was ever fragrant to her boys, and her prayers for them were abundantly answered. His father lived to a good old age, much respected by all who knew him, and an elder of the church he loved so well.

John's first experience of business life was gained in his father's banking establishment, and afterwards he entered the office of his uncle, Mr. John Munn, then one of the principal merchants in Londonderry, and whose daughter Martha he married in 1853; by her he had six sons (four of whom survive) and two daughters. He was connected with the Covenanting or Reformed Presbyterian Church, and took a warm interest in Christian work. He was always a regular attendant at the prayer meetings, and both by teaching and life was a help and example to young men.

In 1851 Mr. Patterson came to Liverpool, and shortly afterwards joined the English Presbyterian Church in Canning-street, with which he continued attached up to the end. He was deeply interested in Sunday-school work, and from 1857 to 1863 acted as superintendent of the schools. During this time he prepared a special series of lessons, divided into grades, according to the varied capacity of the scholars. The teaching of sacred geography was also made prominent. He worked actively in connection with the Hyslop-street Mission, and was instrumental in the founding of the Vauxhall-road Presbyterian Church, which grew from a small gathering in Hackins Hey till it became a regular congregation in 1867. Mr. Patterson evinced a warm interest in the ministry of Mr. W. P. Lockhart, and frequently supported him on the platform at Hope Hall before the Toxteth Tabernacle was built. In other religious movements he also took a prominent part, especially in the visits of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. All evangelistic efforts, such as the Town Mission, had his full and hearty assistance, and he always helped forward missionary work at home and abroad. He valued very highly the Noon-day Prayer-meeting, which he frequently attended. When he presided at such meetings he invariably read the Scriptures three times—at the commencement, middle, and close of the allotted hour, so that everyone who turned into the meeting, at any stage, might hear the Word of God.

During the summer Mr. Patterson generally spent a month or six weeks at Llandudno, where he engaged in Christian work, taking part in open-air services, and supporting the Children's Special Service Mission. As regards his business career, he was an ornament to the commercial community. In the year 1852 he settled down to the business of a corn merchant, which he conducted himself until 1855, when the firm became known as Patterson Brothers & Co., and so remained until it was dissolved in 1884. Mr. Patterson then continued the business with his two eldest sons as John Patterson & Sons, until he finally retired in June last year. At one time he occupied the important position of President of the Chamber of Commerce, during which he took a prominent part in the various commercial controversies of the time. The clearness with which he propounded his convictions on all matters, secured from his fellow-members a careful hearing and consideration. He was regarded as a man of sound judgment and enlightened views in nearly every department of mercantile life. He advocated reform in railway administration, and amendment of the old bankruptcy laws. He was strongly in favour of a uniformly charged ocean mail, and of a penny postage between the Queen's dominions all over the world. The Parcel Post was another of his suggestions.

His business brought him into contact with many American gentlemen in Liverpool, and from time to time he paid visits to the United States. During the Civil War he strongly sympathised with the Northern States, and some time subsequently addressed meetings in several cities in America with a view to prove that in England the North had a great many more friends than was supposed. While on the other side of the Atlantic he had opportunities of seeing some of the dread consequences of battlefields, and he gladly assisted the Associated Christian Commission for the relief of the wounded. Of this society his friend Mr. George H. Stuart was president, and his brother, Rev. Robert Patterson, D.D., of San Francisco, one of the agents at the front. Mr. Patterson was on terms of friendship with President Lincoln, Mr. Charles Sumner, Mr. Secretary Seward, as well as with other members of the United States Cabinet of the time.

Though essentially a man of business, Mr. Patterson had an almost unlimited versatility of investigation, and a marvellous command of facts and statistics on nearly every civic, commercial, economic, and political interest. He was nearly always considerably ahead of the sentiment around him. He was potent with the pen, and his contributions to the Press had a great effect in elucidating questions of the day. A typical Ulsterman, with a strong individuality which impressed itself upon the many acts of his life, Mr. Patterson as a platform speaker occupied a high place.

He never contested a seat either in the City Council or for Parliament, although repeatedly invited to do so. His only reason for accepting the position of a magistrate was that he hoped thereby to help forward the temperance cause. On being raised to the Bench in 1871, he began a systematic study of the licensing laws with a view to a thorough understanding of the drink traffic in its political aspect, that he might be able to show others how to bring about by legislation a diminution of the drinking facilities of the country in a fair and just manner. This sense of fairness was one that characterised him in every movement. He was himself a teetotaler, and would not allow wine or strong drink to appear on his liberal table. A magistrate who dared to stand alone, a social reformer of high order, and one who lived and walked in the fear of God from day to day, Mr. Patterson's memory will long be green in the hearts of those who now mourn his loss.

The editor of The Liverpool Daily Post, who differed from Mr. Patterson in recent politics, in concluding a leading article on his life, says :—

He was a good and true man, fearless, uncompromising, an example of unstinted devotion to the public welfare. Possessed of rare faculties, and having cultivated them throughout a long and intensely occupied life, with a pre-eminent gift of acquiring information and of storing it as ammunition, Mr. Patterson was in action one of the most useful, in example one of the most invigorating, in temper one of the most lovable, and in combat one of the most powerful, men ever produced by our public life.

His friend and pastor, Rev. S. R. Macphail, in speaking at his funeral said :—

He was first of all a man of God, and he was last of all a man of God, and he never forgot that he was a man of God...Did he dare draw aside the domestic curtain, or even that of private intimacy and friendship, he would disclose a tenderness, a simplicity, a beauty of grace in every relation of life which many could scarce believe possible. Where the world might expect sternness to predominate, it was utterly unknown; where many might expect discussion of public questions and local excitements, there was none of this; the sanctity of home was kept for far different fellowship and intercourse. They might not enter, but they knew his was an ear that would hear no evil, a tongue that would engage in no conversation, and a will that would yield to no influence, detrimental to anyone. But there was a heart open to every story of sorrow, or of temptation, or of distress; a hand ready to be stretched out to aid where aid was not the indolent relief of personal feeling; and a mind occupied in devising how, unknown and unobserved, it could forestall the wants, or even the desires or pleasures, of others.

No one who had heard Mr. Patterson speak to the heavenly Father in prayer could for a moment question whence he got his strength. There was a child tenderly, lovingly, restfully speaking into an ear he knew to be open to him, and asking with a simplicity which only a child fellowship could give for things which he desired. If the pathos of tenderness and simple beauty of his words before God could be exceeded, he (the speaker) had never heard it done in prayer, nor had he known anyone to go more directly before God for the very thing most truly desirable. And what he was in prayer, he was in his attachment to his Bible and its teachings. From that Book he drew his opinions, from it he learned not only his theology, but no less his civic, philanthropic, and political principles; and men all over England and America well knew that there was no sacrifice of comfort, good name, time, resources, or long fellowship in co-operation, but he at once made, when he felt that the honour of his God, and his truth, required the sacrifice. He was not only merely a Covenanter by descent and claim, but personally and practically a noble survival of that strong-boned, and no less strong-souled, race of men who never forgot that there were two kingdoms on earth, and that the King of Heaven has supreme dominion in all things and over all men.

Speaking to a friend about a fortnight before his removal, Mr. Patterson remarked that he had suffered much in the last twelve months, but he added: "I have had strength given me to bear all my sufferings, and whatever is before me, I know I have the same Saviour now that I had forty years since, when I worshipped with the Covenanters in the little church in the North of Ireland. From that He led me to Liverpool, where He has blessed me with all that is good, and I know He will continue His goodness to the end." His friend replying said, "Then you think He is able to do so?" With much feeling Mr. Patterson answered, "His covenant is sure and steadfast. Don't you believe that?" During his last illness he never murmured. He said to one who was waiting on him that his Master would either cure him or call him in his own good time, and he saw no use in complaining. He found Him the same Christ now as when he had served and worshipped Him as a young man. The call came suddenly on July 12, but it found him ready to depart and be with Christ.

The Lord increase the number of such doughty champions of truth, purity, and righteousness!

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION.

Mr. Gawin Kirkham, the secretary, marshalled a force of some 200 preachers, members of this Association, on Wednesday afternoon, last week and proceeded from Liverpool-street to Broxbourne, the rendezvous being High Leigh, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Barclay. The party appeared much to enjoy the privilege of exploring the beautiful grounds in which the mansion is situated. A sumptuous tea was served al fresco on the grass, a short distance from the mansion, and Mr. Barclay accorded his guests a most cordial welcome, remarking that their time for coming was well chosen, for the harvest, then in course of being ingathered, might serve to remind them of the harvest attending their own work, and which he believed would be much greater than many expected.

The programme included an outdoor address after tea by Rev. James Neil, author of "Palestine Explored," the object being not only to give open-air preachers some acceptable advice, but to show them whence illustrations might be drawn.

After singing and prayer, Mr. Kirkham made some allusions to the health of the founder of the Society, Mr. John Macgregor (Rob Roy), to which all listened with sympathy and sadness. Mr. Macgregor was the founder of the association, and during thirty-eight years he had devoted time and energy to the service. Mr. Kirkham went on to show that the veteran Rob Roy had set an example of what an open-air preacher ought to be. There was hardly a quarter of London in which he had not himself preached the Gospel in the streets, and he had taken with him young lawyers to teach them to preach also. In consequence of his health breaking down, Mr. Macgregor ceases to be honorary secretary of the Society, but he will still hold the office of president.

"MY SHEEP HEAR MY VOICE."

"When He had spoken unto me, I was strengthened."
Daniel x. 19.

The way was rough and long, it seemed as though
My overburdened frame must sink;
This was the path He marked for me to go,
And this the cross to carry. Dare I think
Of questioning my blessed Master's will?
Then, while I stood and mused, a voice
Of wondrous power, and yet so small and still,
Breathed in my ear, "Fear not my choice,
Lean thou on Me."

And as I leaned, my nerveless limbs grew strong;
And while I leaned my cross was light;
The goodness of the Lord was all my song,
The very shadows now seemed bright.
And when with over-careful step I fain
Would pick my way among the stones,
Or back at dangers past would gaze again,
My Lord would say in whispered tones:
"Look thou on Me."

Often, alas! my restless thoughts would fly
Beyond the journey of the day,
With anxious fears to call forth many a sigh,
With hopes so soon to melt away.
And then my Lord would ask me, "What hast thou
To do with what the future brings?
Thou hast enough of joys and dangers now;
To-day is thine, to-morrow's things
Leave thou with Me."

My sins, O blessed Lord, lay hold of me,
No other ever wronged Thee so;
My very penitence is never free
From earthliness and self, I know;
My doubts dishonour Thee, my hopes so weak
Rise upward, but at once to fall.
"Listen, O trembling one," my Lord would speak,
"Thy sins, repentance, doubts and all,
Lay thou on Me."

There is a peace, a strengthful joy I need,
Which does not yet belong to me;
'Tis promised in thy blessed Word, I read
Of saints from every doubt set free;
O Lord, supply my weakly soul with this,
Give peace to fill and satisfy.
The answer came: "Thou'lt find eternal bliss
In Me, a blessed full supply:
Live thou on Me."

In sickness 'twas at first so hard to lie
Submissive to the Master's will,
To feel that He did well to lay me by,
That I was just as useful ill;
But when the blessed Lord had made my bed,
His sympathy my murmuring stilled,
"I shed my precious blood for thee," He said,
"Thy cup of pain from mine was filled:
Lie thou by Me."

I am so wilful, make my will Thine own;
I am so proud, Lord humble me;
I'm but a child, oh, leave me not alone;
Be Thou mine eyes, I cannot see.
Blest at thy feet to find the learner's place,
Thrice blest to have Thee choose my way,
In joys, in trials, ever give me grace
O Lord, thy bidding to obey—
"Learn thou of Me."

MISSION WORK IN BLANDFORD.

Dear Sir,—I desire to bring before your readers our work here among the labouring class. We hold Gospel services on Sunday afternoon and evening, our average attendance being about 260, all of this class. We also hold week-evening services which are well attended. During the past three years the work has been much blessed by God, and we have seen many genuine cases of reformation.

At the back of our mission-hall we have a Travellers' Rest, where tramps are provided with good beds and home comforts at 4d. per night. A few cases of "remarkable conversion" have been witnessed, and many have been helped to a fresh start in life.

In the winter many of the very poor have a substantial meal of soup and bread for one penny. We also have a night school in the winter months for poor boys of the town; good readable books would be much appreciated by them. We hold open-air services three times a week, and visit the poor at their homes.

I should be glad if your readers will help by sending books, tracts, papers, &c.—Yours faithfully,

Joseph Beck, Evangelist.

Salvation Army in India.

Where to begin and what to leave out is the chief puzzle as I sit gazing at a slip of paper on which I have been scribbling our latest facts and figures, meditating how I can most successfully crush and compress my materials into the minutest possible space.

Look at these three sheets of statistics, each sheet measuring about 24 by 18 inches, and each containing exactly 41 columns of figures. This is our monthly return for June, and contains a complete list of all our 88 stations and 47 outposts, and gives us 41 pieces of information recording the work done in each.

Look at this column for instance. It shows the exact number of open-airs held each week in June, namely 425. There being four weeks reported on in the month (sometimes there are five), this gives exactly 1700 open-airs held during the month. There were 8037 people (almost without exception heathen) counted at our largest open-airs in one night. On an average there would be not less than 7000 each night. This would mean 42,000 each week, and 168,000 for the month.

Four hundred and fifty indoor meetings were held each week, making 1800 for the month, the attendance being 40,000 for the week, and 160,000 for the month. More than three-fourths of these audiences were heathen, who would not ordinarily set foot inside a Christian place of worship.

HOUSE TO HOUSE VISITATION.

The officers in charge of the stations spent from 12¼ to 15½ hours each every week in visiting, the total hours recorded for the week being 1941, and for the month 7764. The number of native houses visited amounted to no less than 3031 per week, and 12,124 per month. Giving an average of 10 people in each house (often there would be from thirty to fifty, and even more), they thus reached 121,240 people in house to house visitation. Add to this the 168,000 in the open-air, and 160,000 at the indoor meetings, and we have a grand total of 449,240 people—or in round figures nearly half a million—dealt with about their souls; and this during a month which is particularly unfavourable, being in some quarters intolerably hot, and in others exceptionally wet and stormy, owing to the break of the south-west monsoons.

This set of columns has a special interest, in that it shows the number of converts made, and the religion or nationality to which they belonged. The total is no less than 448. You have heard, perhaps, that we are "building on other men's foundations." Judge for yourselves if this be so. No less than 72 per cent. (nearly three-fourths) of the converts were Hindoos, 5 per cent. Buddhists, and 2 per cent. Mahommedans, making a total of 72 per cent. raw heathens (nearly four-fifths)! Another 2 per cent. were Roman Catholics (natives). Only 9 per cent. of the entire number were Protestant native Christians. Add to these 6 per cent. Eurasians and 4 per cent. Europeans. Thus you see that 90 per cent. were pure natives, 96 per cent. were born in India, and only 4 per cent. consisted of what we may call foreigners! To God alone be all the glory!

A CONVERTED VILLAGE.

The entire members of one caste, numbering nearly one hundred adults, have professed salvation in a certain village, with only one exception. They have given up their idols, using a large stone, one of a dragon, to stand upon while bathing. Though greatly persecuted, and in several cases imprisoned by the high caste, they have stood firm.

In another village, hearing that the Army was coming, the high caste resolved to inflict a fine of half-a-crown on anyone who should give the weavers their customary buttermilk. This would have been a serious matter for the weavers, and indeed threatened their very existence, the buttermilk being required for the manufacture of their cloth, besides being a staple article of food. However, when the Army commenced its meetings, the high caste came to look and listen, and were so pleased with what they saw and heard, that the order for the fine was forthwith cancelled.

In another village the captain reports that nearly a hundred souls publicly came forward for salvation, whereupon the high caste, becoming alarmed, attacked them in force and scattered them right and left. This will give a vivid idea of the severe sufferings which our converts have still to encounter.

One day a young Parsee came to me and with tears in his eyes besought my advice. He was the eldest son of his widowed mother, and supported all the family by his earnings. Attending our meetings in Bombay he became convicted of sin, and made up his mind to get saved. The news reached his mother. Rushing to the edge of the well from which they drew their water, she threatened to cast herself into it, unless her son promised solemnly that he would not forsake the religion of his forefathers. Who can wonder that he resolved to wait till his mother changed her mind or died, before he could decide for Christ?

A MOHAMMEDAN STANDS FIRM.

Abdul Hamid's father is a chief priest in the town of Kandy. For a year the son had regularly attended our meetings, nor had any objection been made, but when at length he publicly came forward and sought salvation, the entire Mohammedan community was in an uproar. His life was threatened. It was with difficulty that a large band of police rescued him from the hands of the excited mob. He was taken before the magistrate, when he made a bold profession of his faith, though the court was crowded with Mohammedans. The most touching sight of all was when his aged father fell at his feet, and, with tears trickling down his face, besought his son not to disgrace his family by forsaking the religion of his ancestors. Amidst all the lad stood firm, and, after passing through storms of bitter persecution, is to-day a brave and devoted officer in our ranks.

Among our 245 native officers are included the following religions and nationalities, nearly all of whom speak distinct languages:—Brahmin, Khatree, Rajput, Vaniya, Seekh (Panjabee), Bengalee, Marathee, Goojaratee, Bheel, Kolee, Dhobee, Dherd, Vagree, Jain, Tamil, Malabaree, Mahommedan, Moorman, Buddhist, Singhalese, Parsee, Armenian, and Syrian. In Bombay we have a captain who is a Brahmin, and who, as such, was accustomed to receive the worship of other Hindoos, but who now gladly associates with fellow-officers of other castes. Similarly, in Ceylon, we have four or five converted Buddhist priests, one of whom is now on a visit to America, where he has been called the "Indian Talmage" from his remarkable eloquence.

OUR 125 EUROPEAN MISSIONARIES

include English, Scotch, Irish, Canadian, American, Australian, Swede, Norwegian, and French. This is the largest foreign force put into the field by any one mission, and forms a twelfth of the entire number of missionaries belonging to all the societies at work in India and Ceylon. The fact that these were maintained last year with an income of only £2,500 from foreign sources also speaks volumes for the economical lines on which the work is carried on.

The door stands wide open before us. Jericho's walls have commenced to totter. Those who cannot themselves mount the breach can at least furnish us with the weapons and ammunition that we so urgently need. We carry our lives in our hands, it is true. We run some exceptional risks, it cannot be denied. But we do so gladly, for "the love of Christ constraineth us." A dear, devoted, self-sacrificing band of native officers is rising up around us. We have at the present moment no less than 140 native cadets in training to become officers. Our lines, after careful experiment, have become thoroughly fixed and established. Is it too much, then, for us to plead with the Lord's people to come to our help and enable us to rise to our increasing opportunities by presenting us with the £10,000 for which we now ask?

India waits expectantly at England's gate. Her sorrows, her sufferings, her needs, her opportunities combine to force themselves upon our attention. Blind indeed were the eye that could not see, deaf were the ear that could not hear, and seeing and hearing, how hard the heart that could fail to respond to the claims of these 265 millions of our fellow-subjects! Christian England has won a name among all nations for her philanthropy and generosity. Justly so. Seldom has her heart been persistently appealed to on behalf of suffering humanity without eliciting, sooner or later, a generous response.

But at this time it is with higher than merely national claims that we appeal to you for help. Who will step forward on behalf of India's grateful sons and daughters, and thus earn their favourite epithet of "Ghareeb Parwar" (deliverers of the poor)? Nay, rather, who will win from Jesus Christ—who on Calvary remembered the need of every one of these dark races—the great "Well done!" which will infinitely and eternally outweigh any and every temporary sacrifice that may be made now.

SAILORS' REST, MARSEILLES.

Dear Sir,—Allow me to convey my thanks to all those kind friends who have assisted me during my visit to the British Isles, by facilitating the means to speak of the work committed to me at Marseilles. In my absence, the Rest, that is, in reality a Home for Sailors of all nations, has been effectively worked by the manager, aided by others, and I am thankful to say that the Clothing Department, started just before I left in connection with it, has exceeded my expectations.

Though the summer is usually a slack time of year, there has still been a good number coming and going, and cheer has been granted to my fellow helpers in some instances whilst sowing beside all waters.

It would be a great joy and relief to me to be able on my return to meet the next quarter's rents, besides other heavy demands. As we do not expect to leave till the end of September, letters may be addressed to me, care of the Editor of The Christian.—Yours most truly,

Charles E. Faithfull.

PROFESSOR SIMPSON, of the Medical Faculty, gave the valedictory address to the medical graduates in Edinburgh University, on August 1, and dealt with the ethical and spiritual as well as the scientific aspect of their future profession. They would soon prove in their practice, he told them, in regard to the alcohol, that its habitual use itself produces diseases; that it aggravates other diseases; that it renders its habitual users more susceptible to diseases; that it lessens their chances of recovery; and that in disease the alcoholist gets less benefit from stimulants than the abstainer. They must be very careful how they prescribe its use.

A NEW PENNY MONTHLY MAGAZINE for young women and mothers is to be brought out at the end of the year, under the auspices of the "Haddo House Association," which has now grown to such dimensions as to need an organ of its own. The Countess of Aberdeen, President of the Association, will edit the magazine, and has already many promises of support from her literary friends, so that an attractive programme may be looked for.

"AN ITALIAN VILLAGE BECOMES PROTESTANT."

The readers of The Christian will be interested in hearing that six priests went to Monte Orfano the Sunday after that described in The Christian of August 8. They were not allowed to enter the church or perform mass, though in the afternoon the Pastor of Intra conducted the Evangelical service in the church as before. All the inhabitants have now entered their names as "Evangelici," also large numbers from three neighbouring villages have almost decided to call the Pastor, and others are making inquiries. A number of shepherds are awaiting their return to their village from the high pasture lands to open their church also to the Pastor, and are making a weekly collection to put it in suitable repair. Oh, that many of these villagers may not only become "Evangelici," but heartfelt Christians, and lights in this land darkened by Popery!

I will gladly see in London any lady who may be able to come and work in the villages round Lake Maggiore, or to help in the care of the orphans.

I should be much obliged if friends would kindly address to me at Alpha Villa, Ore, Hastings, and not to 48, York-street, W.

(Miss) Jane Cox.

PIONEERING IN BASUTOLAND.

Writing from Morija, Basutoland, in July last, Rev. Adolphe Mabille says:—On my return from France in 1882, I found a valley to the east of my district filled with people; there were none there before 1880. I have now four out-stations in that valley, and would like to open a fifth. For these I spend about £100, and receive only £30. I have besides to build small chapels and cottages for the evangelists, each out-station's buildings costing about £100, of which I receive about £70 from our Conference. I am now building two of the four chapels. This valley is about eight hours' ride from here—ups and downs, gorges, rivers, precipices, a hard ride, and I am fifty-four years of age.

Now, there is the much larger and longer valley of the Upper Orange River, which is four days from here. For years that valley has been filling with people, and two years ago two petty chiefs asked me for evangelists. The lower part of the valley has one station, but without a missionary, and the natives by themselves have not the energy to begin new work. I promised but very vaguely to find some evangelists. Two months ago the matter was pressed upon me in such a way that I could no longer delay. I have the men, pupils of my Bible school, ready to go, but where are the means to come from? According to the population not two out-stations but ten or even more, ought to be begun there.

I am sending my helper, a native theological student who remains with me one year, to help me in the mountainous part of my district. I shall send him first to go and see where the out-stations can be placed, and as soon as the spring comes (for we are in the midst of our winter, and the valleys I speak of are snowed in), I shall try and pay a visit to those distant parts of Basutoland. There are about 150 villages without the Gospel. Who will help?

HOP-PICKERS AT ALTON.—We are within a few days of the picking, and hundreds of poor people are gathering. Six large tents are being put up, and twenty workers will be at work among them. We have but little to fall back on. It is a time of need, and we shall feel relieved if friends will send us help at once. S. Chinn.

Alton, Hants.

American Notes.

The Methodist Episcopal Church is pushing its educational work to the front. Three days since the corner stone of the Utah University was laid with imposing ceremonies. This is bearding the Mormon lion in his deepest den. Perhaps what could not be accomplished by bullets or ballots may be done by Christian education; namely, the extirpation of the gigantic and appalling curse of Mormonism in our midst. Hitherto this moral cancer has been spreading with deadly and demoralising results. One half-million of dollars will be expended on the University buildings in the city of Ogden.

The present governor of the Territory is a Methodist, who made an able speech in favour of this Christian school. Sam Small, the evangelist, and former co-labourer of the famous Sam Jones, has been elected University President: another illustration of the fact that American evangelists have proved themselves very versatile, and are helping forward many forms of general evangelism.

President Harrison and our Postmaster-General, Mr. Wanamaker, are pushing forward a bill to deal with the Louisiana Lottery. This monster devil-fish has once more the sanction of the State legislature to prey upon the people of all the country. If the bill becomes law the Post Office will be closed against this infamous traffic. It is the universal desire of the American people that the general Government should set itself in array against it. The open bribery and unblushing conduct of the Lottery advocates and Louisiana senators have become proverbial: votes were openly bought and sold, while uncounted dollars were freely spent to secure a lease which that corrupted State has granted to the lottery men. When in Virginia I was informed that both blacks and whites in one small village purchased in one year lottery tickets to the amount of 30,000 dollars. Beggary and starvation necessarily followed.

The fourth annual Bible Conference at Ocean Grove, State of New Jersey, numbered among its teachers and preachers Drs. Gordon, Brookes, West, Brodbeck, Bishop Thoburn from India, and Messrs. Munhall, Needham, and Erdman. The attendance was very large and enthusiastic. Ocean Grove is unique as a religious place of rendezvous. There are covered buildings for indoor services, and a large open-air auditorium, roofed over, capable of seating 6000 persons. Quite frequently 10,000 assemble, and the arrangements are so perfect that all can hear with comfort. The Bible Conference is only one of the many movements carried on within this famous camp-ground. Temperance meetings, Sunday preaching, and religious lectures, fill out the summer. This Methodist town of cottages and tents can give shelter to 50,000 people.

One of the surprises to the congregation at the Bible Conference, which was largely composed of Methodist residents, was to hear Bible expositions strongly Calvinistic, yet presented with such spiritual power that, forgetting the objectionable technicalities, the people frequently broke out into applause. The themes presented were chiefly pertaining to the Holy Spirit, the Priesthood of Christ, the relation of Old and New Testaments one to another, the coming of our Lord, and a series of lectures on the Jewish Tabernacle, which were given by Mr. Geo. C. Needham, and which were illustrated with a new and beautiful model.

There has been abundant proof that this Conference has already been greatly owned of the Lord in giving an incentive to more general Bible study, and in quickening missionary and evangelistic zeal.

Some very earnest protests were made against modern ecclesiastical financial speculations and entertainments. "A revival," said one speaker, "is the antidote to the abominations called fairs and festivals, where young women are kissed at ten cents a smack, in order to raise money for the Lord's work." So also a revival is the cure for estrangements among members of the same church. Arbitration, persuasion, and everything else fails until hearts are touched, and melted; then they flow together. Then enemies easily approach one another, beg forgiveness, and become earnest friends. Oh, for such revivals! Many are the prayers now ascending for a display of the power of God.

DR. DOUDNEY'S JUBILEE.

Fifty years is a long period of public service; therefore it is not surprising that considerable interest was manifested by the friends of Rev. Dr. Doudney in the testimonial which was presented to him on Wednesday last week, in token of the completion of his jubilee as editor of The Gospel Magazine. The meeting was held in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, and, though in his eightieth year, Dr. Doudney looked exceedingly well. The goodly congregation of sympathisers included several who had come from a distance to do him honour. Among those who regretted inability to attend was Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, who invoked God's blessing on his devoted servant, and, sending hearty love, said: "Dr. Doudney's work will abide when we have passed away."

Mr. W. H. Collingridge, who had acted as hon. secretary of the presentation committee, announced that so far the sum of £800 had been subscribed by 1050 persons. Some of the subscriptions have come from Dr. Doudney's birthplace, Portsmouth, and others from the various towns and districts in England and Ireland in which he has officiated as a minister of the Gospel. Mr. George Cowell, who for forty-six years has written the "Wayside Notes" in The Gospel Magazine, read an address, which acknowledged the goodness of God in raising up and equipping such a faithful witness of the truth. Sir Andrew Lusk, Bart., who occupied the chair, and formally made the presentation, spoke some words of congratulation, ending with the remark: "Nature made you an able man; religion a good man; and Providence a useful man."

Responding to these kind words, Dr. Doudney took occasion to magnify the grace of God. Having recalled the fact that in 1877 kindness similar to the present was shown to him, he glanced at his long career. He failed to discern any worth in himself; he was indebted to the grace of God for any strength, wisdom, or courage he had been enabled to display. Every trial had been for his good, and, looking back, he could see infinite love in the dispensations of Providence running concurrently with much rebellion in his own heart. The Baroness Burdett Coutts followed with a few kindly remarks. The hymns sung on the occasion were "Rock of Ages," "Hark! my soul, it is the Lord," and "All hail the power of Jesu's name," all of which originally appeared in The Gospel Magazine, which has now reached the venerable age of 124 years.

CONVALESCENT HOME FOR CITY WORK-WOMEN.—Nearly 200 young women visit Clark's Cottages, Tuttlebee-lane, Buckhurst-hill, every year. A week or a fortnight's rest and change of scene generally works wonders in the health of over-worked City girls. The Home is principally intended for such as are unable to pay for a rest when ill. It accommodates six at a time, and ladies who visit in the workrooms generally send a donation when they secure the admission of young women. Many girls, however, apply for themselves, and for the support of these the Home is dependent on the help of friends. Communications should be addressed to Miss Helen Reynolds, Epping New-road, Buckhurst-hill.

"ANSWERED PRAYER."

I WAS much interested in reading the article with the above heading, and I believe it would tend greatly to the glory of God if his children would not be ashamed to testify publicly what great things the Lord has done for them. Those weak in faith would be strengthened, and the strong ones built up and edified. Acting on this principle I give my name, and mention one of my very many blessed experiences of answer to prayers.

On May 27, 1875, I attended for the first time one of Mr. Moody's meetings in the Opera-house, Haymarket. I heard Mr. Sankey sing "I am praying for you." I was much struck by the words, and I said to myself, "Whom shall I pray for, while he is singing?" I determined to pray for my two servants, the parlour-maid and cook, who had left me two years before. I had never heard a word about them, except that one had gone north and the other west. While praying, the assurance was given me that my prayer was heard. I was so overcome that the tears ran down my cheeks; it was not in my power to restrain them.

On leaving, while on the platform, I met Mr. Sankey, held out my hand, and said, "Mr. Sankey, my prayer is heard; you shall hear from me again." I did not give my name, and never wrote to him. I prayed at a quarter to five p.m.

The following day, by the morning post, I received a joint letter from these two servants, written from Bath, asking my pardon for their conduct to me, and saying that ever since they left me, the Lord's blessing had departed from them, and they had lost all their savings; nothing they attempted had prospered.

I went to Bath, and asked our agent what time they came to him to ask for our address. He replied, "About ten minutes past five on the 27th." Afterwards I remembered it was the very day on which two years previously they had left me. They immediately obtained good situations in London, in the same family; and, when I went to see them, they told me it was the happiest day in their lives

THE MALTESE MARRIAGE LAWS. — The Bishop of Gibraltar writes to the papers to state that those who represent the Episcopalian, Presbyterian, and Wesleyan communities in Malta distinctly challenge the correctness of the opinion of the Roman Catholic legal authorities there that the marriages, whether "mixed" or "unmixed," which during the last ninety years have been celebrated in Malta by their ministers, are invalid. A report on the facts and law bearing on this question is in course of preparation, and will be submitted to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies on behalf of those whose marriages are impugned.

Forest Gate, Essex.—For many years a vigorous tract and book distribution agncey has been worked in connection with the Bignold Hall (Evangelistic Mission), Forest Gate. A large band of helpers systematically engage in this excellent work, and regularly encourage open-air preaching.

An all-day prayer-meeting will be held at Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N., on Tuesday, September 30, to plead with God on behalf of Israel. There will be meetings at 9, 11, 3, and 6.30, and the subjects will be:—Confession of culpable neglect of the Jews by the Church of Christ; prayer that the Christian Church may be aroused to an interest in the Jew warranted by the Word of God; for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the Jews throughout the world; for all missions to the Jews, that men and women engaged in this work may be filled with the Holy Spirit, and that modes of work may be those approved by the Word and Spirit of God.

NEW GUINEA.—A church for all English-speaking visitors and residents has been opened at Port Moresby, New Guinea. The building was erected by means of funds collected in Australia by Rev. W. G. Lawes, and it is free from debt. The opening service was conducted by the missionaries of the London Missionary Society, and Rev. A. Maclaren, Episcopalian missionary. Sir William Macgregor and the chief magistrate were present. Sir W. Macgregor, in his report of New Guinea, lately rendered to the Australian Governments, speaks in complimentary terms of the mission schools, and commends especially the devoted labours therein of Mr. and Mrs. Lawes, and the native teachers under their supervision.

Evangelistic Notes.

Aldershot.—Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has concluded a successful Gospel mission at the North Camp. Many have been professedly brought to the Lord, while the Christians have been refreshed.

Mr. Isaac Skidmore is conducting evangelistic services nightly upon Brighton beach, close to the Aquarium. Crowds of men and women at this fashionable seaside resort hear the word of life.

Uttoxeter, Staffs.—A series of very interesting and profitable meetings have been held at Uttoxeter in a tent belonging to the Evangelisation Society. Mr. T. Wales has preached nightly for over four weeks; many have been awakened to concern, and brought to a knowledge of the Lord Jesus as their Saviour. The praises of Christians are arising for much blessing realised by themselves, and friends in whose welfare they were concerned. In the afternoons Bible-readings were given with much manifested interest on the part of hearers, who long for an opportunity to hear again such full, clear, and forceful expositions of the truth. On Sunday week the meeting had to be held in the Town Hall, as it was too large for the tent.

Victoria.—In a letter to The Southern Cross, of Melbourne, Rev. Edward Isaac, Baptist minister, of Brunswick, writes:—For the past five Sabbath nights, in response to the invitation given from the pulpit, we have had about forty come into the vestry at the close of the service with deepest solicitude, inquiring, "What must I do to be saved?" Many of them, it was evident by their joy-lit faces, went away with that question Divinely answered. Everything with us seems to bear the impress of reality. Both my officers and myself are agreed that we have never had to do with a work that promises to be more deep and lasting. The prayer-meetings are more largely attended and multiplying in number, there is a deeper fervour and a firmer hold on God for yet "greater things than these." We have been having no special effort except that of more public and private prayer.

Appeals.

Dock Labourers' Mission.—Some channels of sympathy towards this effort have of late been closed. We have for twenty-five years supplied many thousands of homeless men with bed and breakfast free of charge; during last winter, however, we were compelled to charge one penny to each man receiving the benefit. We have also for years taken poor sick children without charge to our country Home for three or four weeks; now we are compelled to make a charge of 2s. per week for each child. Help is much needed. C. H. COLEMAN, Missionary, 32, Chamber-street, London Docks, E.

Folkestone Tramp Mission.—"Gipsy" William Smith still carries on his work among the Folkestone tramps. This effort is the more needed as the workhouse is seven miles from the town, and the poor people come in expecting to find it there. Such a work necessarily involves both feeding and sheltering. Last winter Gipsy Smith opened a shed for wood-chopping; but for want of support had to give it up and sell it to meet expenses. But it is no mere philanthropic enterprise. A real spiritual influence is its mainspring, and this is evidenced by some cases of conversion. Funds may be sent to Mr. Gawin Kirkham, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, London, W.C., or to William G. Smith, 19, Coolinge-road, Folkestone.

MANITOBA.—Mr. A. Tansey writes from Morris, Manitoba, Canada:—"I left England on April 17 to take up mission work in Canada, and commenced work here on June 1. This is a very large field of work, and one is almost alone, without a word of sympathy or encouragement. I should be most grateful to any of your readers for a weekly copy of THE CHRISTIAN, and also for any other Christian literature. I have charge of a mission here which is over 400 dollars in debt. The people are very poor, most of them having lost their all in the 'boom' which occurred here some years ago. The church is greatly in need of repairs before the winter comes on, if we are to worship with any degree of comfort, as the cold here is so intense. The people do all they possibly can, but that is not much. Many of the people come ten, twelve, and thirteen miles to service. I have commenced a fortnightly service in a thinly scattered settlement some thirteen miles to the north, where some of the people have been living for years without the sound of the Gospel. I have also commenced a service about fourteen miles to the south, where it is much the same."

Obituary.

AN AGED SAINT.

ON Monday, last Mrs. Lear fell asleep in the Lord at her residence at Cardiff. She had attained to the age of ninety-two, of which more than seventy years had been spent in the personal knowledge and enjoyment of Christ as her Saviour, and in seeking the glory of his kingdom.

MR. WILLIAM BRERETON.

The congregation of St. James's, Ngatimoti, Nelson, New Zealand, has sustained a sad loss by the death of Mr. William Brereton, one of the oldest lay readers of the district. He was drowned along with his son, John, while on a fishing excursion. Ten years of faithful service for Christ have made his memory fragrant to those who sympathise with his wife and large family in their bereavement.

JOHN HANALOA.

We learn by recent news from the leper colony in the island of Molokai of the death of John Hanaloa, an Hawaiian pastor, who, upon discovering that his wife had contracted the disease of leprosy, resolved to accompany her to this colony, to which, by reason of her affliction, she was exiled. He has laboured there for the Lord, in order to benefit the poor people both in body and soul, since 1877, without contracting the disease himself. His name deserves to be mentioned with gratitude.—L'Ami Chretien.

THREE AFRICAN MISSIONARIES.

Information has been received of the death, from African fever, in Sierra Leone, of Mrs. E. Kingman and Messrs. F. M. Gates and John E. Jaderquist, American missionaries. Mrs. Kingman was the wife of Mr. E. Kingman, formerly a Y.M.C.A. secretary in Kansas; Mr. Gates was gymnasium superintendent of the Y.M.C.A., Topeka, Kansas; and Mr. Jaderquist was assistant secretary of the Y.M.C.A., St. Paul, Minnesota. They were members of a party of eight workers who left America for Africa in May last, with the object of founding a new undenominational mission amongst the Mandingo people in the Western Soudan. They went forth in response to the appeals made by Dr. Grattan Guinness, during his recent visit on behalf of these unevangelised millions. Mr. Kingman had preceded the party as forerunner, having sailed with the C.M.S. party in February.

MR. JAMES YOUNG.

By the death of Mr. James Young, of Calcutta and Helensburgh, at the age of sixty-one, an outstanding Christian worker has been removed from a sphere of great earthly usefulness. Mr. Young's name was a synonym for integrity and honour, and will be ever revered by many attached personal friends, by the widows and helpless orphans whom he has befriended, by the churches and religious organisations he has assisted, and by the missionaries whose hearts he has cheered with sympathy and whose hands he has upheld. In missions he took a special interest. A few years ago he made a tour through the various mission stations in Eastern Bengal, and the interesting report he wrote of the trip was printed for private circulation at the time. Mr. Young did not allow his sympathy or his help to run into any one groove; wherever he found a religious cause in a struggling condition, there he sent timely assistance, and Christians of every denomination were freely helped, in the most unostentatious manner.

MR. CHARLES LORING BRACE.

This well-known author, who has just died at the Julierhof, Campfer, in the Engadine, was one of the truest philanthropists of his generation. More than forty years ago, says The Times, he undertook, out of his private resources, to rescue orphans left by emigrants and others in New York, and to find homes for them in the Western States and in Canada. The work, begun on a small scale, gradually grew into an immense agency of beneficence, till 30,000 children had been protected, and in nearly every case adopted by the families to whom Mr. Brace, after careful investigation, confided them. At this stage the labour of love was undertaken by a special branch of Miss Schuyler's State Charities Aid Association; and, by the last report, more than 60,000 boys and girls had been provided with homes, with an average of only three or four per cent. of failures. Mr. Brace was the author of several works, of which the most important were "Gesta Christi," a rehearsal of the benefits historically traceable to Christianity, and "The Unknown God," a survey of ethnic religions.

THE GIFT OF THE SPIRIT.

Dear Sir,—The address on "The Gift of the Holy Spirit" in the last issue of The Christian, embodies a contribution to Biblical exegesis of such great importance as to demand thorough investigation. The thesis laid down by Mr. Webb-Peploe is, in brief, that "Wherever the person of the Holy Ghost is intended, the definite article is used; and whenever the qualities or gifts of the Spirit are put before us, the name is without the article." I have not tested this position by the text of the Old Testament, and I am not sure that my acquaintance with Hebrew is sufficient to do so satisfactorily; but I have gone carefully through the statements and allusions in the New Testament with the following results:—

(a) Whenever the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of God, of the Lord, of Christ, of grace, is mentioned, the Greek article being expressed, the third person of the Blessed Trinity is intended.

(b) Usually, when the Spirit is mentioned with the article, the intention is the same; except in the rather numerous cases where the article is required as a matter of grammatical accuracy, and where the meaning is at once evident from the context. But there are a few places where I am not sure that this rule will hold good, e.g.:—

In John iii. 5 we read, "Unless one be born from water and Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God"; evidently the needful regeneration is an operation or gift of the Spirit. But in vv. 6, 8 we read of being "born of the Spirit;" it seems difficult to account for greater stress being laid here on the personality of Him by whom we are initiated into the new life.

In 1 Cor. xiv. 15, 16, there does not seem to be any reference to a Divine Person. Perhaps here the article is to be accounted for by the mention of "My Spirit" in the foregoing sentence.

In 1 Thes. v. 19 it seems intolerably harsh to speak, even figuratively, of "quenching" one of the Persons of the Trinity.

(c) Usually when Spirit, Holy Spirit, Spirit of God, or the like is mentioned without the article, the Divine personality is not intended; but here, again, I doubt if the rule is universal. For example, is there not a distinctly personal reference in the following passages where the Greek article is not used—Matt. i. 18, 20, and Luke i. 35? If not, then there would seem to be no scriptural foundation for the belief that the third Person of the Trinity was the Agent in the incarnation of the Word. "The power of the Highest "is indeed sufficient; but one would not willingly relegate to the rank of mere human explanations or speculations the statement of the Apostles' Creed, that the only-begotten Son "was conceived by the Holy Ghost." Not that this difficulty is necessarily fatal to Mr. Webb-Peploe's thesis; for the phrase is only found in Latin creeds of post-Nicene compilation; the Creed of Constantinople—commonly called Nicene—adhering to the more scriptural expression "was incarnate ek pneumatos hagion, and of Mary of the Virgin."

Acts viii. 39, "[The] Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip;" Rom. viii. 14, "As many as are led by [the] Spirit of God," &c. Rom. xv. 13, "The power of [the] Holy Ghost;" 16, "Sanctified by [the] Holy Ghost." 1 Cor. ii. 13, "Words...which [the] Holy Ghost teacheth." Eph. iii. 5, "Revealed unto the...prophets by [the] Spirit." Titus iii. 5, "Saved...by the laver of regeneration, and renewing of [the] Holy Ghost." 2 Peter i. xxi., "Holy men spoke as they were moved by [the] Holy Ghost."

It does not seem easy to explain any of these passages without admitting that "the Person of the Holy Ghost is intended;" yet in none of them is the definite article prefixed to the word pneuma.

There is yet another startling result that would follow from the establishment of Mr. Webb-Peploe's position. In John xx. 22 our Lord says to the Apostles "Labete pneuma hagion," "receive ye Holy Spirit:" i.e., not the Divine personality, the promised Comforter, whose full manifestation was delayed until after the Saviour's ascension, but His gifts or operation. But in Acts viii. 18 Simon sees that "The Holy Ghost (to pneuma to hagion) was given through the laying on of the Apostles' hands." It seems strange that the Divine Saviour should only bestow spiritual gifts or operations on the Apostles; yet that they should afterwards be permitted to confer, or if the phrase be deemed more reverent, to call down, a nobler boon, the very personality of Godhead.

I suggest these difficulties, nowise captiously, nor with any wish to overthrow the position of Mr. Webb-Peploe, but with a desire to see them cleared up. Even as they stand, though they forbid the acceptance of his thesis without reservation, the general rule, to which they present exceptions, promises to throw valuable light on many obscure statements of Holy Scripture. If it be possible so to explain or get rid of them as to permit the unreserved acceptance of his position, the contribution to Biblical exegesis will, I think, be simply invaluable. T. G. Crippen.

Milverton, Somerset, August 21.

Dear Sir,—While quite agreeing in the main with the exposition on the "Gift of the Holy Spirit," by Mr. Webb-Peploe, as reported in your issue of August 15, I humbly venture to suggest that in the following passage (p. 21) the comparison of the waters of the Flood and the waters of baptism to the Holy Spirit is not warranted by Scripture:—

that God uses in speaking of the Spirit. There are no less than seven of these by which the Holy Ghost is described at different times. First He is compared to water. At the very outset of our spiritual career, we are buried by baptism into death; even as when mankind were buried by water under the Flood. But as God put Noah and his family into the ark, which is a type of the Lord Jesus Christ, so we are not only buried in, but "saved by water" when "by one Spirit [Greek: "in one Spirit"] we are all baptized into one body." Again, He is water, that He may be to us as a refreshing draught to cheer us in the struggle and toil of daily life.

Do not the waters of baptism and of the Flood invariably in God's Word refer to judgment?

John the Baptist immersed in water, looking forward to the great antitype the Lord Jesus, who was to be immersed in the waters and billows of God's wrath (Ps. xlii. 7, lxxxviii. 7; Jonah ii. 3).

When a sinner is born again, he is "born of the Spirit," "sealed by the Spirit," and "in one Spirit baptized into one body," but nowhere do we read in the Scriptures of being saved by the Spirit, which expression is inferred by the quotation of "saved by water" (1 Peter iii. 20).

If water here be a type of the Spirit, "Diesothesan di' hudatos" might be translated "saved through water," R.V. margin: "Were brought safely through water," or "saved out of water." Noah was saved by the Ark, not by, but through and out of the Flood. A shipwrecked crew are saved by the lifeboat, not by the raging sea, but out of it. Space does not permit of reference to the living waters so typical of the Spirit in John iv. 10 and vii. 38, nor of further comment on Mr. Webb-Peploe's interesting, profitable, and Scriptural address.—Yours in the one Spirit, W. S. E.

Lyndhurst, Church-road, Upper Norwood, S.E.

Sir,—It does not seem to me that Mr. Webb-Peploe makes out his case for the metaphysical distinctions sought to be drawn between the meanings of the words "faith," "trust," and "confidence."

I maintain that radically, etymologically, and practically, they are the equivalents of each other. For,

If I have faith in anyone, I trust him, and I have confidence in him;

If I trust him, I have faith in him, and I have confidence in him;

If I have confidence in him, I have faith in him, and I trust him.

Or, conversely:—

If I have no faith in him, I do not trust him, and I have no confidence in him;

If I do not trust him, I have no faith in him, and I have no confidence in him;

If I have no confidence in him, I do not trust him, and I have no faith in him.

To support the distinction, Mr. Webb-Peploe translates parrhésia by the word "confidence" (as is occasionally the case in our English version); but he is, of course, aware—indeed, he says himself that "every scholar knows"—that parrhésia has "a totally different meaning from the other two words." Etymologically, parrhésia, has no connection with any Greek word denoting either faith or trust, but means, as Mr. Webb-Peploe says, boldness, courage of soul.

I have no desire to "strive about words to no profit"; and I have only drawn attention to the expressions, because I cannot help thinking that such fine-drawn distinctions between certain alleged mental conditions have a strong tendency to promote introspection, rather than to encourage simple trust in the object of faith. But if some find them "helpful," I am very glad.

It would, however, be interesting to known what meaning Mr. Webb-Peploe attaches to the words "belief in God" as distinguished from "faith," "trust" or "confidence." What particular mental or spiritual condition is thereby implied?—Yours faithfully, Inquirer.

Sir,—Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe is certainly on sure ground when he refers to Rev. H. C. G. Moule on the "Baptism of the Spirit." To both "Masters in Israel" we clergy and laity are, I trust, unfeignedly thankful.

With your permission I would accentuate what has been already so well said by asking a further and special attention to Ps. lxviii. 18: "Thou hast ascended on high, Thou hast led thy captivity captive, Thou hast received gifts among men, yea, among the rebellious also, that the Lord God might dwell among them" (R.V.). "Hast received," i.e., hast taken in order to distribute—"gave"—according to St. Paul in Eph. iv.; but we must bear in mind that the Chaldee and Syriac versions have "hast given" in the Psalm. Now, confining our attention to Ps. lxviii. 18, we note that the grand end of Messiah's ascension and trusteeship is to "distribute gifts among men that the Lord God might dwell among them." In other words, remembering our Lord's emphatic and repeated teaching, Christ ascended up on high "that He might fill all things," but, more immediately, his Church, with the great fountain gift of the very Lord the Spirit—the "other Advocate"—the Divine Paraclete, and, through Him, with further gifts. What gifts? Subordinately and distributively, gifts of spiritual men—viz., "Apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers," the constituted instruments ordinarily and certainly, through the preaching of the Cross, of the Spirit's operations and fruits in the believing man's life.

Thus our Lord and Mediator, on his entry within the veil, received the Holy Ghost in his objective and dispensational capacity, unsealing the fountain and inaugurating the Spirit's baptism once for all, at Pentecost, for the anointing and mission of ministerial witnesses and for the "demonstration of the Spirit" in perfecting the saints and quickening and turning sinners to the God of salvation. Let us note, above all, in this connection, 1 Cor. xii. throughout.

Once more, and briefly, note Gal. iv. 4-7: God 'sent forth' his Son;" "God 'sent forth' the Spirit of his Son into our hearts." Here we have two Apostolates: that of Christ and that of the Holy Ghost. The first, unquestionably, definite, dispensational, historical; the second, that of the Spirit, equally so.

As reasonably, then, let us pray for the gift of the Incarnation, as pray for the gift—the "Mattanah," the "Doma," the "baptism"—of the Holy Ghost.

At the same time, Sir, while we thankfully and adoringly recognise the dispensational gift, the perennial effusion of this divine spring, drinking more and more deeply into these encompassing and soliciting waters, having received the promise of the Spirit through the hearing of faith (Gal. iii.), let us beware of partiality; ever loyally awake to other Scriptures, which promise to churches and individual believers distinguishing showers, yea, flood tides of spiritual visitation; and acknowledging very positively the sovereignty withal of the Holy Ghost, "who 'divideth unto every man severally as He will."—Faithfully yours,

Bempton Vicarage, Yorkshire.

PORTOBELLO.—Friends in this place have been holding meetings since the middle of June. A hearing ear has been given to the people. Old and young in hundreds have assembled on Wednesday, Saturday, and Sunday evenings, and many hearts have been touched. Mr. J. Peters, parish missionary, writes:—"An interesting feature of the meetings was that a number of visitors, from England and elsewhere, rendered valuable assistance."

Deepening of Spiritual Life.—Until October a tent Bible-reading is held on the upper lawn at Rev. Dr. Brewster's, Villa Flora, Upperton-road, Eastbourne, on Fridays, at 3.30 p.m. All Christians heartily invited. Speakers—Aug. 29, Rev. W. Haslam; Sept. 5, Rev. J. B. Figgis.

CHAMOUNIX CONFERENCE.

By reason of the tent having been partly destroyed by a storm, all the meetings have been held in the English Church, and, though the numbers attending the Conference have not been large, the interest has been great throughout. Each day there has been a prayer-meeting at 6.30 a.m.; missionary meeting at 9.30; Bible-reading at 4.30; and at 8 p.m. a Gospel meeting in the Roman Catholic Schools for the people of Chamounix.

The Bible-readings have been given by Capt. Dawson, Mrs. Hornibrook, and Rev. F. B. Meyer. On Monday, the opening address was given by Mr. Martin, of Liverpool, who was followed by Miss Lawrence, on China, and Mr. St. Dalmas, on India. On Tuesday, at the missionary meeting, Mr. Quendet, who has been labouring among the Kabyles of North Africa, gave a most interesting account of his labours among that people, and then Mrs. Hornibrook told of her experience among the poor of Belleville, Paris, whilst labouring there in Miss De Broen's Mission, special reference being made to the value and success of the medical mission, which should have the fellowship and support which it so richly deserves. Belleville is the Whitechapel of Paris, and here for nearly twenty years our good sister has laboured so earnestly and so wisely.

On Wednesday, third day of the Conference, Mr. Wood, of Philadelphia, U.S.A., gave a characteristic, American, racy account of the work of the Peace Society in America, and told of the successes it had achieved. Following our American friend, I was enabled to speak of visits I had made to the various prisons of the world, special reference being made to Russia. I told of the distribution of the Word of God in Roman Catholic and Mussulman countries, where the prisoners are never supplied by the Governments with the precious volume that tells of a Saviour's love. After special prayer was offered for Russia and Siberia, the closing address for the day was given by Rev. Mr. Ware, of Dublin, who told of the Lord's work in Ireland.

Smaller private meetings were also held in the Villa Beau Sejour in English and French in connection with the work of evangelisation in Haute Savoie.

On Friday the principal address was given by Pastor Lecoat, of Brittany, whose remarkable work among the Bretons deserves to be better known. After seven years' labour he has translated the Bible into Breton; over 10,000 Testaments and 80,000 Gospels have been scattered abroad, which has produced a harvest of blessing, and churches and missions are now in full working order under the auspices of "The Breton Evangelical Mission." Miss Mason, of Kilburn, then told of the work the Lord had enabled her to do in connection with the Houses of Rest in London and Eastbourne, and cheered our hearts and strengthened our faith as she told of the many distinct answers to prayer vouchsafed by our gracious God. The Conference closed by a meeting for praise and thanksgiving, and the Lord's Supper.

The points I have missed will be supplied by Mr. Meyer, who arrived on Wednesday from the St. Bernard Hospice, and gave two very really useful Bible-readings on "Our Power for Service," and "Christ our Satisfaction." The weather has been beautiful, Mont Blanc standing out very conspicuously—clear cut against a sky without a cloud—and all those attending the Conference have enjoyed, not only the fellowship of each other, but communion with the God of Nature, and have been permitted in this lovely Valley of Chamounix to see nature at its best. CHAS. COOK.

M. LOYSON (Père Hyacinthe) is at present delivering lectures in the Anglican Church at Baden-Baden.

The Book World.

THE STORY OF A LITTLE CRAB. By Mary H. Andrews. 1s. Holness. A crab is a singular pet, but this book tells of one and its remarkably amusing ways. Crabbie's biography yields many lessons, and, we trust, it will find numerous juvenile readers.

THE CITY OF PROGRESS AND SIGNS OF THE TIMES. By H. F. Witherby. 2s. 6d. Holness. An allegory exposing the deceits and follies of the present evil world, and delineating predicted judgments with the glory that shall afterwards be revealed. The pages are suggestive of important practical lessons, as well as instructive in regard to sound evangelical doctrine.

GRAND GILMORE. By Reese Rockwell (2s.). An American story, enforcing temperance principles by presenting to view some of the sad consequences of intemperance. SARA'S CHOICE; OR, NO VAIN SACRIFICE. By Annie Frances Perram (1s.). A Methodist story, into which are woven incidents from real life. The heroine bravely endured persecution in days when the right of private judgment was less recognised than it is to-day. (C. H. Kelly.)

YONDER; OR, GLIMPSES OF THE GLORYLAND. A series of Bible Lessons, by George Thomas Congreve. 2s. 6d. Elliot Stock. Here are notes of ten addresses delivered to the members of the Young Women's Christian Institute, West Brighton. The pages have many and varied attractions, and are eminently calculated to cheer weary pilgrims to "the better country." It is not often one finds so much that is joyous brought together into so small a compass. The theme is bright and inviting to poetical imagination. Mr. Congreve, however, is one of those whose hope is rooted in Christ believed in and loved; and his book is likely to perform a ministry of comfort to many a child of God.

NOTES FROM KESWICK. By Rev. W. Haslam, M.A. Tinted covers, 6d.; cloth boards, 1s. Morgan & Scott. The aim of this little book is, as stated in the introduction, "to show how we may, as living believers, enter into the life more abundant, which is, indeed, the life of Christ, as distinguished from the spiritual vitality which we receive at conversion." Why "distinguished from" it? Would not Keswick do good service to the Church if it emphasised the fact that true conversion should include both "life, and life more abundant"? Yet, in the experience of many, these are distinct, and this brief account of various cases, illustrating some of the difficulties of inquirers on this subject, cannot fail to help many. It is simple, pointed, and clear, and being composed almost entirely of narrative, is interesting reading for all. We believe the book will prove useful in leading many into the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ.

AN ITALIAN CAMPAIGN. By Rev. G. Wood Brown, M.A. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. An account of the evangelical movement in Italy, associated with the life and labours of the Rev. R. W. Stewart, D.D., of Leghorn, mainly compiled from his letters. The efforts made by the Free Church of Scotland on behalf of religious liberty, and the free circulation of the Word of God in Italy, forty years ago, are well worthy of commemoration, and will rank high in the annals of the ecclesiastical history of this century. Many honoured names occur in the records of this volume, as, for instance, those of Dr. Desanctis, Sigs. Malan and Geymonat, the Madiai, and others who took their part in the struggles involved; but it is to Dr. Stewart the cause of modern missions in Italian fields is most indebted, his sanctified judgment, truly catholic spirit, and deep spiritual fervour pre-eminently fitting him for the arduous and difficult task assigned him as the pioneer of Christian liberty in that erst priest-ridden and intolerant land. Many lessons of great value to Christian workers will be found in the story told by the author, the priceless worth of Christian union, together with the best means of dealing with obstacles to its promotion, is also illustrated. Our readers will do well to acquaint themselves with a narrative so well told and so really worth telling as that this volume contains.

THE CENTRAL HALL, SHOREDITCH, which has been a centre of temperance work many years, is about to pass into the hands of the Great Eastern Railway. Mr. Ling, speaking in the Hall for the last time on Sunday, said he knew of many cases of reclamation in connection with the work.

THE GOSPEL IN CORSICA.—Miss Grant Brown, writing with reference to the accounts we recently published of her interesting work in Corsica, says:—"We thank God there are a few believers in Corsica—a little flock to whom the kingdom has been given. What we hope is that the Church may one day evangelise the islands; we speak of what we hope for rather than of what has already taken place. A resident says: 'Have not all my desires been realised? The light for which I longed and sighed so ardently has shone into my heart. Do not my eyes feast as each evening I watch the ouvriers hastening to the hall after their work is done? They come to hear God's Word, and join with us in singing hymns of praise. There they stay all the evening, listening to the Gospel as if hanging on our lips.' Having themselves heard the Gospel, some of the islanders are eager to become missionaries among their own people. We long that the island may speedily be evangelised throughout."

LONDON WORKING BOYS AT THE SEASIDE.—The seaside camp for London working boys has now passed more than half-way through its second season. It is pitched in a bracing position on the Sandhills, near Deal, and is under the command of Colonel Farquharson, late Royal Marines. The boys received are from 14 to under 17 years of age, and come from all parts of London. They join the camp on the recommendation of the parish clergy, of their employers, or of subscribers, and each pays half-a-crown for every week spent there. Over 700 have already been received. The week's holiday effects a wonderful change in the physique and general bearing of many pale and fagged youths, who have to pass their early years with none of the purest pleasures of boyhood, but with many of the cares of persons of maturer years. Communications regarding the effort may be sent to Mr. Mosse Macdonald, secretary to the London Diocesan Council for the Welfare of Young Men, Northumberland Chambers, Northumberland-avenue, London, W.C.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Gospel meetings in a barn, at Marden, Wilts, to be conducted by Mr. John Elliott.——A three weeks' mission by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, at Fleet, Hants.——A tent mission at Cricklade, by Mr. G. Sage, of the Evangelisation Society.——A twenty-two days' mission at Grove-street Institute, Glasgow, by Mr. John Wood, of the Evangelisation Society, commencing Sunday, August 31.——For services at the Mission Hall, Orford, by Mr. Moxhay, from August 31 to September 7.——A fourteen days' mission at Melchet Court, Romsey, commencing Sept. 6, to be conducted by Mr. Henry Lakin.——Tent services at Folkestone, conducted by Mr. H. Collins, of the Evangelisation Society, from August 31 to Sept. 21.——For young men and women to be brought to Christ on August 31, at Roos, and for special blessing on two services in another small village on Sept. 7.——Pray for Norway, especially for blessing on a series of meetings in Trondjem, by Mr. O. Leonard.——PRAISE: For much blessing at the services at "The Hall by the Sea," Margate.

Personalia.

Rev. J. Worthington Atkin is paying a short visit to Canada, where he hopes to hold missions on behalf of the Daily Prayer Union.

Prof. Drummond, who expects to arrive in Japan on September 1, to spend a month addressing the students at Tokio and Kyoto, will return to his duties in the College at Glasgow in the beginning of November.

Pastor J. Bennett Anderson has for ten years discharged pastoral duties at Liverpool. He is now about to start on a tour round the world. On Monday, September 8, a meeting will be held in Byrom Hall, Liverpool, to wish him God-speed.

Mr. Stanley is very far from being restored to perfect health. His physicians have enjoined upon him perfect rest, and with this end in view he has gone with his wife to a small village in Switzerland, where he will probably remain until the end of October, when he will sail for America.

Mr. John Hilton, Parliamentary agent of the United Kingdom Alliance, has attained his temperance jubilee. A special meeting of the London Auxiliary of the Alliance has congratulated him on the event, and Sir Wilfred Lawson, the chairman, on behalf of the meeting, presented him with a complimentary address.

Rev. W. M. MacGregor, of Troon, who has been elected successor to Dr. Marcus Dods at Renfield Church, Glasgow, is described as "A preacher for the times, who can conduct a religious service without levity or gloom, who can be interesting without being sensational, who has intensity without violence, who is thoughtful and not obscure, who is modern and yet evangelical."

Rev. W. Crosbie, M.A., entered upon his ministry at Park-hill Congregational Church, Nottingham, on Lord's Day, August 17, under very happy auspices. There were large congregations at all the services, and a very hall w d and earnest spirit prevailed. Mr. Crosbie's friends in many places made the services the subject of special prayer, and their petitions were answered. There are the signs of a time of blessing.

Rev. John McNeill.—Though this popular minister has not yet formally stated his intentions, it is generally understood that he will accept the call to Westminster Congregational Church. He has been spending part of his holiday in Scotland. He preached on Sunday morning in the Free Church, East Linton, and in the evening, for the Free Church congregation, at the Parish Church, Dunbar. On both occasions there were crowded congregations. At Dunbar he preached exactly an hour.

The late Mr. P. H. Gosse.—Mr. Edmund Gosse has completed his life of his father, Mr. P. H. Gosse; it will be published early in the autumn by Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co. The particulars which it gives of social life in the colony of Newfoundland where the naturalist resided from 1827 to 1835, will have a special interest at this moment, when public attention is so much concentrated on that island. Mr. Gosse's latest adventures as a farmer in Canada, a schoolmaster in Alabama, and a collecting naturalist in Jamaica, may also be expected to attract interest by their novelty. He spent a year in the heart of the Southern States at a time of which hardly any other record describing social life on the plantations exists.—Athenæum.

Rev. Dr. and Mrs. E. P. Thwing, of Brooklyn, N.Y., have returned, after nearly a year's absence in the East, engaged in volunteer missionary work. This is the second season of labour by Mrs. Thwing in South China. She speaks the Cantonese, and has laboured among the women of heathen villages. Dr. Thwing, a physician as well as clergyman, made a tour of 4500 miles in India, also aided in starting efforts for the first lunatic asylum in China, and also in initiating measures for the first free asylum in Japan, at Tokyo, provision in that empire having hitherto been made only for paying patients. He preached and lectured extensively among the mission stations, and to foreign residents at large centres. Being an independent observer, and connected with no society, his testimony is the more impartial and valuable as to the urgency and promise of evangelistic and mission work. A volume of his observations in the Orient, is in preparation, which, like his "Outdoor Life in Europe," will give graphic portraitures of the people of the East, and the work of missionaries there.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. A. Styleman Herring has passed the "silver wedding" of his pastorate at St. Paul's, Clerkenwell, and the thirtieth year of ministry in London.

Dr. Harold Browne has decided to resign the bishopric of Winchester, and Dr. Philpott is also contemplating retirement from the see of Worcester. Dr. Harold Browne is in his eightieth year, while Dr. Philpott is eighty-two.

In the diocese of Lichfield two diocesan preachers have just been appointed, one to preach and to deliver lectures with a view to the better instruction of the people generally in theological truth; the other to take part in parochial missions, but specially for the purpose of systematic teaching. The clergymen selected for these posts are Rev. W. S. Swayne and Rev. C. W. Carrington.

The secession to Rome of Rev. S. B. Thorp, of St. Matthew's, Sheffield, to which we referred in our last issue, has created no small sensation in the ranks of the Ritualists. His vicar, Rev. G. C. Ommaney, has preached upon the subject, and found occasion to condemn in the strongest terms the action which Mr. Thorp has taken in joining the Roman Church during the vicar's absence, as showing a loss of moral tone.

BAPTIST.

Revs. Richard Glover and T. M. Morris have consented to visit China on behalf of the committee of the Baptist Missionary Society, and will probably leave Liverpool on Sept. 17 by the ss. City of Chester.

The memorial stones of a new Baptist chapel and schools have been laid at Brook-lane, Alderley Edge, Cheshire. Rev. W. F. Edgerton, of Oldham, presided at the ceremony, and gave an address on "The need of maintaining the Gospel of Jesus Christ and an unflinching Protestantism in our villages."

There is, says De Christen, a city missionary box placed inside the Baptist Chapel at Groningen, Holland, with the words, "Saved; to save others," written over it. By aid of the voluntary offerings put into it, the friends have recently been enabled to open a hall in another part of the city for evangelistic work. It has been fitted up and furnished, and is named, "De Goede Herder," or Good Shepherd. On Friday evening, August 1, pastor and people opened it with a prayer-meeting, dedicating it to Christ's service as a mission station of the church. On the following Sunday afternoon Rev. J. Horn opened a Sunday-school there.

METHODIST.

A forward movement has been made by the New Connexion Methodists at Ramsey, Isle of Man, in the purchase of a large hall, which has been converted into a commodious chapel, with vestry and schoolroom behind.

Some little time ago the Wesleyans began a mission in the West End of Edinburgh. There they have formed a church, and the work prospers greatly. On Sunday evening their services are held in the U.P. Synod Hall, capable of holding 2500, which is usually well filled. The minister is Rev. Geo. Jackson.

An interesting meeting of the Portland-street Wesleyan men's Bible-class, Bristol, was held on Sunday week. Mr. Featherstone Witty presided, and ten members gave short expositions of the text "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul," &c. These sermonettes only lasted forty minutes altogether, and were very fresh and practical. Some spoke quite extempore, and others from notes.

At the opening of a new Bible Christian chapel at Coombewater, in the Crewkerne Circuit, Rev. J. Hawker, rector of the parish, was present, and delivered a memorable address. He heartily welcomed the Bible Christians into the neighbourhood as fellow-workers in promoting the spiritual good of the people, and in extending the kingdom of Jesus Christ. The site on which the chapel is built is the free gift of Lady Compton. Earl Compton, M.P., has also taken a kindly interest in the erection of this house of prayer.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Chairman of the Crystal Palace Company, at the meeting of shareholders, heartily congratulated Mr. Booth on the admirable discipline of his Army as seen at the recent demonstration.

Since the opening services at the Hague in April last, the number of conversions reported is about 650; some of the converts are already candidates for the work. A large number of auxiliaries are also added.

A very large indignation meeting was held at Madras on the liberation of Major Jai Bhai and the Tamil lasses imprisoned for preaching in the open air. Much sympathy was expressed from varied sources.

According to The Australian Christian World, there seems to be almost an informal alliance between the Salvation Army and the Australian churches. Dr. Bevan, of Melbourne, has lent them his church frequently, several other Congregational churches have followed suit, and Presbyterians have also given the Army house-room.

Two new Training Garrisons for Cadets are about to be established at Boston, U.S.A. The slum work in New York, which has been carried on vigorously for some time now, has attracted influential and practical sympathy. The Indian contingent occupied Beulah-grove camp meeting ground the first week in this month, and the attendance was estimated at 5000 persons, who were very enthusiastic, and generously responded to the appeal on behalf of the Indian work; the hearts of the Salvationists were also gladdened by the sight of numerous penitents coming forward.

Extensive preparations are being made for the annual "week of self-denial," which will be observed this year from September 28 to October 4. It is hoped by this means to raise £25,000 for the extension and consolidation of the work at home and abroad.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

New day schools were opened last week at Duncairn-gardens, Belfast, under the auspices of the Belfast Methodist Mission, and have already an attendance of 150 scholars.

A science scholarship, value £150, tenable for two or in special cases for three years, has been placed at the disposal of Queen's College, Belfast, to be held by a student of not less than three years' collegiate standing.

A marked feature in each of the Methodist district meetings which were held last week was the expression of a most earnest desire for the revival of the Lord's work and the making of arrangements for the holding of evangelistic services throughout the country during the winter.

The Belfast Methodist Local Preachers' Association, which numbers about 100 members, and which supplies every Sunday several mission-halls and chapels, as well as holds numerous open-air meetings, purposes entering on work of a more extended character among the masses during the coming year.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Mr. Thomas Knox, of Pettigo, Ireland, an earnest class-leader in the Methodist Church.—At Chulmleigh, Devon, Rev. Dr. William Norton, formerly Baptist minister of Bow and Dalston, near London, and of Egham and Sutton, Surrey, who entered the ministry in 1836.—Dr. J. W. Heron, medical missionary of the American Presbyterian Church at Seoul, Corea.—Rev. S. T. Porter, late of Glasgow, for fifty-eight years in the Congregational ministry.—Mr. Thomas Prust, a prominent member of the Primitive Methodist Connexion in Torquay.

JEWS IN RUSSIA.—Mr. Samuel Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, writes:—"It will be of interest to many of your readers to know that the recent rumours that went the round of some of our papers concerning the expulsion of the Jews from Russia, and the prohibition of all missionary work there, are quite groundless. I ought to say, though, that a prohibition of mission work amongst the Jews, or propagandism as it is there called, was in force long ago, but in spite of this we hold permission to distribute Testaments in certain provinces, and this has not been reversed, nor has anything occurred to hinder or endanger the work."

SCOTTISH CONFERENCES.—As will be seen from our forthcoming announcements, these autumnal gatherings are now mostly arranged for. The long-established Perth Conference leads off on September 9 to 11. Dundee falls a week later, when the general subject will be "The Spiritual Life"; and among the expected speakers are Rev. H. Price Hughes and Dr. H. M. Williamson, of Belfast. The week following is fixed for the Glasgow Convention for the deepening of the spiritual life, when, in addition to the usual Keswick speakers, Pastor Stockmayer and Mr. Orr Ewing, Jun., are expected. We hope to furnish our readers with special reports of these and other Scotch Conferences.

THE BLIND.—A garden party was given on Thursday last week in the grounds of the North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind Men and Women, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, N., the occasion being the birthday of the founder, Rev. Henry Bright. Each inmate was allowed to invite a friend, and nearly all availed themselves of the privilege. Besides the blind and their friends, there was a goodly number of visitors present. Pianoforte selections were performed by one of the blind inmates during the afternoon. Tea was provided, and during the evening a concert and entertainment were given, many of the inmates taking part, showing that although deprived of sight they had not failed to cultivate other faculties. These Homes occupy a unique position and have a peculiarly strong claim on the sympathy and support of the Christian public, and all interested in such institutions.

AMONG new announcements in periodical publications are: THE MAGAZINE AND BOOK REVIEW, a record of literary opinion and news, the first number of which is to appear on Saturday, August 30, (weekly, 1d. Offices, 280, Strand, W.C.) THE ANIMALS' GUARDIAN, the first number of which will appear on October 1, will be devoted exclusively to the well-being—not as a matter of indulgence, but of strict right—of those domestic animals which man has from time immemorial regarded as his friends and companions. (Monthly, 3d. Offices, 32, Sackville-street, W.)

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 31.—Psalm CXIV.

The authorship of this Psalm cannot be traced. It clearly belongs to the period of return from captivity; and the writer seeks comfort, under much discouragement, in the recollection of the blessed and glorious past.

1. The two names of the patriarch occur in the same verse. Israel must never forget that he was once Jacob; and all Jacobs may yet become Israels, by the grace of God. We all have our Egypts, and our people of strange tongue; but when the lesson of our bondage is learnt our God brings us out.

2. The Eternal finds his home in the midst of his people (Deut. xxxiii. 12; 2 Cor. vi. 16; Rev. xxi. 3). Is thy heart his sanctuary and dominion?

3-6. A poetical description of the passage of the Red Sea, and of the Jordan; also of the giving of the law (Ps. lxviii. 16).

7. How gracious that God should call Himself the God of Jacob! (Isa. xli. 14). The Divine presence is always with us (Matt. xxviii. 20), though so often we are insensible to its majestic glory. And if earth should tremble before Him, much more should we: not with the fear of slaves, but with the godly fear which dares not grieve his Holy Spirit.

8. Many such miracles doth He still. The most unlikely things yield the streams which quench our thirst and satisfy our souls. Work such miracles, blessed God, on the rocks and flints which glaciers of trouble have brought down into our lives!

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 1.—Psalm CXV.

Another of the Psalms which date from the Captivity era.

We may divide it thus:—1, Ascription; 2-7, Contrasted Deities; 8, A portrait of idolaters; 9-11, Exhortation; 12-15, Assurance; 16-18, Resolution.

1. It would eliminate from success and praise their power to harm us, if we would, from the heart, give utterance to these noble words. God's mercy and truth are indissoluble.

2-3. Those accustomed to some visible embodiment of God are always amazed at spiritual worship (John iv. 24). Pompey, we are told, was very surprised to find nothing in the most Holy Place. God's good pleasure is never arbitrary, but always conditioned by the highest welfare of his creatures. Let us ask Him to work that pleasure out in us, that we may please Him. (Heb. xiii. 21 and xi. 5).

4-7. This sarcastic description recals the searching passage in Isaiah (xliv. 9-19).

8. A very striking thought is given in these words. We resemble our ideals, we become like what we worship. And though we may not be now tempted to prostrate ourselves before the idols of the heathen, yet there are idols which may fascinate us (1 Cor. x. 14; Col. iii. 5; 1 John v. 21). We must not trust gold, or success, or any earthly thing, but God in Christ, till we become like Him (2 Cor. iii. 18).

9-11. A triple appeal for trust, addressed to the congregation, the priests, and perhaps the proselytes (Ruth ii. 12). The greatest cannot do without God. The least may appropriate Him. Trust is taking what God gives. "Help" and "shield" together make a very assuring combination: the one for succour in every moment of need; the other for defence.

12, 13. Here is a triple answer to the triple appeal. And we are surely at liberty to argue from the past to the future. What God has done, that He will do: trust Him.

15. Then let him curse who may. We have but to turn back to Abraham's life to see what God's blessing includes (Gen. xii. 2, 3; see also Num. vi. 22-27). And we who believe must be blessed, if the Maker of all things blesses us. The lot of God's children may seem arduous and darksome; but it is a blessed one: and in Him is our peace and rest.

17. Views of the hereafter were but partial to the Old Testament saints (2 Tim. i. 10). We have now an opportunity, which even heaven does not present, of praising God amid the obloquy and hate of men: let his praise be the more hearty and continuous in proportion to their anathemas.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 2.—Psalm CXVI.

This Psalm formed part of the Paschal Hallel, and contains an underlying reference to the deliverance from Egypt, and also to the deliverance from the captivity in Babylon. The Psalmist passes from the national deliverance to his personal sweet experiences of redeeming mercy, and sings his own song of thankfulness. "Jehovah" occurs fifteen times, and "Jah" once.

1, 2. Answered prayer may well incite to renewed love; but let us not love Him less, if He withhold. Perhaps the withholding is a greater proof of love than giving would be (John xi. 3-15).

3-6. Many who are now reading this Psalm may be in a similar position. And excessive grief is sometimes apt to check prayer. The soul is too sore and hurt even to cry out. Yet it is well worth our while, when we are in such circumstances, to break through all restraints and call out to God. He is very merciful.

7. There is no rest so warm and safe for the soul, as in the love and care of God. Sometimes, however, like the dove, we seem to get away from it: there is nothing better, at such times, than to return, and we shall be at once pulled in unto Him (Gen. viii. 9). Why do we ever leave our rest? Why wander from our home? (Matt. xi. 28). The love of God invites us back (Rom. ii. 4).

8. He hath delivered; He doth deliver; He will yet deliver (2 Cor. i. 10).

10. Quoted by the Apostle Paul (2 Cor. iv. 13). This is the speech which convinces men, because it has in it the accent of the speaker's conviction. Never say more than you believe.

11. It is this hasty speaking which lies at the root of so much misery to ourselves and others. An eminent director of souls once said: "I shall have good hopes of you when you can speak and move slowly." Oh for a holy recollectedness of spirit!

13. The Scripture often speaks of our lot as a "cup." In this case it brims with blessed help. But it is only because our dear Lord drank a cup brimming with bitter sorrow (John xviii. 11).

14. A good resolve, repeated in verse 18 (Eccles. v. 4, 5).

15. Therefore He often raises them from the very borders of the grave. Each saintly death-bed is the result of minute care on the part of God our Father, since it is there that He puts the finishing touch on a perfected character. Balaam's wish (Num. xxiii. 10) was not granted, for it went forth from feigned lips.

16. A marvellous avowal! The Psalmist dwells with delight on his slavery (ebed, a slave); and through it finds freedom. To be the slave of Jesus is to taste the sweets of liberty. Those who become God's slaves are loosed by him from all other bonds (John viii. 31-36).

17—19. "Praise is comely" (Psa. xxxiii. 1: cxlvii. 1). Shall we withhold from Jehovah that praise which is his due? "With thanksgiving" should ever be the accompaniment of our prayers (Phil. iv. 6). Verses 17 and 18 are almost identical with verses 13 and 14. We ought not to shrink from making mention of God's name (Psa. lxvi. 13—16).

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3.—Psalm CXVII.

This is the shortest chapter in the Bible, and its centre. Perhaps it was intended to be used as a doxology to the preceding and other Psalms. And yet, small as it is, it is full of a world-wide spirit, reaching out to all nations. "It is a dew-drop reflecting the universe." The Apostle quotes it in Rom. xv. 11, as foretelling the call of the Gentiles. In this Psalm, as also in Isa. xi. 10, and elsewhere, the spirit of Judaism forgets its natural exclusiveness, and reaches out its hands to the world.

1. Before we can appropriate these words we must have learnt to exercise the spirit of praise for ourselves. We must have come to see that the Lord Jesus is infinitely deserving of the love and homage of all mankind. And we must have received into our hearts the spirit of his own great love, which yearns over all men. Men will never be truly happy till they adore and praise Him whom we call Master (Phil. ii. 10).

2. The greatness of his love and the permanence of his word. Here are themes indeed for praise. Do we think enough of them? And are we as prepared to praise in dark and sad days as in bright and happy ones—because God is the same, and the same to us, though our lot may not be quite what it was in other and more gladsome days?

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 4.—Psalm CXVIII.

This Psalm was sung by the restored exiles, when they laid the foundation of the second Temple (Ezra iii. 10, 11). Our Lord sang it before He went into the garden (Matt. xxvi. 30; Mark xiv. 26). It was the last Psalm of the Hallel, cxvi.-cxviii.; the first two of which were sung before, the last after the Paschal meal. It is very touching to read into this Psalm some of those thoughts which must have filled the heart of our blessed Saviour, as with it on his lips, He stood on the margin of the cold river. Ver. 26 had been, but a few days before, sung in chorus by the multitudes who attended the triumphant entry into Jerusalem (Matt. xxi. 9). That same verse will probably be on the nation's lips when Zech. xiv. is fulfilled. (Compare Isa. xxv. 9 with Matt. xxiii. 39). Luther says of Psalm cxviii., "This is my Psalm, the one which I love." "Jehovah" occurs twenty-two times, corresponding with the number of letters in the Hebrew alphabet; "Jah" occurs five times.

1. He is good. Hold this fast, in spite of all appearances to the contrary, or the maledictions of his foes. And He will not grow weary or change (Mal. iii. 6).

2-4. The triple call of Ps. cxv. 9-11.

5. Sin-stricken and sorrowful souls can hardly do better than take this prescription. If it has healed one, why should it not avail for others? (See Ps. xxxiv. 6).

6, 7. If you would have God on your side, you must take care to be on his side. And when once a poor saint and God are on the same side, victory is certain (Rom. viii. 33; Heb. xiii. 6).

8, 9. If our dearest friend were a rich and mighty prince, how secure we should be! Are we less so, when we entrust all our concerns to God? Nay, saith the Psalmist, not worse off, but better. Put your most secret desires and plans, then, into the hands of Jesus.

10-12. We may say this of our spiritual foes, as well as of all who oppose our endeavours for God's cause.

14. A fragment from the Song of Moses (Exod. xv. 2). (See also Ps. xxvii. 1; lxii. 6).

16. Our Mediator sits at the right hand of God, the position of activity and might (Mark xvi. 19). That right hand must therefore prevail for us.

17, 18. There is always a "but" of merciful reservation in God's dealings with us (Isa. xxxviii. 17).

19, 20. The Lord hath many gates, through which the righteous pass, into the inner chambers of his presence (Rev. xxi. 12, 25).

22. This verse is supposed to have been suggested by the difficulty experienced by the Temple builders in fitting a certain stone into its place, though it afterwards occupied a very important position in the completed structure. The verse is frequently quoted, and applied to the Lord Jesus (Matt. xxi. 42; Acts iv. 11; and 1 Pet. ii. 4, 7).

27. New light demands more devoted service.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 5.—Psalm CXIX.

This long and noble Psalm is devoted to the praise of the Word of God, which it mentions in nearly every verse, under one title or another. Ezra probably composed it in order to lead the people better to appreciate and prize the Holy Scriptures. It is a rich aid to meditation, if read thoughtfully and prayerfully, and will be loved in proportion as it is used. Chrysostom, Ambrose, Augustine, and Luther have left on record very high tributes to its worth.

It is an acrostic. To make it easier to commit to memory, its contents are broken into a number of short paragraphs, all the verses in each of which begin with the same letter of the Hebrew alphabet.

It is a pleasant exercise to take up the keywords of this Psalm, which occur throughout its texture, and to dwell on them in all the varying lights flashed on them by the context in each several case. Take, for instance, that word Quicken.

The following division, founded on that of Pastor C. A. Davis, is proposed.

1-8. The undefiled, and their blessedness.
9-16. The sanctifying influence of the Word.
17-24. The longings of the holy soul.
25-32. Cry for quickening.
33-40. Faithfulness, the result of the Divine inworking.
41-48. Mercies, and their effect.
49-56. Hope in affliction.
57-64. God our portion.
65-72. A review of the Divine dealings.
73-80. The creature's appeal to its Creator.
81-88. Hope in depression.
89-96. The inimitable Word of God.
97-104. The benefits of pious musing.
105-112. Light for a dark landing

113-120. Human thoughts contrasted with God's Law.
121-128. The plea of the oppressed.
129-136. Thirst for the living God.
137-144. God's righteousness.
145-152. The paragraph of the "Cry."
153-160. An appeal for consideration.
161-168. The believer's eulogy on God's Word.
169-176. A closing appeal.

And it is touching to notice the closing minor cadence, for the loftiest flights of holy rapture must ever come back to a lowly confession of sin and unworthiness (1 Peter ii. 25).

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 6.—Psalm CXX.

This and the following fourteen Psalms are called "Songs of Degrees," or of "Goings Up." They were, perhaps, composed when the Ark was borne to its resting-place. In any case, they became the pilgrim songs of the people, who sang them as they went up from all parts of the country to the annual feasts. May our souls mount up on them as on wings! This Psalm, like so many of David's, seems to refer to Doeg, or a man of his sort, whose lies had brought untold mischief to the singer (1 Sam. xxii. 9).

1. Let those that are in distress lay this testimony to heart. One personal experience is worth tons of exhortation. If you cannot pray, cry.

2. Slander is a vile sin, though even Christian people are not as watchful against it as they should be (James iii.).

3. The strongest treatment is not too much to be meted out to those who forge or circulate untrue statements, or statements the truth of which they have not verified.

4. A figurative intimation of the punishment in reserve for slanderers. As sure as the poisoned arrow shot by an expert takes its victim, revenge shall overtake such offenders against God and man.

5. By a proverbial allusion, an outcast life is described. Denied the joys of home and friendship, and participation in the ordinances of God's house, the believer is very like a wanderer among barbarians.

6, 7. Having opened with a statement of the gracious treatment he received at the hands of the Lord, the Psalmist closes with a contrasted reference to man's ill-treatment of him. He was for peace, but his enemy desired war. In like manner, the Christian is frequently made painfully aware of the contradiction of sinners. (Heb. xii. 3).

By a slip, Ps. ciii. was described as "based on the Hebrew alphabet, the letters of which commence each verse," &c. This is not so. The Psalm has the same number of verses as there are letters in the Hebrew alphabet; but no acrostic order is preserved. The acrostic portions of Holy Scripture are Psalms xxv., xxxiv., xxxvii., cxi., cxii., cxix., cxlv.; Proverbs xxxi. 10-31; Lamentations i., ii., iii., iv.

MR. HENRY THORNE.—The first annual report of the evangelistic work carried on in various parts of the country by Mr. Thorne gives an interesting account of an enterprise full of promise. Mr. Thorne entered upon this work in April, 1889, and in the course of the year visited thirty-three places, some of them more than once, for the purpose of holding missions, addressing meetings, or helping forward the work of the Y.M.C.A. or the Y.W.C.A. Altogether 460 meetings were held in public buildings; the Gospel was also preached in workshops and the open air. The hon. secretary of the work is Mr. W. H. Mills, Exeter Hall, Strand.

POOR FRENCH IN LONDON.—Pasteur G. Barbier continues his work of evangelisation among the poor French of London. The twenty-third annual report records the circumstances under which the chapel and class-rooms in Portland-street are not only used for the ordinary mission purposes, but also to some extent placed at the disposal of the Huguenot French Church, which is in a transition state, owing to the death of M. Daugars, and the removal of the building from St. Martin's-le-Grand. Pasteur Massis, the present minister of the Huguenot Church, co-operates with M. Barbier, and the present amalgamation of the two congregations will, it is believed, prove a blessing, anyhow for a time, to the French residents of the Metropolis. We regret to notice that several agencies of the Mission have of late been languishing for want of financial support. The schools still continue to bear good fruit. M. Barbier's address is 10, Charlotte-street, Great Portland-street, London, W.

JESUS AND ZACCHÆUS THE PUBLICAN.—LUKE xix. 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT: Verse 10.

JERICHO was situated on the road from Perea to Judea and Egypt. It had been considerably embellished by Herod the Great, and was an important city in our Lord's day. It was the centre of an extensive traffic in the balsam which was produced in that district. Recall its former history which had made it so famous (Josh. ii. to vi.; 1 Kings xvi. 34, &c.). Its greatest fame is derived from the visit of Jesus, and the two miracles which He performed there. While on his way to Jerusalem He gave sight to Bartimeus (xviii. 35-43), and salvation to Zacchæus.

The whole incident illustrates the Golden Text. This was our Lord's answer to his murmurers (7), and recalls chapter xv.; while the change which Zacchæus so speedily manifested (8) proved that if Jesus was the Friend of sinners, it was in order to make them saints. The earnest seeking on the part of Zacchæus is explained by the fact that Jesus was seeking him.

I. ZACCHÆUS SEEKING JESUS (2-4).—May learn much from him. Note (1) his condition.—Jesus describes him as "lost" (10). The proud murmurers (7) were as lost as he, but they did not know it. No condition is worse than to be lost and not know it. The term applies to all. What a condition! Picture a lost child, how much distress that means to the child, and to those who love it! That is our condition. (2) His difficulties.—These were many. His occupation.—Every publican was hated and despised, because he was collector for the Roman tax. As the chief over many publicans Zacchæus was regarded with special abhorrence. No occupation can really hinder, if that of Zacchæus did not. His wealth (2).—His position was a lucrative one, and it is suggested (8) that he had yielded to the temptations of his class (iii. 13). After the parable of the rich man (xvi.), and the incident of the rich young ruler (xviii.), there can be no doubt that wealth constitutes a real difficulty (xviii. 25-26). Many think the opposite. When they are free from the care of getting money, then they intend to be Christians, forgetting that money brings with it greater care. The press (3) of people came between him and Jesus. Those who aim to please men who go with the stream are kept back by the crowd (Exod. xxiii. 2, Matt. vii. 13). His stature.—This was a difficulty of another sort—not in his circumstances or surroundings, but in himself: as some plead their temperament and disposition. Let everyone who seeks Christ be prepared for difficulty. (3) His perseverance.—A heart really in earnest will not be kept back by difficulties. No one is unsaved because the difficulties are too great, but because he is not in earnest to overcome them. Zacchæus had perhaps heard of the interest Christ had taken in his class, and feeling his need for something more than his wealth and position could give him, he longed "to see Jesus" (3), and was not to be daunted by difficulties. "He ran" (4) and thus got before the multitude; he climbed the tree, and so got above them. If you are in earnest, get away from and above the influence of those who would keep you from Christ, as Caleb and Joshua escaped the influence of the doubting multitude (Numbers xiii., xiv.). Imitate Zacchæus in seeking diligently (Heb. xi. 6), in striving to enter (xiii. 24).

II. ZACCHÆUS RECEIVING CHRIST (5-6).—For of course the seeker finds. Nothing is more infallibly true than that. For Jesus was just as surely seeking Zacchæus (10). Was it not for his and Bartimæus' sake that He was led to Jericho? The steps in his receiving Jesus were these:—(1) The recognition (5).—Perhaps the people had seen Zacchæus, and were calling attention to him. But Jesus recognised a yearning in Zacchæus which He longed to meet. What a joy, that He similarly knows and understands fully every seeking soul. (2) The call.—There could be no mistaking its application to himself. Not only his name, but his position up the tree, and his desire after Christ, were all in the call. Just as definitely does He call each one. Does not "whosoever" include everyone? (3) The response (6).—How prompt it was. Some are in danger of never receiving the Saviour at all, because they don't "make haste" (Ps. cxix. 60). Delay ruins many souls. How precise it was. He "came down"—accurately obeying the call. In the same way answer the call of Jesus. How joyous.—Nothing can give joy equal to that of receiving Jesus. In Him all fulness dwells. You can never know any want for which He has not supply. Imitate Zacchæus in thus receiving the Saviour.

III. ZACCHÆUS LIVING CHRIST.—We receive Him not merely for pardon, but for life, and the proof of our having received Him is in the fact that we live Him. The murmurers emphasised his sin, but his life immediately proves him a saint. How quickly Jesus effects a change! Zacchæus gives double proof of his conversion. (1) Generosity.—He had found a more costly treasure in Christ. Things you cannot part with now will seem valueless when you possess Him. (2) Restitution.—He exceeded the law's demand (Num. v. 6, 7), except in a special case (Exod. xxii. 1). He does this not to merit salvation, but because he already possesses it (9).

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Christ saves the lost.—When Lady Huntingdon was trying to lead the despondent brother of Whitefield to Christ, he answered: "It is of no use! I am lost—I am lost!" "Thank God for that!" she said. "Why?" the man asked. "Because Christ came to save the lost, and if you are lost, He came to save you."

Receiving Christ humbly.—Gilbert Foliot, Bishop of London, exhorted proud Archbishop à-Becket to humility in these words: "Christ had never dined with Zacchæus, had he not first come down from the sycamore tree."

Restitution.—A boy was so impressed by a sermon that he hastened to pay a farmer for a few apples which he had stolen.

A woman stole a watch while receiving kindness in a gentleman's home. Fifteen years afterwards the watch was restored with a note from this woman, saying the Gospel had changed her heart, and she desired to return the watch to its rightful owner.

ROME A HEATHEN CITY.—A writer in The Northern Christian Advocate gives details of a late visit to Rome. He says that this city, the headquarters of the Papacy, is one of the most heathen cities in the world, and will have to be won back to Christ in exactly the same way as it was seventeen or eighteen centuries ago. The average attendance of all the churches in Rome is only forty each. He concludes: "The work of preaching Jesus will all have to be done over again here; and that is why we write these lines—that to all that be in Rome, beloved of God, there may come from afar, as Paul came of yore, many who will say, 'As much as in me is I am ready to preach the Gospel to them that are at Rome also.' For they need it there if anywhere."

CHURCH AND CHAPEL.—The Bible Christians have opened a chapel at Coombe-Water, in the parish of Cotleigh, near Honiton, Devon. The land was given by Lord Compton, also the sand and stone required for the building. The rector, Rev. John Hawker, has shown great interest in the undertaking, and rejoices to work in perfect harmony with his Dissenting friends. In the arrangement of services, the church and chapel-goers consider one another, so as to prevent clashing; and the love of Christ being shed abroad, a powerful testimony has been borne for God and his righteousness. Blessing has attended the heart-unity thus shown, and the conversions have included cases which can hardly be described except by saying that only the framework of the old man seemed to remain.

THE BRITISH NAVY.—Mr. W. Punter, the Wesleyan Naval Scripture reader at Portsea, is carrying on an excellent work in a quiet way. He holds from eight to twelve meetings weekly on the various ships, visits the hospital regularly, and during the trooping season is brought into contact with from 35,000 to 45,000 men. Men often linger after the proceedings to inquire the way of salvation, and conversions occasionally cheer the worker's heart. Mr. Punter writes: "Recently at the close of one of our meetings two men stayed. I gave them the only Testament I had, and they read John iii., and yielded their hearts to God. A week later they remained behind with four others, and after conversation and prayer each promised, God helping them, to live henceforth for his glory and honour." Mr. Punter says he greatly needs Bibles, Testaments, Gospel books and tracts. His address is 28, Cumberland-street, Portsea.

"A charming collection. . . . While it includes some of the finest compositions of the great masters of sacred song from Watts to Bonar; there are many hymns and tunes in it that will be new to the Christian people of this country; and it may probably surprise most readers to find how prolific and successful Mr. Hammond himself has been in this department of literature. Not a few of his pieces have been suggested by the touching testimonies of children, led under his ministry, to give their hearts to Jesus; and in these strains there is a richly experimental power."—Christian Leader.

The Temperance Cause.

Mr. W. S. Caine is going to India this autumn in the interests of temperance. Canon Wilberforce is expected to proceed to the Antipodes shortly, on a similar errand.

Rev. Thomas Evans, of Mussoorie, writes to The Alliance News that the defeat of the "compensation" project has caused great rejoicing there. Such a proposal, he says, would not be entertained in India.

Rev. John D. Landels, missionary to the New Hebrides, announces that the Australian New Hebrides Company, which has commenced trading in the islands, absolutely refuses to import intoxicating liquors.

Successful open-air meetings, in commemoration of the centenary of Rev. Theobald Mathew, the apostle of temperance, have been held at Larne, Portrush, and Dublin, and a grand celebration of his centenary is to be held in Cork in October.

The American Senate have passed a measure to meet the recent "original package" decision of the Supreme Court, and to enact that all intoxicants sent into any State, in whatever form, shall be subject to the operation of the laws of such State.

A correspondent states that in New Zealand labourers do not consume anything like the amount of intoxicants that the same class do in England. During harvest there, he says, there is seldom any beer or spirits drunk, only tea as an accompaniment to substantial food.

The arrangements for the forthcoming International Temperance Conference at Christiania, Sept. 3, 4, and 5, are now about complete. Among the English visitors will be Drs. B. W. Richardson, Norman Kerr, Canon Leigh, Mr. W. S. Caine, Mr. Joseph Malins, and others.

The Prince of Wales has again been solicited to allow the erection of a public-house on his estate at Sandringham, and has again refused the request. His Royal Highness is not a teetotaller, but he is a prohibitionist to the extent that no drink-shop is allowed at Sandringham.

The Lord Chancellor has recently appointed to the magisterial bench at Rochester Mr. H. L. Dampier, a brewer. Yet how often will Mr. Dampier have to sit in judgment on the debasing effects of his own beer! how often will he be called on to fine and imprison the customers of his customers for supporting what he calls his trade! —Alliance News.

At the Brewster Sessions, Salford, just held, the Manchester Diocesan C.E.T.S. desired to present a memorial to the justices in favour of the restriction of the drink traffic; but on the application of counsel on the other side, it was decided that such memorials were illegal, and could not be received. It was open to any persons directly interested in any case to go into the witness-box and be examined on oath.

We are glad to find that the Brighton magistrates, at the recent sessions, refused almost all the applications for new liquor licences; only three "grocers' licences" were granted. The unpleasant fact remains, however, that a population of about 145,000 has 300 public-houses and 270 beer-houses, in addition to the pernicious "grocers' licences." That the public convenience calls for such a number is surely quite out of the question.

At the Carrubber's Close Mission in Edinburgh recently, Rev. John Smith, Broughton Place U.P. Church, said the overthrow of the recent compensation p oposals was a striking evidence of the power of the great moral and social forces which were at work in the land. He was of opinion that there was an excellent opportunity now to push on temperance reform, and that victory might soon crown their efforts if they did press on the stern battle for the emancipation of the people from the thraldom of strong drink.

The younger members of the W.C.T.U. in Dunedin, New Zealand, have been fighting the drink; but they are not yet victorious. They recently erected, with the permission of the Town Council, a shelter for carters and cabmen, and were rejoiced to find that there was a large demand for the wholesome refreshments supplied. The publican interest was speedily aroused, and, in spite of earnest protests from within and without, the Council resolved that the building should be removed. This has been done, to the grief of the cabmen and carters, as well as the friends of temperance reform.

What our public men (says the Australian Christian World) must face is the fact that the liquor traffic is incompatible with progress and good order in any community. No matter how carefully we regulate the traffic; no matter how eager we are to get only good men to act as publicans; no matter how stringent we make the law against adulteration; we shall never be safe until the traffic itself is swept away. If temperance reformers are wise in their generation, they will avoid all mere useless contests, and give their whole time and strength to the political education of the people. Parliament has given the traffic its present power for evil; and what Parliament gave it can and must take away.

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children."

THREE THOUSAND FIVE HUNDRED rescued Boys and Girls are now in the "Homes," requiring maintenance, clothing, education and industrial training.

Throughout the summer months, and especially during the absence of Dr. Barnardo, now engaged in visiting the Distributing and Farm Homes in Canada, it is no easy thing to supply the daily wants of this large family.

Friends in sympathy with the work of Rescue and Training carried on by these Institutions, are EARNESTLY INVITED TO CONTRIBUTE PROMPTLY towards their present urgent necessities.

Donations will be gratefully received and acknowledged, if addressed to the Treasurer, Mr. William Fowler, or to Dr. Barnardo, at the Chief Offices, 18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

THE WORLD WIDE PRAYER UNION FOR THE SECOND COMING OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST.

Week of Prayer in Clapham Road Conference Hall,

OCTOBER 18 to 25 INCLUSIVE.

On Sunday 19th, Sermons will be preached on the Coming of the Lord, and the Lord's Supper administered at Evening Service in Christ Church, Brixton. Vicar—Rev. CANON HUSSEY.

Meetings from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily, during the week, with intervals for refreshments.

MEMBERS of the Union are affectionately invited to attend this gathering.

They are earnestly reminded of the appeal of David: "Why speak ye not a word of bringing back the King? ye are my brethren: ye are my bones and my flesh, wherefore then are ye the last to bring back the King?" —2 Sam. xix. 11-12.

THE LORD'S REMEMBRANCERS are entreated to unite, in obedience to the commands: "KEEP NOT SILENCE. GIVE HIM NO REST, TILL HE ESTABLISH, AND TILL HE MAKE JERUSALEM A PRAISE IN THE EARTH." —Isa. lxii. 6-7, and to seek the blessing promised to those that love and pray for the peace of Jerusalem.

To the Servants of Christ watching for their Master: To the Bride waiting for her Lord: To the Virgins trimming their lamps: the cry comes, "Be ye ready!"

Many who are "looking for the blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Saviour" are realizing that the Signs of this event, given in the Sure Word of Prophecy, are being manifested.

They desire to assemble themselves together, and "so much the more as they see the day approaching."

Many Friends have signified their intention to be present.

Differences of Prophetic Interpretation need not keep apart those who are of one accord in prayer for the "blessed hope" of the Church.

The opportunity for United Prayer will be made as practicable as possible.

Tickets for the Meeting may be had from the Office, 143, Clapham Road, S.W.

Lodgings, near Conference Hall, can be obtained by stating the required accommodation.

Luncheons at 1/6, and Tea at 9d. will be provided.

Secretary, REV. N. S. TAYLOR,
5, Sydenham Terrace. Babbicombe, Torquay.

PULVERMACHER'S

WORLD-FAMED

GALVANIC BELTS,

FOR the CURE of NERVOUS DISEASES,

HAVE RECEIVED TESTIMONIALS from

FIFTY MEMBERS of the ROYAL COLLEGE of PHYSICIANS of LONDON, including

THREE PHYSICIANS to

HER MAJESTY the QUEEN.

RECENT TESTIMONIALS.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

Bootle, near Liverpool, July 14, 1860.

Dear Sir,—It [illegible] you [illegible] I have derived much benefit from your Belt, although I do not wear it [illegible] Yours truly, J. D. J.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, London, W.

GALVANISM v. KIDNEY DISEASE AND NEURALGIA.

Berry-street, Wolverhampton, July 9, 1860.

Dear Sir,—My friend, for whom I purchased your Belt, was suffering from Kidney Disorder, and although the time is so short, he already feels benefit from wearing it. The following, however, he particularly wishes me to mention. He lent the Belt to a friend who had been suffering a long time [illegible] and after wearing it for one night the pain has altogether ceased. This patient had tried a great many remedies without getting any relief, and I am confident it will lead to other orders.—Yours faithfully, M. Mears.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher & Co., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. EXTREME NERVOUS DEPRESSION.

Moor Allerton, Leeds, July 5, 1860.

Gentlemen,—I have great pleasure in volunteering a testimonial in favour of your galvanic appliances.

For more than ten years I have suffered from acute nervous headaches and severe nervous depression, making away all pleasure in life and almost unfitting me for business pursuits.

Doctors of eminence have prescribed for me without avail, and a long sea voyage had not the desired result.

Last autumn I commenced to use your Galvanic Bands and Battery, with the most satisfactory results. My headaches gradually diminished, and my nerve force and energy have returned. I consider your appliances in my case to be invaluable, and I do not hesitate to recommend them.

I prefer that you should not publish my name, but you can refer anyone to me whom you may think fit.—Yours obediently, W. J. C.

Messrs. J. L. Pulvermacher & Co., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. LOCAL WEAKNESS.

Liverpool, June 20, 1860.

Dear Sir,—You will be pleased to hear that I am regaining my health and vigour fast, and have lost all the pain in the back. Your treatment has indeed been to me the pearl of great price, and has succeeded in stopping the waste and decay from which I was suffering. I will answer any inquiries through you, and beg to remain, Yours truly, J. P.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

Carmarthen Infirmary, South Wales, June 15, 1860.

Dear Sir,—Since I purchased your Galvanic Belt my health has greatly improved, and I do not think could do [illegible] any time in the [illegible] without it. You are at liberty to make what use you please of this testimony by private letter to any inquirer.

Yours very truly, R. Day.

Messrs. Pulvermacher & Co., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, LOSS of MUSCULAR POWER, DEBILITY, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of PULVERMACHER'S world-famed GALVANIC BELT, which [illegible] the electric current direct to the affected part, gradually and [illegible] restoring all [illegible] speedily arresting all symptoms of premature waste and decay.

From the AUTHOR,

MR. GEORGE THOS. CONGREVE,

Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E.

ONE RECENT CASE WILL BE GIVEN IN THIS JOURNAL EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

DISEASED LUNGS—CASE of a YOUNG PERSON at RIPLEY.

The patient is a young woman about 20 years of age; Miss C. E. Ball, then at Greenwick, near Ripley, and now, for some time past, in service.

My correspondent is Mr. W. B. BEMBRIDGE, of the firm of Bembridge and Cox, Ripley, near Derby, and a friend of my old friend, Rev. S. Allsopp, of Burton. This gentleman has kindly interested himself on behalf of several cases.

In first introducing this case to my notice, Mr. Bembridge writes:—"A dear girl, one of our young members, aged 17, has come home to die unless we can save her by your kind agency and medicine."

Notes of the case.—"Consumption in the family; patient took a chill five months before this. Sore throat. Short breathing, feebleness, and cough. Cough attended with yellow expectoration. Pains in the chest and side, palpitations. Strength gradually declining. Losing flesh all over the body. Dr. E., of Nottingham, reports her lungs to be diseased. "Most decidedly marked mischief in the upper left."

In six weeks Mr. B. reports:—"She has not lost any flesh. Her cough is better."

The patient continued under my treatment for about six months. From time to time I received favourable reports of her.

I had a letter from Mr. Bembridge, April 26, of this year, in which he says:—"C. E. Ball continues sound and healthy, though not very strong. She has been in a light situation for 12 months past."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

PASTOR BLUMHARDT and HIS WORK. By Rev. W. GUEST. A descriptive account of the remarkable work of FAITH HEALING carried on first at Möttlingen, and subsequently at Bad Boll. With Introduction by Rev. C. H. BLUMHARDT. With Portrait. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s.

"This book contains some most remarkable things.... It will be read with considerable interest; and the Christian reader will be compelled to exclaim, 'What hath God wrought!'"—Baptist Messenger.

18th Thousand.

DOROTHEA TRÜDEL: or, The Prayer of Faith. With Engraved Portrait. Cloth boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d. Cheap Edition: Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Tinted covers, 1s.

"DOROTHEA TRUDEL appears to have been a simple-minded woman, of remarkable devotedness and faith. She became deeply penetrated with the striking passage in the Epistle of James, 'The prayer of faith shall save the sick.' Led by circumstances to minister to the afflicted, she carried into practical action the settled conviction of her heart; and in hundreds of cases soul and body were alike healed without other visible means."—Record.

"This most interesting volume contains a number of remarkable cases where sick persons were healed in answer to special prayer."—British Messenger.

"A touching narrative of the simple faith and devoted piety of one who effected in Switzerland hundreds of most extraordinary and well authenticated cures of mental and bodily diseases."—Christian World.

JOHN B. GOUGH. An Autobiography. COPYRIGHT Edition. Revised by HIMSELF. Superior Edition: With Life-like Portrait, and Three Full-page Illustrations. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. Cheap Edition: With Portrait. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

"This Autobiography should be read and re-read. It is the record of a life as strange and eventful as it is impressive and instructive. . . . The book, apart from its value as a beacon to warn and a light to guide, is studded with passages of beauty—word-pictures which are not easily forgotten."—Temperance Record.

8th Thousand.

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE. Chats with the Children about Bible Birds. By JAMES BOWKER, F.R.G.S I. Handsomely printed on Fine Paper, with Carmine Borders. With Beautiful Coloured Frontispiece, and numerous other Engravings. Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"Mr. BOWKER knows much about the birds; and he makes his feathered favourites teach many a sweet lesson. By all means let the children have this prettily-written and prettily-illustrated book."

British Messenger.

PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY. By A. L. O. E. With attractive Frontispiece in Colour. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"Percival is a bright, gifted, true-hearted young artist. His 'PICTURE GALLERY' consists of representations of Scripture incidents from the Old and New Testaments, which are here delightfully narrated, and no less clearly expounded. For the young the volume will prove deeply interesting and instructive."

The Baptist Messenger.

PEARLS OF WISDOM from THE PARABLES OF CHRIST. By A. L. O. E. Illustrated with twenty-four full-page Original Drawings. Cloth boards, 3s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 4s.

"This unique volume is sure to be popular. What the 'Schönberg Cotta Family' is to the Reformation; what the 'Prince of the House of David' is to the days of Christ; and what the 'Pillar of Fire' is to the Israelites in the Wilderness—this book is in a certain sense to Christ's Parables."—The Christian Commonwealth.

PEARLS OF WISDOM from THE PARABLES OF CHRIST. By A. L. O. E. These "Pearls of Wisdom" may also be had in a Series of Eight-page Illustrated Booklets, suitable for enclosing in letters, or for General Distribution. Well adapted also for Sunday-school rewards. Price 6d. per Packet of 24 Tracts.

"The teachings of Jesus are admirably set forth in these attractive little books, enriched with choice Illustrations."—Christian Chronicle.

CHRIST LIFTED UP. By Rev. R. GILCHRIST. Superior Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d. Cheap Edition: Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.

"Its spiritual qualities are of high order. Its theology is of the good old evangelical school, and its fervid piety will not fail to commend it."—Liverpool Daily Chronicle.

"It abounds with powerful representations of vital truth, and interesting narrations of personal experience and providential dealing. Much profit may be gained from its perusal."—Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

10th Thousand.

ADDRESSES TO YOUNG MEN. By Rev. DANIEL BAKER. With Preface by D. L. MOODY. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"Young men ought to devour this work. It costs but eighteenpence, and yet it is worth its weight in gold. To heed its counsel would be to be saved from many a folly, expense, shame, and to have the character steadied, strengthened, beautified."—Oldham Chronicle.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS. Types and Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption. By Rev. JAMES FLEMING, D.D. With Frontispiece Illustration of the Tabernacle, according to the Projection of Mr. Fergusson. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d. Cheap Edition: Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

"There is no book of Scripture in which there are more of the very words of God than in Leviticus. He is everywhere the Speaker in it. There are accordingly no fewer than twenty, of the twenty-seven chapters of which it consists, that begin with the words, "And the Lord spake."—Preface.

7th Thousand.

BRINGING IN SHEAVES: A Record of Evangelistic Labours. By Rev. A. B. EARLE. With Biographical Sketch of the Author. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"There is much in this volume that could not fail to stimulate and encourage. It is prefaced by a singularly interesting sketch of the author, who appears to be a man of remarkable devotedness, combined with great earnestness."—Preacher's Lantern.

LONDON: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C. And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

ROBERT ANNAN: The Christian Hero.
By Rev. J. MACPHERSON. ILLUSTRATED. (150,000.)
"A striking example of the power of divine grace, exhibited in the conversion and devoted life of Robert Annan—a Christian Hero indeed."—Gospel Magazine.
"It is a book to be read by all, but especially adapted to do good to the working classes." Baptist Messenger.
In speaking of the MARATHAI TRANSLATION the Bombay Guardian says:—
"It is the memoir of a man who for many years was the slave of sin, was powerfully converted to God, and during the remainder of his life was characterised by singular devotedness to the service of God and his fellow-men."

TELL JESUS: Recollections of Emily Gosse.
By ANNA SHIPTON. ILLUSTRATED. (50,000.)
"Presents us with notices of a life spent in loving, intimate, and uninterrupted communion with a personal Lord. . . . We have read the book with deep interest. We would that indolent professors might read it and be quickened, and that suffering saints might read it and be comforted."—Christian Times.
"Calculated to produce a certain impression upon the hearts of true Christians that will be greatly beneficial to them."—Sword and Trowel.
"We have read this work with interest. It contains much that is suggestive and important." Gospel Magazine.

JOHN B. GOUGH, The Great Temperance Orator.
ILLUSTRATED. (50,000.)
"An admirable pennyworth, giving a clear and well told account of Mr. Gough's early sorrows and sins, and the great deliverance God wrought for him."—Christian Miscellany.
"An illustrated sketch of this remarkable man. It is a marvellous pennyworth, and ought to sell by scores of thousands."—Gospel Magazine.
"This brief sketch has all the charm of a romance, combined with the force of argument and impassioned appeal."—Irish Baptist Magazine.
"This should command an immense circulation, and should do immense good."—Baptist Messenger.
"A capital illustrated Life of the great temperance orator for ONE PENNY." Presbyterian Messenger.
"It is written in an attractive style; large in size; clearly printed in readable type; and contains several Illustrations. It is a wonderful pennyworth, and deserves to be distributed by thousands." Nonconformist.

TRACTS by D. L. MOODY.

Small 8vo., 16 pages. Suitable for either Giving or Lending.

The same pointed style of speech, the same "hard hitting," the same directness of appeal, will be found in these Tracts, as were so manifest in MR. MOODY'S Platform Addresses. There are very many passages in these Tractates that will make the ears tingle, and force conviction to the conscience as powerfully and as effectually as the most stirring utterances from pulpit or from platform.

CHRIST ALL IN ALL.

"Christ is not only all these things I have mentioned—our Saviour, our Way, our Keeper, our Shepherd. He is also our Mediator, our Sanctifier, our Justifier; in fact, it would take all day to tell what He desires to be to every one of us."—Extract.

Price One Penny; or 7s. 6d. per 100.
Six copies sent post free for Sixpence.

JACOB: His Life and Character.

"Jacob was one of those men who are always making a bargain. He could trust the Lord as far as he could see Him, and no further. He was one of those earthly-minded saints who are all the time walking by sight and not by faith."—Extract.

Price One Penny; or 7s. 6d. per 100.
Six copies sent post free for Sixpence.

PLAIN WORDS ON CONVERSION

"There is a class who are afraid that they won't hold out. God can do what He has done before. He kept Joseph in Egypt; Moses before Pharaoh; and Daniel in Babylon. They were men of like passions to ourselves; it was God who made them so great. What man wants to do is to look to God."—Extract.

Price One Penny; or 7s. 6d. per 100.
Six copies sent post free for Sixpence.

LOT: A Glance at a Wasted Life.

"Lot was one of those men determined to die rich. . . There is many a man determined to be rich, even though he has to take his children into temptation."—Extract.

Price One Penny; or 7s. 6d. per 100.
Six copies sent post free for Sixpence.

"DARE TO BE A DANIEL!"

"My friends, are you ready to stand up for God? Have you 'purposed in your heart' that you will not defile yourself with the things of the world, because you are determined to take your stand for God in this life? It is the noblest and best thing a man can do!"

Price One Penny; or 7s. 6d. per 100.
Six copies sent post free for Sixpence.

JOHN THE BAPTIST:
The Wilderness Preacher.

'He had no prestige in Jerusalem, nor any influential committee meetings. He was simply John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness . . . He asked no favours; he talked plainly; and called things by their right names."
Extract.

Price One Penny; or 7s. 6d. per 100.
Six copies sent post free for Sixpence.

NAAMAN, THE SYRIAN.

"Naaman was one who was a great man in his own country, and very honourable; one whom the king delighted to honour. But he was a leper. If he was to get rid of the leprosy the power must come from 'on high.'"—Extract.

Price One Penny; or 7s. 6d. per 100.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Mr. R. C. L. BEVAN, Banker and Philanthropist.

The Chairman of the Jewish Board of Guardians in the East-end of London has published some interesting figures, which go to prove that the Jews leave Great Britain in larger numbers than those who arrive. Mr. Cohen also shows that the Jews in the East-end are thrifty and creditable members of the community. Mr. Cohen's statistics are valuable in the direction of removing mischievous misapprehension with reference to a very interesting section of the Jewish race.

In a letter to The Daily Graphic, Mrs. Lynn Linton expatiates in strong language on "the immorality of cheapness." She is very severe on the rich folk who patronise "the Stores" in order to save a shilling in the pound on purchases, while the small traders are ruined for loss of custom. Cheap prices and bad materials go together, while both are nationally hurtful and personally degrading. It cannot be denied that much of her philippic is founded on fact, and, with Mrs. Linton, we should hail a return to "the grand old generosities of a braver time." At any rate, if we cannot be generous, let us be just.

We observe with some satisfaction that the licensing magistrates and justices in different parts of the country are showing an unwonted desire to bring the number of licensed public-houses into more correspondence with what are called "the needs of the population." The real needs of the people in this matter would make great havoc in the ranks of drink-shops, but the difficulty lies in suppressing some, while others are allowed to continue their hurtful traffic. If magistrates and police will act with vigilance in weeding out those houses that permit betting, as well as excessive drinking, they will do something in the right direction.

Readers of recent numbers of The Standard would observe in its late successive issues what it terms a "surprising flood of correspondence" called forth by a letter of Bishop Mitchinson on "Uncongregational Singing." In seventeen of these letters, which we have read, the preponderating protest is against the monopolising of musical worship by a choir, and in some of them are strong pleas against the growing helplessness of clergy and people in parish churches. The fount of the evil does not, however, seem to have been noticed. So long as congregational singing, both in churches and in chapels, ceases to be for "the praise and glory of God" as it used to be, and, according to the modern fashion, is meant to exhibit musical skill and for the gratification of man, so long will this degrading idea of Psalmody bring forth "floods" of dissatisfaction and complaint.

Monasteries and nunneries are springing up silently in not a few districts of Southern England. This points to the foothold which Rome is insidiously gaining in a land in which an open Bible has hitherto been the foundation of its liberties. It is stated that the Trappists are about to establish a monastery in Essex, and we cannot regard the migration with satisfaction. The present day is not one for silence, but rather for vigorous speech and decided action.

"Vigilans," writing to The Bournemouth Observer, quotes one of its correspondents who advocates "Sacramental teaching," and who says :—

> "Unhappily Bournemouth can no longer be said to retain its leading position among watering places for [such] Church teaching and Church privileges." "We are truly thankful to hear it," says "Vigilans," and adds, "The churches in Bournemouth which do not enjoy this writer's approval, and are therefore unworthy to be mentioned by him, may thank God for the better teaching they enjoy, and should carefully guard against compromising their principles." At a conference of the (Roman) "Catholic Truth Society" held at Birmingham recently, under the auspices of the late Cardinal Newman and Bishop Ilsley, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford is reported to have said, "The Bishops, Ministers and people of the Established Church are busily engaged in ignoring or denouncing those very articles which were drawn up to be their eternal protest against the old religion, the Sacramental Power of Orders, the Real Presence, the Daily Sacrifice, Auricular Confession, Prayers for the Dead, Belief in Purgatory, Invocation of the Blessed Virgin and the Saints, Religious Vows, and the institution of Monks and Nuns—the very doctrines stamped in the Thirty-Nine Articles as 'fond fables' and 'blasphemous deceits.' All these were now openly taught from a thousand pulpits within the Establishment, and as heartily embraced by as many crowded congregations."

This is plain and outspoken: will some of our "thoroughly Catholic Churchmen" (asks "Vigilans") speak out and tell us whether this is true, or a libel upon their English Churchmanship?

An instance of the unreasonable lengths to which Roman Catholics are capable of pushing their claims for tolerance is furnished by the case of an Industrial School at Blackburn, which has remained unopened for several months owing to the obstructive demands of the two priests on the School Board. These priests claimed that full instruction in the dogmas and observances of the Church of Rome should be provided, by means of a schoolmistress, for the children whose parents are, or are reputed to be, Roman Catholics—and this at the expense of the ratepayers, even to the cost of manuals, images, pictures, &c. Defeated on the School Board, they laid their complaints before the Roman Catholic Home Secretary, who paid more heed to them than to the majority of the Board, and required the expunging of a rule which had been made limiting the books to be used in the Roman Catholic teaching to the Douay Bible, in order that the priests might introduce whatever manual they pleased.

As a solution of the difficulty the School Board have made a rule that religious instruction shall be given to the children for half an hour daily, during which time the Roman Catholic children may receive "religious instruction from a minister of that religious persuasion," and the rule limiting the books to be used therein has been rescinded. Yet, although the consciences of the Roman Catholic parents are thus respected, and their rights completely safeguarded, the priests consider themselves still aggrieved because the Board declines to appoint a Roman Catholic schoolmistress and to provide for a priest occasionally visiting the school "to see that the teacher is not unfairly treated." It is hoped that the Home Secretary will no longer support the ill-advised conduct of his co-religionists, but accept the regulations and allow the much-needed school to be opened. The incident conveys a warning as to the kind of civil and religious tolerance which might be expected in the case of Roman Catholic ascendency.

The lately issued report of the House of Commons Committee on Infant Life Protection forms an important contribution to the literature of social questions, and will, it is hoped, form the basis of early remedial legislation. The subject is intimately connected with that of child-insurance, which, however, was only incidentally touched upon by this Committee, whose main object was to consider the best means of stopping the habitual evasions of the Infant Life Protection Act of 1872, which provides for the registration of all houses where more than one child under twelve months old is kept for hire or reward to the guardian.

That these evasions are numerous and ingenious, resulting in the gathering together in one house of several children, neglected, ill-fed, and barely kept alive, was abundantly shown in evidence. As a remedy, the Committee recommend that the Act of 1872 be extended as to age, and that it be made applicable to single children. But, in order not to hamper the deserving poor, or to deter conscientious persons who take charge of children under the auspices of boarding-out societies, or other good institutions, exemptions are recommended which will protect those cases where inspection is already provided for, and also those numerous instances among the working classes in which the person receiving the child can show a previous knowledge of or interest in it or its parents.

Proofs accumulate as to the failure of the potato crop in Ireland, and the coming winter is sure to bring much misery, if not actual starvation, into many humble homes. Wisdom will be needed, no doubt, in grappling with the crisis so as to meet real need, without producing social or national demoralisation. Political troubles must retire to the background in the face of widespread hunger. At the same time we are hopeful that practical kindness shown during a time of distress will serve to pave the way for larger Gospel endeavour.

It is satisfactory to learn from the twenty-eighth annual report of the Reformatory and Industrial Schools of Ireland that the number of inmates of the reformatory schools in that country has fallen from 1160 in 1880 to 763 in 1889, and that during the last five years two reformatory schools have surrendered their certificates. The statistics given also show a decrease in the number of juvenile convictions. It is worthy of notice that according to this report there has been a proportionate decrease in adult crime, and it is claimed that the reformatory schools have been largely instrumental in thus reducing the supply to the ordinary prisons.

If these statements are to be relied upon, Ireland may be congratulated on presenting a pleasing contrast to our own country, in which the number of adult offenders is on the increase. With respect to the careers of the children after their discharge from the schools, 80 per cent. of boys, and 81 per cent. of girls from reformatories, and 90 and 96 per cent. respectively from industrial schools, are reported as doing well. In the light of these figures there is not much fault to be found with the working of a system which claims to have been the means since its institution of presenting the State with nineteen thousand honest workers.

Although notices respecting the Jews have been frequent in these columns, it is impossible to pass over the recent references to them in Continental journals. We are told that Israelitish barristers and law students flood Germany, and edit half the German-speaking periodicals; that they conduct sixty per cent. of the newspapers in Vienna; and that whereas they numbered in Hungary, in 1869, a quarter of a million, they now number 700,000. But other facts give significance to these things. Men of sceptical tendencies, whose whole thought is bounded by this world's horizon, are becoming arrested by this growing Israelitish influence; by the drawing together of Jews; by their unique ambition of a coming supremacy, and by their conviction that a great mission is given to them. Mysterious but undoubted fact! spite of their unbelief and prevailing plutocracy, the Jews are the world's witness against infidelity, and teach that human history is incomplete.

Principal Cairns, writing to The Free Church Monthly from Berlin, conveys a decided impression of a growing reaction against the bald and chilling rationalism which has prevailed in the pulpits and Universities of Germany and Holland. After listening to lectures and sermons in both countries, and especially in Berlin and Halle, he has taken note of a marked current towards the old theology. In one of the large churches of Amsterdam, which was crowded, he witnessed what was more like a religious revival than anything he had ever seen. Happily, error always overshoots its mark, and originates a rebound.

Surely a rebound must follow such teaching as the following, of which a correspondent in an Episcopal journal tells its readers with reference to St. Margaret's, Liverpool. The first thing seen on entering the edifice was an image of Christ and the Madonna. The service opened by the lighting of candles after the Romish model. The prayers were in a monotone, and among them a hymn describing the dead saints as intercessors. Then came the sermon, in which the preacher told the women (for few men were present) that the Apostles were sent, not to teach, but to found a society, with its authority, sacraments, &c.; that outside this society there was no salvation, and that such a man as the jailer was saved in Philippi, not by his belief on the Lord Jesus Christ, but by his being introduced to the Church through baptism. It is hard to say whether the preacher believed all this himself, but the duty is clear to call attention to what is going on, not in the Established Church generally, it is true, but in certain places.

Dr. McCosh, of Princeton, New Jersey, has called attention to a great danger attending young foreigners who go to Germany to complete their education. He says:—

> Erastianism [making the Church subservient to the State] is still universally prevalent in Germany. The people, though they may be allowed at times to express their preferences, have no positive or direct power in the choice of their ministers. The civil authorities with whom the power of appointment and management lies, are not necessarily professing much less living Christians, or possessed of any spiritual discernment. Not unfrequently pastors are placed over parishes who are known to have no belief in the inspiration of Scripture, or, indeed, in the truth of Christianity. The worst of all is that the professors of theology who prepare young men for the ministry are all appointed by the civil authorities, and are subjected to no test of doctrine. The wildest pantheism, the barest agnosticism may be taught without any restriction being laid on them or any penalty being imposed.

It is not surprising that some of the many English-speaking students in Germany should be carried away by the aberrations of Erastian teachers. Indoctrinated in a philosophy which lands them in an unsubstantial idealism, they easily give their assent to a theology equally ideal, and not founded upon Scripture. Dr. McCosh urges English-speaking theological professors to cultivate an erudition equal to that of the Germans. He also maintains that young men should be thoroughly trained in the truth before they go to Germany.

There must be two opinions with respect to the article in the current Fortnightly Review on immorality among all social classes in Russia. It is inexpressibly terrible. Some persons will offer reasons which go to justify, and others reasons which condemn the publication of such a revolting revelation. It may be hoped that there will be a contradiction of such general and grave charges. The writer, nevertheless, supports his allegations by manifold authorities, and adds:—

> English readers cannot realise the profound bitterness of heart with which a Russian who loves his country discusses these things, even with his fellow-countrymen. It is gall and wormwood to write of them to foreigners. But there is no other way of influencing rulers who are impervious to shame. The Government is responsible for a state of things which every honest Russian admits to be a scandalous disgrace to the civilised world...The ordinary Russian knows no better, and it is forbidden to teach him.

India is gradually becoming a nation of readers. Hindoos and Mohammedans of influence, as well as the Government and the Missionary Societies, are putting forth efforts for the education of the population. Obviously the Press must be largely used if the reading millions are to be brought into touch with Christianity. Rev. T. Craven, of Calcutta, urges that to spread a correct knowledge of the Gospel, economically and to the best possible advantage, the Press must be more than ever brought into use. In a communication to us, he says:—

> The Pagan and Atheistic Press is to the front in India. The Christian Press must be ahead of it. It is lost ink to print polemics, as well as lost breath to preach polemics generally. By being "ahead" is meant, printing more of the wonderful things of God, than the anti-Christian Press prints of its ribaldry in India.

Bishop Thoburn's sermonettes are issued weekly in five languages, and circulated to the extent of 50,000 copies in various parts of India. But what is this number among the many millions of people?

Dr. G. F. Pentecost has now completed the arrangements for the evangelistic tour in India which he and some helpers are about to make. He sails from America on September 6, and expects to leave London for India by s.s. Khedive on October 16. A small party will accompany Dr. Pentecost at first, but others are ready to follow. An earnest and sustained effort will be made to reach with the Gospel message as far as possible, not only the Anglo-Indians and Eurasians, but the five millions of natives who are familiar with the English language. This is a large undertaking, and the workers will need all the prayerful sympathy of Christians on both sides of the sea. We are sure our readers will not fall behind in sustaining the hands of Dr. Pentecost and his friends by continued believing petition to God for a rich blessing on their labours. Lord Kinnaird, 2, Pall Mall East, London, S.W., will answer any inquiries of those interested in the movement.

Mr. Plimsoll's protest as to the dangers of overloading ships has been singularly strengthened by the lately issued report of the Board of Trade as to recorded casualties of vessels in the timber trade. That report (says The Times) fully justifies existing legislative restrictions on the carrying of deck cargo, and would warrant Parliament in making still more stringent regulations:—

> The whole record is not calculated to make men feel easy as they lie abed in winter nights and think of frail schooners and crazy brigs making there uncertain way from St. John or Demerara in bad weather. It gives one a shock to pass from the returns of the voyages of the Atlantic liners, swift, regular, and safe, to the crowded record of disasters which we read in this report. But a word of comfort is permissible—there is no ground for suspecting that things are getting worse. On the contrary, it is clear that they are mending. The loss of life reached its maximum in 1881, and since then there has been a fairly steady decline.

The closing observation is so far satisfactory; but it is clear that continued vigilance is required to safeguard the safety of seamen's lives. Competition and greed are ever-present factors in the struggle, and the friends of Jack must be equally on the alert.

BUDAPEST.—The Scottish mission at Budapest, which is doing good work there, is about to open a second hall in one of the principal thoroughfares of the Hungarian capital. The first meeting will be held on the 5th inst.

HE THREE GARDENS.

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

HE GARDEN WHERE THEY LAID HIM.

OWLY the two disciples return to their dging in the city, John, at least, with a eat hope in his heart; while Mary lingers hind in the garden, unable to tear herself vay from the place where the Lord had in. Love and grief detained her, together ith some unbreathed hope in her heart. e picture to ourselves the bright, fresh wn, the balmy air, the blue dome above, e vernal bloom all around, the joyous orning songs—and a woman beside an npty grave, not merely shedding tears, t lifting up her voice and weeping aloud, e Rachel weeping for her children gone to captivity.

In the gush of her sorrow, she stooped wn that she might look into the sepulchre. ow perfectly natural her act was does not quire to be shown; we understand it at ce by the impulse that sends us again and ain to gaze upon the face of our beloved ad, and to kiss clay-cold lips. It is not id that she had looked in before, but only at she saw that the stone was taken away. however, she had already looked in, she d seen nothing. This time her gaze is not fruitful; she sees two angels in white, ting the one at the head, the other at the t, where the body of Jesus had lain. ey had been invisible to Peter and John; ey had been invisible to Mary herself till w; just as, until his eyes were opened, e prophet's servant could not see that the ole mountain was full of horses and ariots of fire round about; for the seeing pends on the eye. They are clothed, t in mourning robes of sackcloth, but white, the lustrous attire of joy and aven. They sit, as if their service were w accomplished and they waited to be estioned. Their aspect is not terrible to r, but benignant and gracious. We are t told whether she recognised them at the ne for angels, or whether it was after-owledge; from the manner in which she eaks to them, it would rather seem that e converses with them "unawares," and nks only of mortals like herself—if, in-ed, her absorbing emotion permits any nking on the subject whatsoever. At all ents she is not terrified; she does not cry ; she expresses no surprise or astonish-nt; she speaks to them just the same as she l already spoken to Peter and John. The e thought, Where is my Lord? excludes ery other.

Compassionately and tenderly they in-re of her, "Woman, why weepest thou?" os and tears are no strange phenomena the grave's mouth. And yet, if she had derstood the angels aright, she would have derstood them to mean, "Refrain thy ce from weeping and thine eyes from rs," for He whom thou lamentest is ome back from the land of the enemy." t she does not understand this, and so she swers, "Because they have taken away Lord, and I know not where they have l Him." She speaks with the touching plicity of a child. Jesus is still "my rd" to her; and she feels herself robbed he last treasure of her heart. Ah, if she l found the Lord where she sought Him, ad been a sorrow indeed!

We wonder what purpose this interview Mary with the angels served. They ng her no comfort. They give her no information. They merely ask her a question and get a reply, and that is all. As we read on, our wonder disappears. "He is not here; He is risen as He said," seems trembling on their lips, just waiting to be spoken; but, ere they have time to speak, another Comforter interposes, who, Joseph-like, can refrain Himself no longer, and who is jealous to wipe away her tears with his own hand.

It came about in this way. In a fresh outburst of grief was it?—or did something in the eye of the angel bid her look round? or was there a mysterious consciousness of another presence, such as we have all experienced at times?—she turned and saw Jesus standing, but knew Him not. The non-recognition is not surprising. She was seeking Him among the dead, and not expecting to see Him alive; it was but a momentary side-glance that she cast upon Him, and not full-front scrutiny. She looked through the dimming veil of tears, and seems to have resumed her former posture almost at once. Beside all this, the face present to her memory might be the face she had last seen on Calvary, in the sun's eclipse; whereas He has now ceased to be the Man of Sorrows, and his aspect would necessarily be different in the calm of the eternal peace. One does not wonder, therefore, that she did not immediately recognise Him. It has been the same with ourselves a thousand times. Our blessed Lord has been with us, close by our side, and yet we have gone on wailing in blind sorrow, "O that I knew where I might find Him!"

"Woman, why weepest thou? Whom seekest thou?" the Stranger asks. They are the first words of the risen Lord, and are exhaustless in their suggestion. He speaks very kindly, yet not as to one with whom He stands in any special personal relationship; it is not "Mary," but "Woman." And He will have her tell her sorrow in her own way. There is a grief as well as a joy with which a stranger doth not intermeddle, and kindly meant questions may be so put as to wound hearts and close them against the questioner; but this Stranger's tone is so sympathetic and gracious, and at the same time so suggestive of ability in some way to comfort her, that her heart cannot but open to Him. Supposing Him to be the gardener, and unconsciously taking for granted that everyone must be thinking of Jesus, as she herself was, she says, "Sir, if thou have borne Him hence"—thou, and not his enemies—"tell me where thou hast laid Him, and I (I myself) will take Him away." Nothing could be conceived more artless and true to life.

Jesus says to her "Mary." It is not, I am He whom thou seekest, or, as once on the Galilean lake, "It is I; be not afraid." He only names her name, as He used to do, in the old familiar tone. Instantly the truth flashes upon her, and, with a sudden cry of rapture, she answers "Rabboni." The recognition is one of those swift things that are completed in a moment, with one great beat of the heart. The Evangelist gives the very word she uttered and in which her joy was expressed, the word "Rabboni," belonging to the sacred tongue. It is, indeed, the word of the past rather than of the future. It tells what He had been to her as the Teacher and Guide of her soul. It is as yet chiefly his words that have impressed her—those wondrous "words of eternal life," so many of which are treasured up for us in the Gospels. "Never man," said the rough officers who on one occasion were sent to capture Him and who came back without Him—"Never man spake like this Man"; and their saying has been repeated by thousands upon thousands, wise and simple, refined and rude, learned and ignorant, nobly-born, and blue-bonneted peasants, till it has become a sacred common-place. In the time to come Jesus shall be more than Rabboni to this loving soul, as to all the disciples. In the time to come they shall own Him, not merely as the Master, but as the Son of God, the Brightness of the Father's glory, and the Express Image of his person, the Almighty Saviour of the lost, the Lord of their conscience and will.

Mary speaks only one word: she can speak no more. When the soul is made to thrill at once through its every fibre with some mighty emotion, there is, for the most part, but a single exclamation, and then silence; and this is what we find here. Rabboni is the swift, deep-hearted response of Mary's joy, and she can say no more. But it means, "Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing; Thou hast put off my sackcloth, and girded me with gladness."

A MISSIONARY'S WORK IN BENGAL.

(Extracts from a Letter to a Friend.)

During December, I was travelling over the lower hills of the Himalayas among tea-planters, and over the Northern Bengal State Railway, carrying on evangelistic work. My audiences were for the most part small; though at one place I addressed from three to four hundred English-speaking natives.

In January and part of February I was in the Western Dooars, visiting planters and holding services at different centres. This is much needed, but very trying work. I grieve to say that the truly converted men are very few indeed. It is quite a surprise to come across one.

Our countrymen sadly deteriorate when they come to India. During the remainder of February and March I was still at the same work in different parts of the Darjeeling district and the plains of Bengal. I held numerous meetings, and circulated a large number of Scriptures and tracts. At one place a Baboo refused a copy of the New Testament, saying, "No, I love my Hindoo religion." This is the first refusal I have met with. At another time, in a train, I spoke to a man who said, "I believe in the Christian religion, but my father, a Hindoo, will not hear of it, and gets very cross." I read some passages from the Gospels, showing that everyone who would follow Jesus must bear the cross, but that Jesus would help him through.

My regular calling is that of pastor of a Union Church, a place of worship where believers of all evangelical denominations meet. At our Communion service this morning we had Baptists, Independents, members of Church of England, Wesleyans, American Methodists, American Presbyterians, Australian Baptists, American Baptists, members of the Scotch Presbyterian Church, the Free Church, &c. Just now there are many missionaries up from the plains in quest of rest and change. The influenza has disabled a good many, but I hope now that we are over the worst of it.

Your kind references to yourself have much interested me, especially your stating that you have just dedicated your sixth son to be a missionary. May the Lord appoint each one his sphere and crown him with his blessing, whether directly engaged in his service or not. Concerning myself, I may say I was trained under Mr. Spurgeon, and have been now in India for nine years. Remember me still in your prayers.

Differences in the Gospels.

BY REV. A. MOODY-STUART, D.D.

THE TITLE ON THE CROSS.

JOHN xix. 19; MATT. xxvii. 37; LUKE xxiii. 38; MARK xv. 26.

THE variously described Title on the cross of our blessed Lord is scarcely to be reckoned as one of the differences that call for special explanation, for, in the words of "The Speaker's Commentary," "the difference in the form of the inscription may be accounted for by the three languages in which it is written." But this difference has been invested with an undue significance by the importance attached to it by so reverent an expositor as Alford, who, with all his faith and his love for the Scriptures, writes of it in these strong terms, in which he marks the most emphatic word: "The advocates for the verbal and literal exactness of each Gospel may here find an undoubted example of the absurdity of their view, which may serve to guide them in less plain and obvious cases. A title was written containing certain words, not four titles all different, but one differing probably from all these four, and certainly from three of them."

With our great esteem for the writer we cannot refrain from extreme surprise at this plea; and when he asks us to take this example as a guide in other instances of difficulty, our inference must be the reverse of his; for if he has so mistaken this case by overlooking some of its plainest elements, much more may he have been mistaken in "less plain and obvious cases."

The Title on the cross of our Lord is recorded in different terms in each of the four Gospels. In the Gospel of St. John the inscription is, "Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews"; of St. Matthew, "This is Jesus the King of the Jews"; of St. Luke, "This is the King of the Jews"; of St. Mark, "The King of the Jews." In so plain a matter, this variety is startling, if we forget that the title was written in the three leading languages of the world, in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin; and that the eye-witness read not one, but three inscriptions. That which is given by John is the fullest; he records it as written by Pilate himself, and, as if to indicate its origin and its fulness, he alone calls it the "Title" on the cross. Mark, on the other hand, whose vivid Gospel is the briefest, adheres to his usual brevity in recording the inscription; he does not profess to give the complete title, but the "superscription of the accusation"; and the "accusation" is verbally the same in all the four Gospels without a shade of difference, "The King of the Jews." Matthew indeed employs the term "accusation," for his fuller inscription, but uses it in a wider sense.

After Pilate had written the official title, there is no reason to think that he did not hand it to others to translate. The translators would be scrupulously careful not to alter a word in the description of the crime charged against Jesus in the title Pilate wrote, "The King of the Jews"; to which he adhered so decidedly against the remonstrance of the chief priests, and of which he said, "What I have written, I have written." But they may naturally have taken more liberty with the personal designation of the Sufferer, about which there was no dispute; and their rendering it into different languages would itself cause a different cast of expression. The two inscriptions recorded by St. Matthew and St. Luke may be held to have been written by the translators, and these, with the full title given by St. John, and the mere accusation recorded by St. Mark, will make up the four different titles which we read in the four narratives of the Gospel.

The combined narratives by four historians, each stamped by features peculiar to itself, yet neither inconsistent with the others, bear the amplest testimony to the truth of the whole. These holy men of old speak as they are moved by the Holy Ghost, who uses the mind and the pen of each to fashion the record as seems best to the inspiring Spirit, yet in accordance with the writer's own sanctified perceptions; thus Himself presenting to us an attractive, varied, and concurring narrative of the events on which hang all our hopes of lasting welfare.

In concluding these few notes on three leading instances of Differences in the Gospels, we shall transcribe a memorable sentence on the inspiration of the Bible from an expositor who excels most others in spiritual and critical insight into the word of God. "Holy Scripture is divinely inspired in all its parts, not only while it has been written, God breathing through the writers; but also while it is read, God breathing through the Scripture, and the Scriptures breathing Himself."

"Scriptura sacra secundum omnes suas partes divinitus inspirata est, non solum dum scripta est, Deo spirante per scriptores; sed etiam dum legitur, Deo spirante per scripturam, et scriptura Ipsum spirante."—Bengel, 2 Tim. iii. 16.

What is Sin?

IF those who would fain teach others in spiritual matters, would seek, ere opening the mouth or taking the pen, to define to themselves the meaning of many of the terms they use in their teaching, the Church of Christ, methinks, would escape nine-tenths of the bewilderment inflicted upon it by reason of the jarring views of those who are, more or less, regarded as its authorities in matters of faith and doctrine. Maybe the devil never laughs; but if he does, how great must be his amusement, as he listens to the wrangling of good men on the possibility, or impossibility, of fallen human nature becoming sinless on earth. Some affirm the possibility, and declare that they have become sinless themselves. Others, not venturing to such lengths, refuse to assert themselves sinless, but claim to live, day by day, without actually committing sin. They acknowledge that the roots of sin are in them, but that the measure of grace they have received from God keeps these from developing into its fruits. Then, again, there are those who teach, that not only man's best doings, but even his prayers, and tears of contrition, have in them an element of sinfulness. And just as it was a century since, when church leaders were quarrelling about predestination and free will, the disputants got from doctrines to personalities, the present strife is tending in the same direction, and one person, with one set of views, has begun to ask whether another holding the opinions he or she does, can really be a child of God.

But what is sin? Several dear friends of my own have lately spoken of victory over a violent temper, as though all sin had been included in temper. Now, the meaning of such is evident. To them temper has been the besetting sin, and as other sins had been dwarfed into nothingness by this one great sin, which they rejoice to feel has been conquered, they look only at fallen Goliath and forget the existence of other Philistines. But sin is more than temper, than drink, than laziness, than uncleanness: for when we have mentioned ten thousand of its varieties, we shall find more to be mentioned still. This is its Scriptural definition: "Sin is the transgression of the law," and the law, unless it has been altered since the Lord Jesus was on earth, is this: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, with all thy mind, with all thy soul, and with all thy strength; and thy neighbour as thyself." Do I fail, then, to love God, for any moment of my life, with all my heart, with all my mind, with all my soul, and with all my strength, such moment must be a moment of sin. And so, again, with regard to my neighbour, though I may indeed love him, yet if I fail to love him as myself, I still sin.

I SHALL NEVER FORGET

how one old friend of mine got his eyes opened on this subject. He told us he had been living without sin for thirty years. A heavy gold watch-chain was hanging from his waistcoat pocket as he spoke, and this a blunt evangelist went forward and took, with the question: "What do you do with this hanging here?" "It is mine," said he, "and therefore I have a perfect right to wear it." There were starving poor around him, and when the other asked if he was loving his neighbour as himself while retaining the watch-chain, and allowing these to want for food, he had nothing to say, nor did I ever hear him speak of sinlessness afterwards. He had just set up a standard of his own, and rising to this, was satisfied; but this was one thing God's holy law was another; and he saw it was by the latter that the sinfulness, or the holiness, of a life was to be determined.

"Where no law is, there is no transgression": thus the question arises, Are we under any law, or under none? If we are not under law, we are indeed sinless, and we waste words when we talk of having obtained victory over sin. But if we are indeed under a law, is it this God's law, and can we claim to be perfectly holy in ourselves, unless rendering perfect obedience to all its claims? Surely there can be but one answer to such a question, and that I would suggest to everyone who believes that he or she has attained to sinlessness of life. Test oneself—first, by the writing of the second table, and ask the question, "Do I love my neighbour as myself, not merely in sentiment but actually? And then I would say, let such an one go on to ask, "Do I—now satisfied that I love my neighbour as myself—love God with all my heart, with all my mind, with all my soul, and with all my strength; and is such love continued from moment to moment without a break?" If such questions may be answered with an unaccusing conscience, even then it seems to me that the holiness supposed to have been acquired may still be questioned, for is not the Psalmist inspired by the Holy Ghost to ask, "Who can tell how oft he offendeth?" (Prayer Book Version.) God's judgment has to follow ours; and though I know many make much of the part that one's will plays in matters brought under judgment, yet is it written—and, after all, it is safest to go by God's Word—"If anyone sin, and do any of the things which the Lord hath commanded not to be done, though he knew it not, yet is he guilty."

ROME.—A correspondent, "L. S. G. S.," who has lately visited Rome, writes a very warm and appreciative account of the work of Mr. and Mrs. Wall, with which our readers are familiar.

A NATIONAL PROTESTANT CONGRESS. The preliminary arrangements are now complete for holding the first National Protestant Congress in the Portman Rooms, Dorset-street, London, on October 27, 28, and 29. Among the subjects selected for consideration are: Union of Protestant Churches, The Public Worship of God, System of Instruction in Reformation Principles, Convents and Monastic Systems, Home and Foreign Protestant Missions. The object of the Congress is "to unite in closer bonds of Christian fellowship and effort the various sections of Christ's Church in maintaining evangelical truth and practice, and in exposing and resisting Sacerdotalism and other forms of error." Communications respecting the Congress should be addressed to one of the honorary secretaries: Rev. Warden F. Stubbs, M.A., Bellevue, Grange-road, Upper Norwood, S.E.; Rev. Philip X. Eldridge, St. Jude's Parsonage, Upper Tooting, S.W.; Mr. Louis L. Lieschin, 3, Queen's Park-gardens, Streatham Common, S.

A little Child shall lead them.

By Rev. GEO. F. PENTECOST, D.D.

In one of the missions recently held in Saltcoats, Scotland, where the Lord wonderfully poured out his Spirit on the people, and hundreds of souls were converted to Jesus, there occurred one of those child incidents which so often rebuke us for our unbelief concerning the capabilities of the very young to comprehend and enter deeply into spiritual truths.

For many days the church had been thronged with people, and scores every night were giving themselves up, in open surrender, to the Lord. The bulk of the converts up to this time were, as of old, and as of ever, from among the common people. Not a few old sinners had been moved by the Spirit; and now and again some battered man and woman came to the front in penitent confession. At the close of one of these after-meetings I was called by a woman to speak to an old man, probably sixty-five, but looking older —for the way of the transgressor is hard on the body as well as the soul, and drink had ravaged his old sinner's body and soul. He was not keenly conscious of his lost estate, but dully so. He readily confessed his sin, and as readily expressed his desire to be saved; but did not know how it was to be brought about.

Like most Scotchmen he was reticent as to all religious "feeling," and unwilling, through force of custom, to openly confess himself a sinner at the penitent form. He knew the "doctrine" of the Gospel and assented to all the truth I tried to set before him, touching the grace of Christ and his willingness to accept and save him now. I told him that he was but to cast himself on the finished work of Christ and trust and confess Him as living Lord, and he would be saved. I quoted and explained to him parts of the tenth of Romans, and especially the ninth verse. He said he knew the truth, had seen it that night, and wanted to "come forward and confess Christ," but he "could not move out of his seat." Such was "old Rowan," a well-known character in the town. He promised to come the next night and give himself up in open surrender to Christ.

A year ago Miss Tyson, who has conducted children's missions in connection with my own evangelistic work (sometimes contemporaneously with my work and in the same place, and sometimes in a different place from where I am at work), had been in Saltcoats, and had had a great blessing among the children and young people. Among them a "wee girlie," about seven years of age, had been converted. She was the daughter of the coachman of a gentleman living in the town. The good coachman and his wife had been and were very much interested in "old Rowan." It was this coachman's wife who had called me to him that night. Old Rowan had gone home with them after the meeting, and they had had "further dealings" with him, and had arranged that he should come to their house the next night and they would take him again to the meeting. The night came, and it so chanced that it was a wet night, and the gentleman had ordered his carriage for an invalid member of the family who might not walk to the meeting through the rain. This, of course, hindered the coachman from going with "old Rowan." The good wife also from a sudden illness was not able to get out. They were, therefore, in trouble about the old man; for neither of them could go with him, and they feared that he would not go alone, and if he did, would not have strength or courage of himself to go to the front seat and confess Christ at the after-meeting, which they both felt he needed to do, to strengthen him in his decision. They talked the matter over at their supper-table, and said it would have to be given up for that night, and they would go with Rowan the next night. It was just at this point that "wee Jeanie" spoke up, and said:—

"But, mother, I can take Rowan."

They had not thought of this expedient. Yet as soon as it was suggested by Jeanie, in whom, "dear little woman," they had every confidence, it was agreed that when Rowan came around to go, they would send him off under the protection of their "wee bairn."

Sure enough Jeanie and "old Rowan" came into the church together. I did not then know the child, but when the second meeting came, and after the address to inquirers and the anxious in the congregation, I looked around to see if "old Rowan" was there according to his promise. Yes, there he was seated in the same pew that he had occupied the night before. But I missed the good coachman's wife, who had been with him then, and I saw this golden-haired, prim little maiden, sitting beside him. At my first call for those who were ready to confess Christ to come forward, "old Rowan" did not move. I saw that he did not have strength of will to move. His old blear eyes were looking anxiously toward the front as though he wanted to come, but he had not the strength to get up. I looked again and saw the little child speak to him; but he did not stir. Then we sang another verse of the little invitation hymn:—

Just as I am; poor, wretched, blind;
Sight, riches, healing of the mind;
Yea all I need in Thee I find;
Oh, Lamb of God, I come.

Again I looked at "old Rowan." He still sat helplessly in his seat. Then the little girl arose from her seat (she sat at the further side of Rowan), and stepping out of the pew across the old man's feet, she turned about and took him by the hand, led him forward to the front seat and sat down beside him.

I did not understand the meaning of the movement, for as yet I had not heard the details of this little Gospel drama which was being enacted in living reality before my eyes.

After the invitation was over, and a couple of score of souls had come forward, I then, as usual, asked them in their own language to make such confession of Christ as it was in their hearts to do. One after another these converts arose in their seats and confessed Christ as their Saviour and Lord. Everyone who had come forward made the confession until "old Rowan" was reached, and he twisted nervously on his seat as if he were desirous of rising but had not the power. For a moment I waited, and was just about to pass him, for it is not my custom to press a confession, leaving it to the voluntary choice of penitents, when I noticed the little girl looking up into his face; and then, whispering something to the poor old man, she again took him by the hand, and they both stood up together, and the old man faltered out:—

"I am a great sinner; but I take Jesus Christ now for my Saviour."

Then they both sat down, and I wondered that the bright-eyed little lassie did not confess Christ also, especially as she seemed to be so forward in helping the old man.

After all the confessions had been taken and the meeting further dismissed, I and other ministers and Christian workers present gave ourselves to the delightful task of speaking with these converts, taking their names and addresses, and giving them such words of counsel and help as seemed needed. I came to "old Rowan" and questioning him further, found that the old man was truly penitent (as far as I could judge), and that he had made an honest surrender of his heart to the Lord.

Then I turned to the wee lassie and asked her why she had not made a confession also. To which she replied:

"Oh, I am a Christian. I was converted last spring in Miss Tyson's meeting. Neither father nor mother could come with 'old Rowan,' so I just came to bring him to the meeting, and help him to come forward; for you see poor 'old Rowan' could not come alone."

All this was said in the most artless and matter of fact way, and her little face was shining like an angel's. Truly, I thought, this is a case, indeed, where the Scripture is fulfilled which saith: "And a little child shall lead them."

Subsequent and further conversation revealed the fact that for a year past, since this little one had given her heart to the Lord, she had not only in her artless life manifested all the graces of the Spirit, but had been busy with her testimony among other children, telling them of Jesus and striving in her child's way to lead them to Christ. On one occasion, a few weeks before, an entertainment of some kind for children, had been gotten up, and this wee Jeanie had been invited to it. But she declined to go. When asked why she would not go, and was assured that there was nothing wrong in it for a Christian, she replied:—

"Well, I dare say it is all right; but since I have been enlightened in the truth, I don't care to go to these places any more."

Now this may have been an exaggerated view of life by the little one, but so she was taught of the Spirit; and she had taken her course of separation for Jesus' sake. And yet she was a sunny, bright, and happy little girl.

What shall we say to these things? Why, just what Jesus said:—

"Father, Lord of heaven and earth, I thank Thee, that Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father, for so it seemeth good in thy sight."—New York Independent.

MR. HAMMOND AT WORK.

Twenty-one years ago Rev. E. P. Hammond held a series of meetings in Lockport, New York, and many were converted as the result of the meetings. He has supplied the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church (the same church in which his meetings were then held) for two Sabbaths, and during the interval has held six meetings. From the first a rich blessing has been manifest. At the inquiry-meetings many have been asking the way of life, and led to rejoice in the love of Christ. The heat for the first half of the week was intense, but we have been taught that there can be a revival in midsummer. The closing services were marked with much of the power of the Spirit to awaken and save. One afternoon a union service was held in the 2nd Ward Presbyterian Church, which was in some respects the most remarkable I ever attended. Much prayer had been offered for it, and those prayers were answered. While the evangelist was speaking it was evident the Spirit of God was present blessing the truth. During the inquiry-meeting we found how deep the work was. Nearly every man, woman, and child, not a professing Christian, was found under a conviction of sin. Many were weeping, but ere long tears gave place to joy.

The pastor of the First Presbyterian Church last night gave an account of the remarkable meeting that afternoon, saying it was very evident that a large number were converted, and his heart was full of gratitude for the great work accomplished, as large numbers for whom they had been praying evidently had believed on Christ to the salvation of their souls.

I wish that every place where Mr. Hammond has held meetings for the last twenty years might at least, during a short visit from him, receive such a blessing from God as we have had in Lockport. E. A. S.

CORK Y.M.C.A.—The Secretary of this Association (54, Pall Mall, Cork) has lately received a letter from a young man, enclosing a pound "as a thankoffering for mercies received by one who was very low in sin." The donation was towards paying the debt on the Association.

Rome and Rum.

Miss N. F. Cusack, "the Nun of Kenmare," contributes to the August issue of Our Day (Boston) a vigorous article entitled "Romanism and the Rum Traffic." It is a scathing exposure of the insincerity of the Papal Church in the fight against intemperance. We make the following extracts:—

"A man may be recognised as an excellent Catholic by his Church, although he is habitually in a state of inebriation, and although he sells illegally the poison of drink to thousands of the members of his Church day after day. If the same man were to send his children to the public schools, he would be deprived of the advantages of his church membership, and if he were not to reach a death-bed repentance, he would be denied Christian burial.

"If the Roman Catholic Church ever set herself seriously, as a church, I will not say to suppress the liquor traffic in this country, but merely to control it, the evils caused by drink would speedily become a thing of the past. But Rome will never do this. She needs the political power of the saloon, she needs the dollars of the saloon-keeper. If statistics could be obtained of the amount of money given by the liquor-saloon keepers of the United States to the Church of Rome the record would amaze a startled world, and perhaps would arouse Christian people to some action.

"If Rome is sincere in her denunciations of the liquor traffic, why does not she suppress it? Here is a Church which claims to be above all other churches in her 'holiness,' yet her children are sinking into the very pit of perdition day after day and hour after hour, and she will not lift up her voice with decision to save them. We are very far from wishing to condemn every Catholic bishop or priest in this connection. There have been and are a few, like Bishop Ireland, who have done their part in the cause of temperance. Unhappily it can be shown that these few have been the noble exceptions to the general rule. Their general failures and the marked discouragement which they have met with, only go to prove that Rome is at best indifferent to the subject of temperance. I might say more with perfect truth; I might say that for she certainly does so when she sets the seal of her approval on those who devote their best energies to the cause of intemperance. She does not deny Church membership to rum-sellers, as most Protestant denominations do.

"Rome has allowed her devoted and long-suffering Irish children to become slaves to the curse of drink, without one vigorous effort to save them. Father Mathew came, and he did his work, not with the cordial help of Rome, but in the face of secret opposition of the most cruel kind, which at last shortened his life and most certainly impaired his usefulness. From time to time some little movement is made by the Romish Church in this country to help forward the cause of temperance. A few meetings are held, a few speeches are made; Protestants think something is being done at last. They never were more mistaken. Talk does not cost anything. It can always be pointed to as an evidence of interest, but what has begun in talk ends in talk.

"Protestants are always ready to join with Romanists in any movement in which Romanists show any willingness to join with them. This I believe to be a fatal mistake. It is a serious drawback to many who are trying to loosen the chains which bind them to Rome. It promotes a false charity. The Roman Catholic bishop or priest who appears to you so liberal, is simply smiling at your credulity, while he compliments your liberality. No fear that he will practise a like liberality. Rome cannot change: she is illiberal on principle, and all the time, for she cannot alter her creed. Rome may extend to Protestants the hand of friendship with grace and apparent sincerity, but be well assured that she has the sword of persecution secretly hidden in her cassock."

Miss Cusack's picture of Romanist morality is black. She says: "Give money to the Church; give an exterior submission to the bishops of the Church; obey the Church; you may live almost as you please." In conclusion she declares, on the authority of a priest, that Roman Catholic temperance societies are for the most part merely such in name, and gives a temperance resolution which was twice voted down in a grand convention of the Catholic Young Men's National Union. In view of this action, she remarks: "The less said about Catholic sincerity in the cause of temperance the better."

Mountain Analogies.

My "Swiss Notes" of last week were posted at Glion, but related to the Riffel Alp. I suppose the name of the hotel on the paper was somehow introduced into my manuscript by mistake. As all Swiss travellers know, Glion is on the Lake of Geneva, the Riffel Alp some hundred miles away, above Zermatt, and 8000 feet above the sea. I append some which occurred to me while sojourning in that delightful spot.

Safety in Christ's Guidance.—As a mountain guide is linked by a rope with his followers, always going before them, sharing their difficulties, one with them in danger, so that if they fall he either holds them up or falls with them; so Christ leads us into no toils or trials He has not shared, exposes us to no dangers in which He is not present, is linked to us in bonds of everlasting love, in all our affliction is himself afflicted, his honour concerned in our safety, and his promise pledged—"They shall never perish."

Christian Fellowship.—As the members of each company on the ice are bound together, so that if one of them slips the rest may hold him up; so Christian fellowship tends to strengthen the individual, preserving from wandering, sustaining when slipping, and lifting up when fallen.

Christian Unity.—One of the greatest charms of Alpine pastures is the cattle music. Every cow carries a bell suspended from the neck. These bells are of various sizes and tones, shrill treble, tenor, bass. When close to one of them its own special bell may seem not in accord with neighbouring ones; but at a distance from the herd, what transporting harmonies are borne upon the happy breeze! So the differences of verbal expression or outward ceremonial among Christians, which, close at hand, seem at variance, blend in true harmony when the love of Christ is supreme in those who feed on the same pastures of the gospel, under the one Good Shepherd.

Christian Difficulties.—The rocky ground, where the grand old trees are growing, may seem to present insurmountable obstacles, but becomes the secret of the stability of those stone-pines, which diligently and with apparant intelligence pierce through the fissures, and wreathe their sinewy roots around the rocks, and clasp them with inseparable embrace, and defy the storm. So difficult circumstances in life, trials and temptations, become, by the vitality of faith and the help of the Holy Spirit, helps and not hindrances to the growth of the soul in godliness.

Mysteries.—The loftiest mountains are those most frequently crested with clouds. These are not so often attracted to the summit as created by it. The invisible vapour in the atmosphere, borne by the wind, passing near the frozen regions of those heights, is condensed by their cold, like a breath on a window-pane; and as the newly-formed cloudlet is driven off by the same wind, it resumes its former condition of invisible vapour. So the loftiest truths of God and Eternity, by their very height and grandeur, produce the mystery which sometimes troubles us, but which ought to be expected and delighted in by us. "Clouds and darkness are round about Him; righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne."

Earthly and heavenly joys.—This analogy I venture to versify.

"The mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee."—Isa. liv. 10.

The joys of earth may heaven conceal;
  God lives, while these remove:
The hills by sinking may reveal
  God's mountain range of love.

The dearest treasure I resign,
  Whene'er the word is given,
Becoming thine is more of mine,
  Less earth but more of heaven.

To suffer or to do thy will,
  Though hard the task may be,
By emptying self, the more shall fill
  My soul, O Lord, with Thee.

If fading bloom brings fruit to reap;
  If lapse of stream, the sea;
If joys abide, by tears I weep,
  I gain by more of Thee.

I lose the fading forms of sight,
  The real abides alway;
I lose the shadowy things of night,
  I gain the glorious day.

Dearer become best gifts of earth,
  Which love resigns to Thee:
Such love is of celestial birth,
  And lives eternally.

Thy likeness dimly was portrayed
  In picture prized but lost:
If thus Thou art Thyself displayed,
  Why murmur at the cost?

If gift recalled brings Thee more near
  Than gift bestowed had done,
Why shed one sad regretful tear?
  Such loss is treasure won.

Be this my joy—to see thy Will Above my wishes soar;
My bliss, thy counsels to fulfil,
  'Tis heaven for evermore.

MISSION WORK ON THE NORTH SEA.

Dear Sir,—Having returned from a three weeks' cruise on the North Sea, I have had a glimpse of the splendid work carried on by the agency of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. I cannot refrain from expressing my sympathy with the self-sacrificing zeal that animates those who go forth to minister to the needs, temporal and spiritual, of these brave toilers of the deep. It would be refreshing to meet among dwellers on land the same eagerness to avail themselves of Gospel privileges which the North Sea fishermen exhibit. How thoroughly they appreciate the efforts made to reach them is abundantly proved by the way they crowd on board the Mission ship, often after a night of toil, coming to the service instead of taking well-earned rest.

The Mission hospital ship is a great boon to the men. Accidents are of almost daily occurrence, and the presence of a doctor saves much misery and pain.

The Mission is unique of its kind, and appeals to the sympathies of all, especially the followers of Him who chose humble fishermen for his first disciples, and whose call is still, to all who know Him, "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men."—Yours faithfully,

Carlton-road, Kilburn. A. Jackson.

Protestant Notes.

THERE has recently been published a second edition of a remarkable book by Canon Wenham (Roman Catholic), who holds the office of "Diocesan Inspector of Schools" in the Roman Catholic diocese of Southwark." It is entitled "The Catechumen," and is issued with the usual imprimatur of the authorities. The book contains much that is well worthy of the notice of intelligent Protestants who desire to know the real character of the religious teaching given to the Roman Catholic children of this country. Thus, on the important subject of truthfulness, Canon Wenham teaches as follows:—"Many expressions are in common use which are not literally true, as when people will not receive calls, and say they are not at home. This is not now a lie, because there is no intention to deceive" (p. 265). This is most unsatisfactory instruction; but what follows is even worse. It is affirmed that "When people tell lies, not to do harm but to do good, as they think—to screen themselves or others from blame, to preserve peace, to get over difficulties, to prevent mischief...Such lies, though sinful and very mischievous, are not grievous sins" (p. 266).

How, it may well be asked, can Protestants trust the statements of those who believe such doctrines as these? A priest for instance, carrying on a controversy in a newspaper against Protestants, may tell what we call lies for the purpose of "getting over difficulties," and "to screen himself" or his Church from "blame." The untruth he utters is not one of the "grieous sins," which separate him from God, but only a venial one, which may be washed away by an easy penance. Two instances of the use of falsehood to prove the truth of Roman Catholic doctrine may be found in one of the most popular of Roman Catholic Catechisms, which has run through a large number of editions both in the United Kingdom and America, and is still on sale, viz, "Keenan's Controversial Catechism." In order to prove that St. Peter was the Head of the Church, it is falsely declared by Keenan (chap. viii. sec. i.), that Peter presided at the first Council of Jerusalem (Acts xv.), and gave the "decision" of the Council; whereas it is declared in the Scriptures that it was St. James who gave the "sentence" (19), and nothing is said about St. Peter being president of the Council. In chap. xv., on "Invocation of Saints and Angels," the question is asked: "Should we honour the saints and angels?" and part of the answer is thus given: "St. John fell down to adore before the feet of the angel" (Apoc. xxii. 8). To a Roman Catholic who did not know his Bible this would, of course, be excellent authority for the adoration of angels. But if he were to turn to the text referred to by Keenan, even as found in the Douay Bible, he would be astonished, no doubt, to read as follows:—"And I John, who have heard and seen these things. And after I had heard and seen, I fell down to adore before the feet of the angel who showed me these things. And he said to me: See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them who keep the words of the prophecy of this book. Adore God." Can anything more sinful be imagined than to represent, as Keenan does, the act of St. John in adoring the angel as proper and right while suppressing entirely the words of the angel, "See thou do it not"?

The leading Roman Catholic publishers in this country have recently issued a new edition of a "Clifton Tract," bearing the significant title, "Image-Worship Not Idolatry." Protestants are frequently charged with uncharitableness, because they speak of Popery as an idolatrous religion, and therefore it is most important that this serious charge should be disproved. Now, it so happens that this teaches idolatry of the grossest and most abominable kind. It is sent out to the world by the "Brotherhood of St. Vincent of Paul," and—so the title-page informs us—is printed "By Permission." The author remarks:—"All that I would insist upon is, that, in some sense or other, honour, veneration, worship, or what is meant by the Latin word cultus, is due, and is naturally paid to a sacred image—to the person represented through the image, but also to the image itself as that person's representative. Yes, I repeat it, images are representative. They are for worship, objects of devotion, as well as helps and incentives thereto. Their use is not only to raise the mind to heaven, where the saint reigns in glory, but to bring him down to earth, to re-present him, or render him, as it were, present on the very spot where his image stands, that we may worship him through it, and it for him. Thus 'image-worship' is one of the many varied forms of Catholic devotion" (pp. 10, 11.)

The italics in the above quotation are in the original. The admissions made in the tract are very candid, but terribly idolatrous. At page 7, this author declares that we should "treat it [the image] as though it were the object itself"; and that "the worship directly rendered to Christ will be indirectly paid to his image." On reading these awful statements, we naturally ask ourselves, Can there be grosser idolatry than this in any heathen country in the world? Are we uncharitable in terming Popery an "idolatrous" religion? Is there no need for missions to Roman Catholic idolaters? These "Clifton Tracts," we may add, were first published nearly forty years ago, and no word of censure has ever been uttered against them by the authorities of the Church of Rome.

CONVENTION AT DUFFTOWN.

THIS annual convention took place recently in the Town Hall, Dufftown, N.B. At the forenoon meeting, devoted to Bible exposition, the theme of meditation was "The Manifestation of Christ"—in the flesh, for teaching and expiation; in His people, for sanctification and testimony; in glory, for kingdom consummations. These three divisions of the subject were opened up, in clear, stirring, and practical statements, by Rev. J. B. Cumming of Mortlach; Mr. Gray Campbell Fraser, Aberdeen; and by Rev. Dr Elder Cumming, Glasgow. A spirit of harmony and solemn sanctifying power rested on the gathering.

At the afternoon meeting, with an increased attendance, Rev. W. Stuart, from Burnshill, South Africa, told the inspiring and deeply interesting story of a wonderful work of God among the natives in that part of the Dark Continent. It was felt that such results of earnest and plodding labour are the best answer to all recent aspersions of Christian missions. This meeting was favoured also by a timely and earnest word from Mr Butland, late in the Naval Service, on individual effort in home evangelism.

The evening meeting, as usual, was marked by the largest attendance of the day. Rev. J. Smith, of Dufftown, the convener, spoke briefly on "Kingdom Consummations," the chief address of the evening being given by Rev. John Hall, of Cullen. Finding his theme in Rev. iii. 20, Mr. Hall preached the Gospel with great clearness, persuasiveness, and power. A feeling of solemnity pervaded the meeting, and some convicted ones were spoken to at the close.

A large number of Christian friends, as in former years, was present from various parts of the country, and all seemed blessed and benefited by the uplifting power of sacred truth, hallowed converse, and mingled prayer and praise. In connection with the Conference a largely attended meeting of women was held in the Free Church hall, when short and earnest addresses were given by Miss Waldegrave, Miss Macleod, and Mrs. Stewart of Logie.

"SILVER LININGS."

I SEE God's sun behind earth's clouds,
Heaven's blue beyond earth's grey,
The gleaming of the jasper walls
Across earth's dusty way;
God's light above the enfolding mists,
God's calm amidst the strife,
Bright undercurrents of God's peace
In the dark seas of life.

I see my Father's smile of love
Light up earth's dreariest frowns;
Fair stars for heaven-diadems
Shine round earth's thorniest crowns.
Betwixt my heart and aught of harm
That sin or sorrow brings,
I see the everlasting arms,
And the shadow of his wings.

I see a glory from the cross,
Like morning's crimson ray,
Touch from afar earth's night of sin,
Bright'ning it into day.
I see, like sunshine everywhere,
God's goodness, mercy, grace;
And, for the rest, I trust his love,
Until I see his face.

RESCUE WORK IN DUBLIN.

DEAR SIR,—There is carried on in this city, by a devoted Christian lady, a work of thrilling interest, whose chief hindrance is the lack of the needful support. The lady has pledged herself to absolute secrecy, and is completely trusted by the fallen sisters whom she visits. Hence none can be taken into confidence in order to the obtaining of help, except in the most general way, and without any clue to localities or names.

Our friend has rare fitness for such service, and has singular access to the places in which those unhappy ones are lodged, not only in the lowest neighbourhoods, but in elegant homes in aristocratic parts of the city. Our friend has many letters requesting her to go to them; one recently saying, "Your visit is the only bright spot in this hell." She frequently has thirty or forty of them gathered together on their own premises, for the reading of the Scriptures and for prayer, and many of them listen with deep interest to her counsels.

Hundreds have been rescued. During the past twelve months forty have been restored to a pure life. The worker rarely sends any such to a public Home or Penitentiary, finding that—at least for special work—it is better to have them separately lodged, or at all events in small companies; but always in such way as shall at once isolate them from the associations and stigma of their past condition. Some have been respectably married, others returned to their families and friends, and situations have been obtained for more.

The great call for gratitude is that so many have come forth spiritually saved; some have died with a sweet and penitent trust in the Lord. Many others would gladly come out into purity of life, but lodgings, travelling, and other expenses demand help, which would no doubt be forthcoming, did the Lord's people more generally know of the need. Should any friends desire to aid, they may communicate with Rev. W. Gorman, 4, Crosthwaite Park, Kingstown, or Mr. James Beckett, Riverside, Sandymount, Dublin.

Yours faithfully,
WM. CRAWFORD, Methodist Minister.

THE BELFAST CONVENTION will be held from September 29th to October 5th. Among the expected speakers are Rev. Hubert Brooke (Reading), Rev. J. G. Gregson (Bradford), Rev. F. B. Meyer (London), and Mr. E. Arrowsmith (Children's Special Service Mission). The hon. sec. is Mr. Robert B. Pim, 18, Tomb-street, Belfast.

PHARISAISM DETECTED.

The man that says, "I am not like other men ; I have no sin ; I am perfect," is under the influence of a lying, deceitful spirit. CHRIST AND THE BELIEVER.

Every believer hath Christ at his back, following him with strength as he goes, for every condition and trial. One flower with the root is worth many in a posy, which though sweet do not grow, but wither as we wear them in our bosoms. God's strength, as the root, keeps our grace lively, without which it would die.—Gurnall.

The Pakefield Conference.

THE twelfth annual Conference has taken place. It was held in the large room in the Pakefield Cunningham Schoolroom. Pakefield is a charming spot near Lowestoft, and one of the healthiest in England, a fact which attracts an increasing number of visitors every year. The Conference has become a hallowed season, and is looked forward to with much prayer and expectation of blessing. Many visitors appreciate it, and resort to the place for the purpose of enjoying its privileges. The attendance was good, except at the first meeting, when heavy rain fell. Rev. L. PRICE, rector of the parish, presided, as usual.

After praise and prayer, the Chairman gave a very hearty welcome to all present, and enlarged somewhat on the subject of the Conference—growth in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ (2 Pet. iii. 18). Growth, he said, is required on our part ; Christ's work is perfect, but our knowledge of it is imperfect. The Holy Ghost's office is to apply and appropriate to them that believe the work of Christ's redemption. Let us regard ourselves as the Lord's by creation and redemption ; and let us relinquish all claim to ourselves and live for his honour and glory.

Rev. A. C. DOWNER described "Full Salvation," illustrating his exposition by reference to the character and experience of Job. The blessings of a full salvation are :—(1) Healing ; (2) Enrichment ; (3) Fellowship ; (4) Edification ; (5) Fruitfulness.

Rev. G. R. THORNTON spoke on our Lord's last commission in Matt. xxviii. 16-20. The service to which the believer is called is :—(1) The service of self-renunciation ; (2) The service of obedience ; (3) The service of gladness ; (4) The service of undoubting worship. Let us worship Him with more undoubting devotion ; as He bids us "Go therefore."

Rev. C. H. LEATHES dwelt on some present-day dangers to the Christian life, basing his remarks on the story of the disobedient prophet (1 Kings xiii.). There is to-day a conspiracy against the rights and privileges of men, which would stop them from going right to the throne of God and his High Priest the Lord Jesus Christ. It sets up priests and idols and says : "It is too much for you to attempt to thread the mazes of the Bible ; you must come to us." The speaker denounced half-and-half men who come and say : "I'm a prophet as thou art. Come along ; come to the theatre ; your Bible is inspired, so is Shakespeare," and a hundred other alluring speeches. Let us say : "I have left those things behind, and may not come back to eat your bread and drink your water." Christians need to-day to keep to their marching orders.

Rev. GRAVES WALKER, in the course of his address, remarked that growth does not imply the eradication of the sinful nature ; growth is the only antithesis, or direct opposite to falling (2 Pet. iii. 17, 18) ; the absence of growth dwarfs the power and hinders the expansion of the Gospel to others (2 Cor. x. 15, 16). One absolute condition of true growth is love of all God's children. The speaker laid emphasis on what he termed the secret of "holding the Head," which is not an assent to truths about the Lord Jesus, but a taking hold and keeping hold.

Rev. E. L. SAVORY spoke on the work of the Holy Spirit in relation to the world and the Church. Rev. A. J. BEGBIE spoke on growth in nature and grace. Growth in grace is a mystery, yet its laws are traceable—abiding in Christ, feeding on the bread and drinking the water of life, opening all within to the Spirit, avoiding unfriendly soil, and submitting to the pruning knife.

The addresses were delivered with much ability, earnestness, and power, and were instructive, practicable, and profitable. The afternoon meetings for home and foreign missions were highly interesting. They were addressed by Rev. C. W. R. Higham, C. W. Pearson, Uriah Davies, G. Everard, and others. The valuable information given imparted much fresh interest in the work of the Church Missionary and Church Pastoral Aid Societies. It was strongly felt that home and foreign missions, to be successful, must be supported by spirituality and vital godliness in Christians at home. A desire was expressed that the Conference should be extended from two to three days in future.

ST. JOHN, NEW BRUNSWICK.

A SAILORS' HOME.

ST. JOHN, the leading seaport of New Brunswick, Canada, is a city of about forty thousand inhabitants, and is frequented by a large seafaring population of many nationalities. The traps and temptations for seamen on shore are as numerous as is usual in such places. For many years the need of a Sailors' Home there was very urgent, and one on pure Gospel principles has been supplied through the self-sacrificing effort of Miss Mary E. Hutchison, who had previously been well known by her Christian work among the young and the sick at Douglastown and district. In all she has been nobly supported by her father, the Hon. Richard Hutchison.

The Home was begun in 1889, in hired premises, and has now a noble pile of buildings, second to none in the country in finish and equipment. Miss Hutchison personally superintends it. Sleeping accommodation has already been fitted up for over thirty men, and there is room for a large number more. Here the sailor on shore finds a real Christian home, with board and comforts vastly superior and at smaller cost than anywhere else to be found in St. John. There are reading, writing and resting rooms, also a library. The refinement of taste pervading the entire style and arrangements is very marked. The "Rest" is a large public room, which is utilized for Gospel meetings held every night. These are in part conducted by sailors themselves, in English or Scandinavian, but are also attended and assisted by residents in St. John.

The main stress as regards influence is laid, not on meetings but on personal talk with the men. Who can estimate the good to the seafaring class to be thus befriended and kept out of temptation, and have their savings taken care of, while they are also brought under Gospel influences? Every sailor, when he leaves, may, if he wishes, have a packet of papers and tracts. It has been observed that they greatly like to get hymn books. The Home, in its permanent form, was only opened in May last, but the success is undoubted. A number of conversions have already come to light ; how many more there may be is known only to God.

This blessed institution, begun and carried on in simple dependence upon God, is commended to the prayers and sympathies of his people all over the world. Bibles, Testaments, and hymn-books, as well as tracts and text cards, in any and every language, will be very acceptable, both for use in the Home, and for free distribution.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

LLANDUDNO.

MEETINGS have been held at many other places round the coast. At Llandudno, the twenty-second anniversary of the Children's Special Service Mission was commemorated on August 26, by a praise meeting, acknowledging the goodness of God in blessing the work which Mr. Josiah Spiers began in 1868. Mr. Arrowsmith is directing the work this year at this pleasant North Wales watering-place. An esteemed correspondent thus describes the afternoon meeting:—

"Few present will forget the gathering of the day. Lady Augusta Mostyn had invited the Mission workers to hold a meeting on the lawn of her beautiful seat at Gloddaeth, promising to provide afternoon tea for 800 people. About that number of Llandudno visitors accepted her invitation. Though the weather was unsettled, God gave us a beautiful afternoon, and many hearts went up in praise as, sitting gazing on the lovely view, we heard of his work amongst the young. After a few opening words by General Graydon, a gentleman holding a high position under Government told how, when in Australia last year, a bright young midshipman, hearing his name, had come up, and asked if he had a relative at Scarborough in 1886. He found that the youth referred to his nephew, and, inquiring the reason of his interest, the lad took his nephew's photograph from an inner pocket, and said, 'I shall always love him, for he led me to Jesus at the seaside services at Scarborough,' and that boy was showing his colours amid great difficulties.

"Then a gentleman, who is doing splendid work for God in Manchester, told how God had spoken to his soul during Mr. Arrowsmith's services at Llandudno twelve years ago. He was followed by an Oxford undergraduate, who told how five years previously he had been attracted by a crowd round what he supposed to be a conjuror on the Scarborough shore. He went up, found a children's service being held by Mr. Arrowsmith. He listened, went to more services, and they were the means of his conversion. Then an undergraduate from Cambridge gave an equally cheering testimony. Mr. Arrowsmith read some most interesting letters from parents, telling of the difference they had seen in the daily life of their children since they had been to the services."

BOURNEMOUTH.

One of the workers writes to us as follows:—The mission here has been a time of the greatest joy. God has showered upon us so many blessings that the whole three weeks of the mission have been one long anthem of praise. Christian workers have been built up and strengthened. The missioners have had their cup of blessing full and running over. The children have been attracted by the sports, swimming, picnics, and cricket, but more than all by the bright, happy services. Never in the experience of the writer has God's constant presence been more fully realised than during the last three weeks.

The climax was reached last night when, though wet and stormy, Shaftesbury Hall was well filled with an earnest crowd. To many it was a time of decision "to serve the Lord." To all it was a time spent in the near presence of God, and, though we are overjoyed at the manifest fruit gathered in, the Great Day only will reveal the mighty saving power of God which moved among us.

All the meetings have been well attended, many hundreds being present at some of them, and it has been God's will to save by many. The boys' meetings have been splendidly attended, and bright, innocent pleasures have led on to the joy and peace Jesus alone can give. The girls' meeting and work among the girls have been very specially blessed. Miss Etches, of Bath, and Miss Rogers, with an "out-and-out" band of workers, have sown with marked results. Large numbers have attended the meetings for girls only. Meetings for parents and guardians, also for nurses, have been held.

A happy little meeting took place in the house of the missioners on Sunday evening. We were singing with other inmates of the house, when there was a gentle knock and a request from cook that they (she and the servants outside) might hear the words; after helping to cook a large dinner for sixty people, "it was such a rest to sing." We invited cook, the maids, and manservant in, and, after singing some twelve hymns and a short Bible address with earnest prayer, we parted for the night about eleven p.m. Cook remarking that "it had been beautiful." This is a hint to all at the sea. The hard-worked helpers connected with the large boarding houses may, I believe, be gathered in this way, and, as in this case, one at least be led to seek and find rest.

August 26.

THE ITALIAN FRUIT-SELLER.

BY EVA TRAVERS EVERED POOLE.

How busy Rosina the fruit-seller had been all the early morning, arranging to the best advantage all her store of golden oranges and purple grapes, with cherry-red pomegranates, streaked with yellow, lightening the dark green of their clustering leaves! Now a little lull had come in the busy life of the passers-by, and the streets were almost deserted. Rosina was glad of this, for she found in these quiet moments a good time for reading.

She was fond of reading, and a kind English lady, who had a Bible-class for the flower and fruit-sellers of that small Italian town, had taken great pains to instruct Rosina, and to foster her evident desire after knowledge, especially the knowledge of heavenly things.

Rosina is fourteen years old, though her mind is as simple as a girl of eleven. She is reading a Bible just now, and her head is so closely bent towards its pages, and her young mind so absorbed in its glorious truths, that, less sharpened than usual, she failed to hear the footsteps of a passer-by. The steps sounded loudly enough, too, in the almost empty street.

She was startled by his voice suddenly breaking in upon her reading, and raised her great dark eyes inquiringly to his face, with a look half shy, half reproachful, at the interruption and her own want of watchfulness.

"What are you reading that interests you so much?"

"The Word of God," she replied timidly; "will you buy some fruit, sir?"

He waved his hand as she half rose to offer him the finest bunch of grapes on her little stall.

"I'll buy some presently—who told you that the Bible is the Word of God?"

"God told me Himself," replied the girl simply.

"God told you—impossible! How did He tell you? You have never seen Him or talked with Him; how then could He tell you that was his Word?"

The girl stood for a few seconds confused and silent; she was not accustomed to ask or to answer abstruse questions of any kind. At length, recovering herself and her ready wit, she answered with a flash of her dark eyes, "Sir, who told you there is a sun yonder in the blue sky above us?"

"Who told me?" said the gentleman, smiling a little contemptuously—for he fancied he had effectually silenced the girl, and that she was attempting to hide her ignorance under her strange question—"who told me? Nobody; I don't want to be told. The sun tells about itself. It warms me and I love its light; that's telling enough."

"Sir," cried the girl, with intense earnestness, as she stood before him with clasped hands, "you have put it right for both Bible and sun. That is the way God tells me this is his book. I read it, and it warms my heart and gives me light. I love its light, and no one but God can give such light and warmth through the pages of a book. It must be his. I don't want more telling; that's telling enough, sir. As sure as the sun is in the heaven, so sure is God shining through this book."

The gentleman stood silent now and abashed. The simple, earnest faith of the young fruit-seller struck him deeply. For years he had tried to undermine the faith of all whom he met in the "pretensions" of the Bible. He had asked the same question many a time, and had never been so silenced. The girl's heart-experience of the power of God's Word was an evidence he could not dispute or shake. He felt the truth of the words, "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast Thou ordained praise" (Matt. xxi. 16).

Dear young reader, I can tell you nothing more of Rosina or her questioner but this incident. Whether God used her simple answer to do more than silence him, I do not know. I only know that the value of such testimony to God's Word is unspeakable. I want you, if you are Bible-readers, to bear this testimony to an unbelieving world, to tell out to all that God's precious promises cheer your hearts and fill your souls with light. Show to all the brightness and beauty of faith in Jesus; that is just the sort of testimony that tells for God, putting to rebuke and silencing infidels and wicked men.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Sept. 7, John xi. 47—57; Mon., Sept. 8, John xii. 1—19; Tues., Sept. 9, John xii. 20—36; Wed., Sept. 10, John xii. 37—50; Thurs., Sept. 11, John xiii. 1—19; Fri., Sept. 12, John xiii. 20—38; Sat., Sept. 13, John xiv. 1—15.

CHILDREN'S SEASIDE SERVICES.

MISSIONARY INTEREST IN AUSTRALIA.—Miss Mary Reed, who went out to China with Miss Guinness, since returning to her home in Tasmania has been actively engaged in seeking to stir up interest in foreign missionary work in different parts of Australia. In a recent letter she says:—"My sister and I held a number of meetings in different parts of Melbourne in May, addressing in all three drawing-room meetings, two ladies' colleges, two gatherings in Baptist churches, one in a Presbyterian church, and one in a Union chapel. Before we left, we trust a new interest in China had sprung up in many hearts, as several offered themselves for the work. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor telegraphed from China, authorising the formation of an Auxiliary Council of the China Inland Mission for Australia. A committee previously formed was thus sanctioned to act as a Council, so that now candidates and money can be forwarded straight to China from Australia. Rev. A. Bird, Auburn, Melbourne, is the hon. secretary of the Council; and Mr. Philip Kitchen, Power-street, Melbourne, is treasurer. At Sydney, as in Melbourne, some young people of promise came forward offering themselves for the work in China, so that now altogether the names of twelve candidates are before the Council in Melbourne for consideration. Some friends, not able to go themselves to the foreign field, have offered to help to support the other."

Methods of Missionary Work.

SIR,—Many of your readers will, I think, be glad to hear that the Church Missionary Society, after much prayer, has decided to advance into the interior of China. A little beginning will, God willing, be made in the far west Province of Szchuen. This province alone has a population of about twirty-five millions, and has an area more than three times the size of England. The little handful of missionaries (chiefly C.I.M.) who are working so faithfully there have been praying that God would send others into the vast needy districts of that province, which they are quite unable to touch.

LINES OF WORK.

We hope to work very much on the lines of the China Inland Mission. We shall have no foreign buildings, nor big institutions of any kind, but live very simply, in native houses, wear the native dress, and eat (those who will) the wholesome native food. We shall be emphatically an evangelistic and itinerant mission.

NATIVE AGENTS.

Believing as we do that the real hope of evangelising the Chinese lies in the natives themselves, we shall not usually employ native Christians to do spiritual work. Because we believe, if not dependent on us for support, though they may have less time to give to direct preaching, and though results may be less quickly apparent, the native Christians will really in Inland China be doing more, and will exert a greater influence, as a rule, than if they were lifted out of their ordinary spheres of labour and appointed the paid agents of the foreigners. The Christians from the beginning would be encouraged to support their own evangelists, pastors, and schoolmasters, who, in whole or in part, according to the amount of support they received, would be set free to devote themselves to spiritual work.

will be (it will, of course, take time) to rent in different towns and villages some quite small (but healthy) Chinese houses, where missionaries may live in purely native style and very simply. In connection with this group of little stations will be a larger Central Home, where the missionaries can come for rest and change, and where they can be cared for in times of sickness.

Each of the small stations should itself be a centre from which systematic itineration in the surrounding district is carried on.

These central homes with groups of smaller stations connected with them should be multiplied all over the country.

CANDIDATES :

There is scope for men of the highest intellectual ability. But the crying need of China to-day is of hundreds of ordinary people, filled with the Spirit of God.

Women as well as men are greatly needed for this work. Szchuen is a healthy province, and in some respects is better adapted for ladies and children than many other parts of China. The Chinese people are of course quite as civilized in the interior as they are near the coast.

A COLLEGE TRAINING,

though useful, is not necessary. It is much easier to learn the language than is often supposed, but needs steady plod and dependence on God. The best college training is to live for a time in England in one little room in a back street. Black your own boots. Eat plain rice, bread and vegetables. In the morning commune with God, and study—especially your Bible. In the afternoons go out angling (for "men" of course), making a point of systematic visiting and individual conversations. In the evenings throw yourself heartily into God's work, always being careful to take the lowest place, and learn from others more experienced than yourself. If possible get a kind, crotchetty friend to come and live with you. Never get put out with him, nor be anything but yielding and cheerful.

KEEP ON DOING THIS.

Those who do not get tired will have proved themselves to be splendidly trained collegians. Those who give up, however clever they may be, are not trained enough for Inland China!

The qualification is a Christlike spirit—humble, patient, persevering, loving. (Brethren, pray for us). A great test is, willingness to be snubbed. The C.M.S. will gladly receive offers of service from both men and women of this stamp.

SALARIES.

There will be no salaries, Each missionary (husband and wife count as two) may draw upon the Society for what he may need, up to a moderate limit. House accommodation will be provided. A separate fund has been opened; and it is hoped the Mission will be developed in proportion as the Lord gives the means. Anyone who has £50 a year may come at his own charges. (Christian parents, could you not manage this, perhaps for your son or daughter?) Living quite simply, and in thoroughly native style, two missionaries need not spend more than that sum, in ordinary circumstances. The cost of passage and outfit will be about £50 each.

NOW, WHO WILL COME?

Do not wait for "a special call." There is a special call. Do not say you have "duties at home." You may have. And they may be such as ought to keep you at home. But do not take it for granted. Remember those who have nothing to do at home would be of no use abroad. Do not say, "But we are not all called to be missionaries." True enough, of course. But, as far as I can see, we are not in the very least danger of thinking that we all are. We are much more in danger of transposing the words, and thinking "We are all not called to be missionaries." Do not say "We must keep SOME good people at home." Seeing that out of 100 good people, at least 99 stay in our own tiny island, and only one, at most, goes to the great needy countries beyond, it does not seem that we need begin to be very anxious, just yet, lest the heathen get more than their share!

Do not say, "I have my work for God in England." If God has specially called you to work in England you are right to stay. But not otherwise. Think what it would be if only those who were doing nothing for God at home, went out as missionaries! Why they are

JUST THE ONES WHO OUGHT NOT TO COME!

Many of us in the Mission field, knowing full well, and giving full weight to the great needs at home, soberly and strongly feel that some of the leading men who have work for God in England would be abundantly justified and repaid in giving it up, and going to the heathen. When some of these do come we may begin to look for the real awakening abroad, and at home. Remember this is a time of emergency. Do not say, "I am engaged in business." The Apostles were engaged in business. And they had to leave it. You may have to do the same.

Do not say you must "wait for a closed door behind, and an open door in front." Nothing of the kind. Ask the missionaries in the field how it was with them. Why they had all sorts of open doors behind, and friends trying to push them through, while (in many cases) the door in front was closed and bolted. But they went forward in obedience and faith. And step by step God opened the door; sometimes marvellously. Do not say, "There are heathen at home." No. And if there were; if England were altogether a heathen country, why should thousands of Christians stay in this one tiny corner, and scarcely even units go to the vast other regions of God's world. Why should they? But they are not heathen at home. Here all have heard of God. There they have never heard of Him.

WHY SHOULD YOU STAY HERE?

Why should you not go there?

I want to tell you plainly if I may—but very humbly—we missionaries cannot think why you do not come. We cannot think why it is there is so much consecration, so much talk and singing of being willing to go "anywhere for Jesus," and yet so few really do go, where we cannot but believe He wants multitudes of his servants to come. Dear Christian brothers, and sisters too, you might come, but are holding back, or perhaps not giving it a thought! Oh, we do believe you are WRONG—UTTERLY WRONG.

Here are thousands of you stopping in England, in tiny England, where whether you go or stay, the Bible and the Gospel are within the reach of all who choose. And across the water are many hundreds of thousands of our brothers and sisters flesh and blood like ourselves, men and women, aye and little children, real people (not creatures or things) with real souls remember, who have never known of Jesus love—who never can know, if you do not go to them. I tell you honestly many of us think you are making, unconsciously perhaps, a cruel mistake. We do not want to judge. God forbid. But that is our conviction. We believe that many who are staying in England ought to be in China or elsewhere. "Or elsewhere." Yes poor India, poor Africa, poor Malay Peninsula, poor Persia, Mongolia, Thibet, Corea, Japan, New Zealand, S. West America, and many more, as dark as poor China! Then the Jews too—they have such a special claim.

GOD HAS TOLD US TO GO.

And we do not go. We stop at home, and keep our children at home, and try to think God is pleased with us,—because "we take a great interest in missions" and sometimes give—(that which costs us nothing?) to the collection. All the time our brethren are perishing without a chance.

Nay, God cannot be pleased with us. God is grieved and disappointed with us. He can never bless the work at home properly, as long as we are disobedient, pleasing ourselves, and making all sorts of fair excuses for not going, when the real reason is we do not LIKE to go! Would you go to China if you were offered an appointment of £1500 a year? Honestly, now, would you? Then why not now? Christian parents, if it were to secure a splendid berth, would you let your son go? Then why not now? Would you let your daughter go, if it was to be desirably married? Then why not now? There may be a good reason. But still, take home the question, and ask yourself, as God's soldier, "Then why not now?"

China is at this time appealing for 1000 missionaries. The C.M.S. is appealing for 1000 missionaries. It will be a terrible disgrace, surely, if both these thousands are not forthcoming.

Dear people, are we Christians? If so, do let us think. If we think, we shall be bound—oh, so many more of us—to go to the heathen, if we are real.

Christian parents, encourage your children to go. How can you keep them back and be Christians? Let every family (clan) raise £50 a year, and have its representative—at least one. Let each congregation, association, union, send forth at least one of its members. (The cost of some might be divided into shares, and small associations could take one or more shares, if unable to take the whole.) Who will organise this! Let 250 Sunday-school children bring 1d. a week (from father one week, from mother one week, from himself one week, and so on) and have "the children's missionary." Let 35 Christians give, or be responsible for, a penny postage-stamp a day, and one of them go. Arrange this. Let 40 Christians take a piece of bread for dinner once a week, and have their representative—one of themselves. Let those who have means, support one or a dozen missionaries of their own. Let anyone who has £50 a year, go out at his own charges. Let those who have more than that, go themselves and take others with them. Some might get employment at the Treaty Ports in China, or work at their own crafts perhaps in other countries, and thus be self-supporting missionaries. Think of this.

And surely in some way God will devise means of taking care of all his children who go forth (not lightly) in dependence on Him and in obedience to his command. O Christians! this is our responsibility. There are means enough, and there are enough of us, to evangelise the world. But we are not awake! The world is "dying without God." And we might go to them. We might, but we don't! Oh, why are we not heart-broken? Why are we not on our faces before God? Why do not these things move us? Why do we not do something? My brothers and sisters, what will you do? Will not you do something? Will you go and settle this with God?

I will gladly reply to letters of inquiry about the C.M.S. in Inland China, or help in any way I can those who may be thinking of going in some other connection. There is room for everybody there. Yet not everybody, only those who will live and preach JESUS THE LORD.

J. HEYWOOD HORSBURGH (C.M.S.).

MR. DUNCAN WRIGHT, the New Zealand evangelist, who has been on a visit to this country, sailed yesterday (Thursday) for Wellington by the s.s. Coptic.

MR. MATTHEW BURNETT,

Evangelist and Social Reformer.

OUR sketch this week has for its subject one whose name is a household word throughout Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand, and the narrative of whose useful life cannot but have a very general interest. It is evidently the story of a man who was enabled to discern his proper sphere in life, and who did not delay in embracing opportunities whereby he could successfully fill it.

MATTHEW BURNETT was born at Cloughton, near Scarborough, in 1839, and passed his early life in Yorkshire. At the age of fourteen he entered the service of the well-known firm of Messrs. Rowntree, drapers, Scarborough; but, ere he attained his eighteenth year, he fell a victim to strong drink. Again and again he signed the pledge and broke it; in his own strength he could not conquer the craving for alcoholic liquor. In 1857 he again signed the pledge, but then in the strength of God; and from that day to the present, covering a period of thirty-three years, he has never violated his solemn obligation. Converted in heart and life, he joined the Wesleyan Methodist Society and soon felt impelled to tell those around of the salvation which he had personally experienced, and crowds gathered around him, as, with manifest acceptance, he preached Christ, and advocated total abstinence from intoxicating drinks in the towns and villages of Yorkshire. In 1861 he abandoned commercial pursuits, in order that he might, without reserve or hindrance, do the work of an evangelist.

The first scene of the young man's larger labours was the district of Whitehaven and Workington, in Cumberland. In the course of sixteen months, he was instrumental in turning hundreds of the miners from ways of intemperance and vice to sobriety and godliness. He had a great desire to visit Australia, and in 1863 circumstances favoured the realisation of his ambition. Arrived in Victoria, he threw himself, heart and soul, into evangelistic and temperance work, and at this he continued, almost without interruption, until 1872. He saw a wide field before him, and divided his work into two portions—preaching the Gospel and fighting the curse of drink. He delivered two evangelistic addresses every evening in the week, and preached three times on Sundays; he reserved Saturday nights for special temperance work, and Monday afternoons for what he called mothers' meetings. In the period of nine years thus spent, he delivered 4500 addresses. These abundant labours so told upon him that, under medical orders, he returned to England in April, 1872.

After an absence of two years, he reopened his campaign with a large meeting at Melbourne. For four years he laboured as the general missionary of the Wesleyan Home Missionary Society of Victoria, thus visiting nearly every town in the colony, including nearly every goldfield, conducting evangelistic meetings, and, as usual, reserving Saturday nights for temperance work. His torchlight processions (the first ever witnessed in the colony) attracted thousands, so that no building was large enough to hold the crowds assembled, rendering it necessary, after the open-air meeting, to have two and often three of the largest buildings available for the indoor meetings, Mr. Burnett addressing each in turn, and as many as five hundred taking the temperance pledge in one night. This work was followed up on Sabbath afternoons by large open-air services in the parks and reserves, attended by all classes and creeds. The meetings for women only on Monday afternoons were crowded, and many hundreds of wives and mothers took the pledge of total abstinence, and not a few found the Saviour. During twelve months of this work in Melbourne and suburbs, as many as 20,000 persons signed the pledge at the Saturday night mass meetings (often attended by as many as from five to eight thousand people) and the Monday meetings for women only, the rest of the week being devoted to evangelistic work, where many of those rescued from drink found the Saviour. Mr. Burnett also addressed large numbers of the Chinese through an interpreter on Sabbath afternoons.

The mission, of which Wesley Church (the largest in Melbourne) was the centre for four months among the lapsed masses, was greatly owned of God, and eternity alone will reveal the amount of good resulting from it. Mr. Burnett employed three Bible-women and a missionary to visit the reclaimed ones, the sick and dying, the degraded, and the outcast. This work has been carried on ever since in a greatly extended form in the city of Melbourne and suburbs.

The result of his labours in Victoria up to the close of 1879 was that over 60,000 pledges had been taken. Among the agencies having their origin in the reformer's work may be mentioned the Ballarat Town Mission, Collingwood Coffee Palace, and South Yarra Home for the fallen; 600 persons have up to the present passed through this last institution, many of them having found pardon and peace through faith in Christ.

South Australia was the next scene of Mr. Burnett's labours. In the course of three years he delivered some 1500 addresses. Proceeding to Western Australia, he travelled over ground not previously covered by an evangelist. When he returned to Victoria, after an absence of four years, he had given the pledge and the red ribbon to 45,000 persons. Tasmania was next visited, and God continued greatly to bless his servant. In 1885 Mr. Burnett went to New Zealand, and conducted meetings which resulted in much good. He penetrated far into the bush, and preached by interpretation to thousands of Maoris. As many as sixty of the most influential chiefs of these interesting people signed the pledge, and in this were followed by about 2000 of those who looked up to them for an example in life, or support in action.

The result of Mr. Burnett's two years' work in New Zealand was that 30,000 pledges were taken, and 35,000 ribbons given away. Though known as the Wesleyan Yorkshire evangelist, Mr. Burnett was helped by ministers belonging to all sections of the visible Church of Christ. At the evangelistic meetings, held in every conceivable kind of public building, and also in the open air, thousands of souls were converted to God, and not a few who are to-day labouring as ministers, lay preachers, and bush missionaries believed unto salvation, after hearing the Gospel from his lips.

After returning to Victoria, Mr. Burnett spent two years in New South Wales, and subsequently visited Queensland. Altogether in the twenty-seven years of his labours 177,500 persons took the pledge, and 147,000 the ribbon (first red, afterwards blue) from his hands.

These are large figures. It would be too much to expect that all those who thus pledged themselves have duly honoured their word. The more purely Gospel work is doubtless more hopeful, and, by God's grace, a numerous spiritual family will be Mr. Burnett's crown of rejoicing in the day of Christ's appearing. One reason of the success which has attended the various missions is to be found in the breadth of the evangelist's platform. He had paid no heed to class or creed distinctions, and with all sorts and conditions of people around him he simply preached Christ and advocated a putting away of drink. For a number of years he was ably assisted by his wife, until domestic affliction rendered it necessary for Mrs. Burnett to remain in Victoria.

It is hardly surprising that work proceeding on such a large scale should have attracted the interest and secured the help of Governors and Bishops, as well as all that was best in the population of the colonies. Mr. Burnett was not during a large portion of this time the paid agent of any society or person. He has been content to live on such contributions as have been given at his great meetings, and gifts such as high-minded and Christian people have been disposed to bestow. His voice having become greatly impaired, having delivered 12,500 addresses during his residence in the Colonies, at present Mr. Burnett is in England—ordered home by his medical adviser for entire rest and healthful change. He is again among old friends in Yorkshire, with his wife and two daughters. Doubtless before returning to the Antipodes he will address meetings on the southern colonies and the work which God has enabled him to do there. He certainly intends going back to the land in which he has laboured with so much success. Just before leaving Melbourne, a few months ago, he informed a newspaper interviewer that he hopes yet to devote ten years to continuing his work in Australia. We trust that his best aspirations will be realised, and that in translating them into action he will be enabled, in a pre-eminent degree, to promote the glory of God and the well-being of his fellow men.

THE NATIONAL ANTI-GAMBLING LEAGUE is arranging for meetings to be held in various places during the autumn. During the past three months many thousands of tracts on the evil has been circulated. The hon. secretary, Mr. F. A. Atkins, 7, Paternoster-square, E.C., writes:—"We have enrolled over 700 members, all of whom have paid a subscription of one shilling. But we are powerless to go forward unless we receive adequate financial support."

SCRIPTURE READERS IN IRELAND.

SIR,—May I be permitted to refer in your columns to the quiet and unobtrusive work being done by one of the very best of all the agencies for spreading the knowledge of the Scriptures in Ireland—one not established yesterday, but which, in a green old age, is working more vigorously than ever—viz., the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland. Others may testify of work in great cities like Dublin and Belfast, where the place occupied by this Society would not easily otherwise be filled; also in sparsely populated districts where the Scripture-reader patiently itinerates among the people speaking "peace" in the spirit of Luke x. 5, 6, reading the Word as he finds opportunity. It is noteworthy how these humble and earnest men find welcome, not merely among Protestants, but in Roman Catholic homes which they enter, not in an aggressive or controversial spirit, but as bearers of good tidings. They are in general kindly received, sent away with blessing, and asked to come back again.

It is of work in populous districts, mainly Protestant, that I desire to bear witness. I am vicar of a parish covering about sixteen square miles, the total population, according to the last census, being 3054, entirely rural, there being not even a village. Of these 603 are Roman Catholics, 2451 being Protestants, of whom 2009 are Episcopalians. The great majority are poor working folk, on whom what are termed "the stern realities of life" are ever pressing, pushing into the background the great reality—the "one thing needful"—from their thoughts. There is a proverb about this neighbourhood as one where they keep no Sunday. Too many make it a day of simple idleness and gossip, or of visiting and receiving friends.

Ballinderry is better provided with clergymen than some neighbouring parishes equally extensive and populous, having a good curate as well as an incumbent. But we have also, thank God, a Scripture-reader provided by this Society. All our hands are pretty full of work on Sunday and week-day with services, Sunday and day schools, visiting, and other work. In this the Scripture-reader finding access to many who attend no place of worship, searching out new comers, and patiently instructing—"precept upon precept, and line upon line"—the aged and ignorant. In this work he is engaged heart and soul, and has found access to many of the class who hide from the black coat and white collar of a clergyman, for whose ministrations, moreover, he usually prepares the way, and whom he informs of places where his presence is needed. His special work is to take everywhere the Word of God in its purity and power. He sits by the side of the sick and infirm, and, patiently sympathising with them, pours in comfort from the Word of God. He is able—it being his special work—to stay longer with each person than a clergyman with his manifold duties can, and at times when a clergyman would be in the way, he is welcome. The reader I now have has been working with me over twelve years. I cannot estimate how much good has been effected by his patient, prayerful work—God only knows—but I can reckon up at least twenty souls—now I trust with Christ—to whom I solemnly believe he was the honoured messenger of salvation. This, sir, is a work which has few sensational incidents to take the audience when related from a platform, or to find place in a report, and therefore there is danger of its being ignored and overlooked, even by those who, did they know, would most fully appreciate and support it. Were this Society appreciated as it deserves, the fifty agents it maintains—of like character with him whose work I have described—might greatly be multiplied, many being sent to places where

THEY ARE SORELY NEEDED.

As it is, there is danger of this number being diminished from failing funds—numerous subscribers in times past having suffered of late from sadly diminished incomes, besides the additional demands made on them, since disestablishment, to maintain their Church.

We therefore look to England and Scotland for help—in times of famine and distress the appeal is not made in vain. This is a famine of the Word of God!

Any of your readers who may desire to help in this good work can do so by communicating with the secretary, Captain J. Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

Faithfully yours,
G. B. SAYERS,
Vicar of Ballinderry, co. Antrim,
Canon and Rural Dean.

Evangelical Alliance at Manchester.

THE Council of the Evangelical Alliance are now publishing the complete programme for the approaching Conference in Manchester, which will be the forty-fourth annual meeting of the Society. A large number of members and friends, it is expected, will gather from various parts of the country, and the city will doubtless maintain its reputation for hospitality. The invitation to the Council to convene the Conference is signed by between forty and fifty members of different denominations, and by an equal number of leading laymen.

Amongst the speakers at the Conference are Prebenday Macdonald, Principal Cairns, Dr. Alexander Thomson, Dr. D. MacEwan, Revs. G. Stringer Rowe, W. G. Halse, John Urquhart, Talbot Greaves, Newman Hall, Principal Cave, J. Gelson Gregson, Edward Smith, Dr. John Gritton, H, W. Webb-Peploe, J. F. T. Hallowes, and H. Armstrong Hall. Amongst the subjects for addresses are "Hindrances to the spread of the Gospel among the masses," "The Church and the world—conformity and separation," "The Old Testament and higher criticism," "The claims of Sacerdotalism as opposed to the priesthood of believers," "The substitutionary sacrifice of Christ the foundation of Evangelical faith," "Some practical results of the International Conferences of the Evangelical Alliance."

With the exception of the conversazione in the Town Hall, all the meetings will be held in the Central Hall. On each day the Conference will assemble in the morning, there is to be open conference in the afternoon, and in the evening a public meeting.

SOUL-WINNING & PRAYER UNION.

THE eleventh year of this Union has now commenced. The membership is at present upwards of 5000. Many ministers, missionaries, and evangelists are members of it in different parts of the world.

A monthly magazine is issued to the members, entitled The Soul Winner. It contains missionary news, requests for prayer and thanksgiving, and texts for daily Bible-reading and meditation, which are sent in by the members. Articles on prayer, soul-winning, and love to Jesus and his Word, are also given somewhat as protests against the scepticism, infidelity, and loose unscriptural views and practices of the present day.

In answer to prayer and faith, the Lord has supplied all the needs of the Union during the past ten years. He has also sent in means to provide for several native Bible-women, evangelists, and Scripture-readers in heathen lands, who are engaged in winning souls to Christ.

A promise for each month is given to be pleaded at the throne of grace. The promises for the next two years have now been sent in by representative members, and arranged as follows :—

ELEVENTH YEAR—1890-91.

Mr. James Talbert, Dundee	Ps. cxxxviii. 4, 5.
Dr. Andrew A. Bonar, Glasgow	Jer. xxxiii. 3.

Mr. Fr. Engelke, Halmstad, Sweden...	Isa. xliv. 3.
Countess Tommasi, Florence	Ps. xci. 15.

(We intend giving the monthly Promise in THE CHRISTIAN as usual.)

Many heavenly blessings and answers to prayer have been granted to numbers of the members. They are invited to pray in their own retirement, on the 10th of each month, for a fresh enduement of power from on high, to bring souls to Christ for the glory of God.

Besides this private prayer, about one hundred meetings are held in different places over the world each month to pray for this much-needed power from on high, and God hears prayer.

LONDON TRAMCAR AND OMNIBUS SCRIPTURE TEXT MISSION.—The seventh annual report of this work shows progress in one important direction: whereas last year there were 200 texts in the cars, the number has this year been increased by 43. Public support of the work is not satisfactory, the balance-sheet showing a fall of about £30 in the very modest income. Letters continue to be received testifying to good received through reading texts in cars. One, who was not in the habit of riding, being overtaken by a heavy shower, got into a car, and saw to his surprise a text, Ps. cxlv. 18: "The Lord is nigh unto all that call upon Him: to all that call upon Him in truth." He says he could not get it out of his head; he humbled himself before God, and in three days found peace in believing. The hon. secretary of the Mission is Mrs. E. Wood, Waterlooville, near Cosham, Hants.

"BROTHER JOHNSON'S" AFRICAN MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—The many friends of this good African brother, will like to know something of him, although the news may not be good. His health has been very poor since he left England; indeed, so poor that he has been able to do very little for the cause he loved. It has been, however, a great relief to him that the Mission Board of Boston took the responsibility of the Mukimvika station, to which he had sent out the two coloured missionaries from Jamaica—Dr. Scholes and Mr. Ricketts. At his desire, the money that came in to me for his mission was sent on to Boston, "on account of the Coloured Mission." I have also had the pleasure of remitting several sums to Mr. Johnson direct, for his personal use, from friends on this side.

Now comes a special and immediate demand upon all Mr. Johnson's friends and helpers in England, Ireland, and Scotland. When he equipped and sent out the two coloured missionaries to the Congo, he promised Mr. Ricketts that his wife should follow him in two years; and it was his full intention to collect the needful funds before that time was up. But he has been unable to redeem his promise, partly owing to his physical weakness and depression, and the Boston Committee did not see their way clear to incur the great expense.

In the meantime, the patient wife has been preparing herself in Jamaica for her future work, but longing to follow her husband. After much correspondence with Jamaica and Boston, I offered to divide the cost of Mrs. Ricketts' passage between the Boston Board and Mr. Johnson's friends here, relying on the interest and help of the large circle of warm friends he had gathered around him.

My offer was accepted, and Mrs. Ricketts immediately prepared to start. She is now here, waiting to go to Lukanga on the Congo, where she will at once start a school for girls, and work among women.

Mrs. Ricketts has left Jamaica with the highest commendations of the church and pastor, and, as our guest, we find the dear woman all that her pastor, Mr. Webb, said about her. Her simple testimony is that she goes to Africa believing that God will use her to save souls. She is a direct descendant of slaves' stolen from Africa for Jamaica bondage. Mr. Webb is taking charge of the three boys she leaves behind in Jamaica, and the wish of the parents is that they may follow them as missionaries to the land of their fathers."

But I cannot take Mrs. Ricketts' passage to the Congo without money, and I hope and believe I shall not have many days to wait.—Yours sincerely, REBEKAH S. HIND SMITH.

ROMANISM DENUDED IN ITALY.—The law on the Opere pie has duly received royal sanction. This means that 135,000,000 francs (almost £5,500,000 sterling) of yearly income, which belonged to the poor, and had been so long confiscated by the Romish clergy to their own interests, are given back to the needy people of the nation. The two chief reforms instituted by this law will soon be carried on—namely: (1) Conversion into homes for orphans or old people of money heretofore used for masses and other priestly items; (2) administration of these properties by local committees, composed exclusively of laymen, and elected by the people through their municipal representative. The Rome correspondent of Evangelical Christendom pertinently observes:—"Little by little, things are assuming in Italy such a shape as to take away from the Pope's Church any privilege, and to place Protestants and Romanists absolutely on the same level to all intents and purposes."

HUNGERING AND THIRSTING.

"Call upon Me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me."—PSALM l. 15.

FAR out on life's dark surging sea,
I longed for some safe light to guide,
Some sheltering robe to cover me—
A haven where my bark could ride.
I hungered sore, and thirsted too,
And angry waves my soul o'erswept,
And, oh! till then I never knew
Something had in my bosom slept.

It was desire to catch the light
Of some far joy that should be mine;
Oh that on me in dreary night
The "Sun of Righteousness" would shine?
My need, my importunity,
Had probed a heavenly Father's breast;
Then rose amid obscurity
The "Morning Star" of welcome rest.

Then dimly 'cross the ocean's waste,
Safe anchorage I saw for me;
I heard a voice that bade me "haste
To the Refuge" where I fain would be.

My heart unveiled, my heart unsealed,
Saw in myself but darkest sin;
Him, holiness; my spirit failed;
I wondered why He took me in.
"Depart from me, O Lord," said I,
"By sin's dark waves I've long been tossed."
Then o'er my heart flowed his reply—
"I came to save that which was lost."

I'm sheltered from the raging storm;
His mercy blotted out the past;
A living fire my heart doth warm;
On living bread I feed at last.
"He heard my cry." Desire expressed
Unlocks the secret of his Word;
When most I trust, then most I rest,
When I can say "It is the Lord."

JEWS IN RUSSIA.

DEAR SIR,—Please give me space for a few words as to the reality of the persecution of Jews in Russia. That Jews are expelled (and this under most cruel circumstances) we have ocular demonstration even here in London. Austria protested many weeks ago against the multitudes fleeing over her frontiers. It is notorious that M. Pobedonotseff is stopping the work of direct missionaries from abroad, though he may for the present allow the sale of Testaments. The interesting account in your last issue of his treatment of students and others (the German Lutherans among them) shows how he carries out his measures, and what people have to endure from administrative measures which mean condemnation and punishment of people accused, unheard, untried, and undefended.

Of course, it is not quite alike in all the huge provinces of Russia. But persecution is steadily going out. It drives out hundreds of thousands in absolute destitution. Many lives are sacrificed. I would also ask your readers to suspend their judgment as to the misfortunes of the Jews being brought on themselves by money-lending, &c. The pamphlet of Prince Demidoff San Donato shows that this is far from being the case. The Russian peasantry themselves bear testimony that Russian money-lenders are far worse and more exacting than Jews.

Above all, it must be remembered that the vast majority of the millions of Jews in Russia are intensely poor; they are cooped up in cities, and can neither lend money nor keep public-houses there, as some do in country places. Events, fully proved, show us beyond all doubt that the expulsion of all Jews from Russia is imminent. Though the repression of public indignation has, we hope, delayed publication of the new writ, let us be warned and prepared to act as Christians should when the great emergency comes upon us.

"MINISTERS AT THE PLAY."

DEAR SIR,—I rejoice to read your admirable article on "Ministers at the Play." Perhaps it may lead some who thought I was "too strong" in my protest of "The Devil's Mission of Amusement," to grant that I had good cause for lifting up my voice.

I think with you that we have not only "almost" but quite "reached the time when the churches need to call for a day of humiliation for their ministers, and to pray for a more decided evidence of conversion in them."

An apostate Christendom presents in my view a sadder sight than an openly godless world. Oh! that the Spirit of the Lord would raise up a standard and check the fearful flood which is devastating our churches.—Yours faithfully,

ARCHIBALD G. BROWN.

DEAR SIR,—I observe that The Record, while apparently endorsing the statement that the Shaftesbury Theatre was on the afternoon of the 21st ult. "full of the clergy and ministers of all denominations, summoned to sit in judgment whether a lie might or might not be told upon occasion," conceives, nevertheless, that the number of ministerial approvers of the modern stage has been exaggerated. It is to be hoped that it is so. It becomes the disapprovers, however, to make their voice heard. They have been compromised by a scandalous public manifestation. The example will have gone far to break down the last barrier between one of the most baneful forms of worldliness and the professed Christian Church. It will no longer be ministers of religion remaining neutral, but pastors of churches leading the way on which multitudes of the young of their flocks will walk with the utmost peril to their moral influence and spiritual character. The prayer against temptation in which Christian teachers ask their congregations to join will receive an awful commentary.

As one who has for years studied the whole aspect of the stage influence on the age, I regard the fact on which you comment as of the very gravest import. To the ministers of religion who filled the theatre on the day in question I say nothing. But I implore, in the interest of the youths of our cities, that the overwhelming majority of godly clergy and ministers, who are in protest, should adopt some public method of counteracting the influence of one of the most alarming and shameful compliances that these times have witnessed.

Thanking you for your faithful and most valuable witness on this and other subjects of like peril to the cause of the Lord Jesus, I am, yours truly,

X.

Southborough, Kent.

DEAR SIR,—I have read in your issue of August 29 a paper with the above title. As one of those who accepted Mr. Willard's invitation to the performance of "Judah," I must ask you to insert one word of protest against the inference which the writer of the article unhesitatingly, but most unjustly, draws. I refer to his strongly-worded surprise at the absence of any expressions of disapproval by the audience when the hero, dressed in clerical garb, swears "a deliberate lie in order to shield the woman he loves."

He seems to confuse two entirely different things—a wicked action and inculcation of wickedness. Is it customary, and would it do any good, if a theatrical audience were to hiss every actor who in his assumed character commits a crime? That, and not the tendency of the play, is what the article discusses, condemning Mr. Willard and the clergymen and ministers present on the quite unique occasion referred to.

Why did not the writer, at any rate, let your readers have the chance of forming a just judgment by stating how the drama ends? Permit me to correct his oversight. The curtain falls on the scene in which the guilty pair, whose consciences will not allow them any rest, absolutely refusing to avail themselves of an offer to build the hero a magnificent church in which his eloquence would have full scope; they insist on making an open and heart broken confession of their sin, and determine to face the contempt and anger of their former admirers, and to build up on the foundation of truth lives of honesty and goodness.—Yours,

SIR,—As a diligent reader of your excellent paper, I am pained by the one-sidedness of your article on "Ministers at the Play." You complain that those who witnessed "Judah" expressed no disapproval of the false oath. Of course not. They waited to see the end of it all, and the end was that—

(1) Judah's conscience smote him.
(2) He repented.
(3) He publicly acknowledged his fault.
(4) He abandoned his ministerial work, and all the splendid prospects before him, and retired into obscurity.

You do not allude to this in your article, and yet this is the play, not the mere oath-taking, but, in addition, the repentance, the confession, and the humble relinquishing of all worldly prosperity.

You surely would not have people express disapproval when the story of Abraham's lie, or Jacob's lie, or David's murder is being read in public. We listen in silence, and hear of their punishment and their contrition.

I do not know what your arguments are, because unfortunately you do not argue, but denounce. If the drama is in itself wrong, what about the "parables" of Scripture, or the writings of Shakespeare?

If acting is in itself wrong, why has God given men the acting instinct?

If the "associations" only of the theatre are objected to, why not try and purify them, instead of denouncing and judging. Surely a "little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." It is sad to see Christian people shirking the difficulty, and resting satisfied with mere "calling names." Our Master said, "Judge not." Surely men incur a grave responsibility when they stand aside in Pharisaic fashion, and, lumping together all plays and all theatres indiscriminately, brand them as bad and wicked.

The very next article in your paper is one praising most highly Mr. Gladstone's article on the Pentateuch. Surely you cannot be aware that Mr. Gladstone is a theatre-goer!

As one who regularly reads your paper with pleasure and profit, I am pained by your unreasonable attitude on this question.—Yours faithfully,

Sutton, Surrey. LEAVEN.

[To discuss the questions our correspondents raise would be to grant that the ministers were in their right place at the theatre. This is what the article referred to denies. We can only add that the description of the close of the drama which these letters give makes it still more remarkable that ministers should be satisfied with a dénouement which utterly ignores, if it does not positively deny and repudiate, the truth of the Gospel; for "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."—ED.]

"KESWICK TEACHING."

DEAR SIR,—Will you invite the best statement of the special teaching at Keswick. What is "the blessing"? What is the "it"? What is the "clean heart"? How is the blessing to be got? How is it to be kept? Answers to be given in short Pauline language, say, not exceeding twenty lines. —Yours, &c., A SYMPATHISER.

DEAR SIR,—May I be allowed to draw attention to a paragraph in the address by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe on "The Gift of the Spirit" as reported in THE CHRISTIAN of August 15. There are many interesting points in the address, and, while some of the minor matters are open to question, one is thankful to find prominence given to the Scriptural idea of the "Baptism of the Holy Ghost," viz., the bestowment of the Spirit at the beginning of the Gospel dispensation. Often, however, in seeking to give prominence to one truth there is a tendency to depress others, and this I fear Mr. Webb-Peploe has done. Speaking of Peter's reference to Joel's prophecy he says:—

> "In Acts ii. 16 the Apostle Peter makes use of a most remarkable expression, never found anywhere else, as far as I know, in the Bible, with regard to the fulfilment of a prophecy. He says: 'This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel.' In every other case in the New Testament you would read 'That it might be fulfilled' (showing that it is an application); or, 'as the prophet has said' (showing that the writer takes up the prophet's words)."

Now, I quite agree with him in calling the phrase "a remarkable expression," but I think we have an equally strong expression in Matt. iii. 3, "This is he that was spoken of by the prophet Isaiah," and Matt. xi. 10; Luke vii. 27, "This is He of whom it is written." The phraseology is similar, only that we have a person in one case and an incident in the other. But can Mr. Webb-Peploe really mean what he says in the latter part of the paragraph I have quoted? When we find the expression "that it might be fulfilled," are we to consider it as only "showing that it is an application"? Surely the phrases, "that it might be fulfilled" and "As the prophet has said," are as strong as the statement in Acts ii. 16. In the passage I have already adduced Matthew says: "This is he that was spoken of," while concerning the very same prediction Mark and Luke say, "As it is written in Isaiah the prophet"; and John says, "As said the prophet Isaiah," showing that the different formulæ mean the same thing. If we are to consider that in the many places in the New Testament, where predictions are quoted, we have only applications of prophecy and not absolute fulfilments, what proof have we that prophecy can be fulfilled at all?

Yours sincerely, A. MCCAIG.

The Manse, Brannoxtown, co. Kildare,

WHAT CONSTITUTES SUCCESS?

DEAR SIR,—Would you allow me a word in reply to Mr. R. W. Harden's letter in your issue of August 22 on this all-important subject to Christian workers.

It is, perhaps, needless to say that any really experienced worker for Christ would agree in the main with all he says about sowing the Word, and would be sorry to believe that all the fruit of their labour is comprised in that which God permits them to see. So far from it, those whom God has most used, and who have been permitted to see large numbers of souls brought to Christ through their instrumentality, still believe that much of the bread they have cast upon the waters will not be found till after many days.

But, as one who has had some experience in winning souls to Christ, I must take very large exception to the dictum of your correspondent when he writes, "Preach up the true character of the servants of Christ—sowers, not reapers."

In this sentence lies what I believe to be a very vital error. And to the holding of this error may be attributed much of the want of success of many workers. "According to your faith so be it unto you," is a very far-reaching axiom, which all Christian workers would do well to ponder and pray over.

Some years ago I had to meet about sixteen delegates, representing a number of Sunday-schools forming a Sunday-school Union. They were, under circumstances of great discouragement, about to break up their Union. "Why?" I asked. Because they saw no good in the Union, and nothing to encourage them—no fruits from their labours. It occurred to me to ask them this pointed question. "Do you believe in the conversion of a child?" It will scarcely seem credible to our friends of the Children's Special Service Mission when I write it, that not one of those delegates could say that they believed in the fact of child conversion. They could readily believe that God could take the heart of a hardened old sinner, recreate, and hold it in his hand; but that the Spirit could convert a little child, and mould it to do his will, and then keep it for Himself seemed something beyond the reach of their faith.

I asked them, "What then are you working for in your Sunday-schools?" "Oh," was the reply, "we are sowing the seed, and expect it will spring up in years to come and bring forth fruit." It would take too long to tell the interesting story of the sequel of that meeting; suffice it to say that within twelve months scores of the children connected with those Sunday-school delegates were savingly converted, and now, after eighteen years, are known to be the most active and successful workers for Christ in nearly every mission and school in that neighbourhood.

And what, it may be asked, was the secret of success? My answer is that God honoured the faith of his servants, when, instead of vaguely believing that at some future time God would bless their labours, they were led to see that as for the man, so for the child, God's plan is, "Behold! now is the accepted time. Behold! now is the day of salvation."

I could not help pressing upon my friends at that time the thought I would seek to press upon my fellow workers now: How many of those children—humanly speaking—would have been alive in the years to come they were vaguely working for, or how many might not have been called into eternity within a very short time?

It is the old story so many of our dear fellow workers forget, like Mr. Moody on the eve of the great fire at Chicago. He tells us that he sent away his large congregation, telling them to come again next Sunday and decide for Christ; but, alas! hundreds of them were launched into eternity before morning. He never forgot that lesson. Nor should we. It is a present salvation we can offer. It is a present decision we seek. Peter could both sow and reap on the day of Pentecost.

Paul both sowed, reaped, and baptized a whole household "in the same hour of the night." It is an easy thing to preach the word, and God will honour his own Word, but it is not so easy a thing to follow up that preaching by personal dealing, watching, and waiting for souls, preceded and followed by wrestling believing prayer. I verily believe that there are more souls won for Christ by personal dealing for present decision than by any other method.—Yours in Christ,

H. HOLME.

BREAD UPON THE WATERS.

IN connection with my usual visit on Sunday afternoons to the Bethnal Green Workhouse and Infirmary, I met with a case which I thought might be published for the encouragement of Christian workers.

A poor broken-down old man related the following:—I kept a shop at ——, where a lady in good circumstances used to call regularly and leave a tract. She just walked in at first and placed it on the counter. This continued for some little time, when the leaflet gave place to a small book. After leaving a few of these she used to linger about, as if seeking for an opportunity to speak to me; but the moment I caught sight of her I darted out of the way. She seemed, however, determined to catch me, and she began to purchase things at my shop, things which I have since seen, and know she did not require. She would at times purchase things, and leave word that I was to take them to her house; but the Lord was to have the victory.

One day a written note was sent down, asking for me to call at her house, as she wanted to see me particularly. I summoned up courage, and went. After waiting a little time, she came forward and said, "Mr. ——, I want you to go to Wood-street, in the City, and fetch some firewood for me. How about your van, have you sold that?" I answered, "Yes, ma'am." She said, "I thought as much." But I spoke up, and said, "I have still got the horse, and I can easily borrow a cart." She gave me the address, and told me I must be there early in the morning. I got all ready, and told my young man to get some good strong cords ready, as I expected a good load.

We arrived there in good time, and went in; the man in attendance first asked if we had breakfasted; and, after a good breakfast, he said, "I haven't got much wood for you," and sent us off with a few small boxes which we threw in a corner of the cart. When we arrived back, she asked me what she was in my debt. I told her nothing. She said, "Nonsense, man, you have done your work, and must be paid for it." She then persuaded me to accept two half-crowns. After this she asked me into a little room, and a tear started in the old man's eye as he said, "Ah, sir, I never heard anyone pray and wrestle in prayer with God to save my soul as she did. She quite broke me down. I was a poor drunken wretch, and all I cared for was to read Tom Paine, Hume, and other writings, and argue against the Bible."

I asked him if he got converted then. He said, "No; I went away feeling dreadfully wretched and miserable, and tried to be better. I was a little better one day and worse the next; but those prayers never left me, and, as those words in John iii. 16 kept ringing in my ears, I got down the Book and read for myself, and the Lord showed me all I had to do was to trust Jesus; and I have been happy ever since, and all the infidelity in the world would never change me."

He went on to tell me the different kinds of men he came in contact with where he was, and gave ample evidence that he was shining as a light for Jesus in a dark place.

He said, as we parted, how that dear lady would like to know her prayers were answered.

The Temperance Cause.

Count Von Moltke, the famous German military strategist, is a total abstainer.

The licensing committee of the Birmingham magistrates declined to grant any fresh licences at their recent meeting.

A campaign has begun on behalf of a prohibition constitutional amendment in the State of New York. In April, 1891, the decisive vote is to be taken.

The Christian Leader comments strongly on the tacit encouragement given to the drink traffic in connection with the arrangements of the Edinburgh Exhibition.

The Irish Temperance League is entering on the winter's campaign with earnestness and vigour. Successful public meetings have already been held in various parts of Ireland.

The Lancet calls attention to an old grievance, the disadvantages of holding coroners' inquests at public-houses. At present there is no statutory obligation on the local authorities to provide accommodation for the coroners' inquiries.

At the licensing sessions, the Wolverhampton magistrates refused to grant any new licences, and likewise refused to renew licences of two old-established houses in the town, the occupiers of which had been convicted during the year for permitting card-playing and drunkenness.

The application for a drink licence for the new theatre of varieties, Manchester, has for the time collapsed. In view of the influential nature of the opposition, the withdrawal for a time was, on the part of the promoters, a shrewd move, but it is not to be supposed the idea of a drink licence for the place has been abandoned.

The annual report of the Temperance Committee of the Methodist Church in Ireland reports an increase in the Bands of Hope, in the number of members and of temperance sermons preached. A complaint is made that, in Band of Hope meetings, too much time is given to amusement and too little to temperance teaching.

It is reported that in Iowa no less than 15,000 saloons went into the "original package" business in the sale of intoxicating liquors, and that since the passage of the "Original Package" Bill by Congress, nearly all of them have summarily closed up their business. The law has certainly brought great relief to that State, if such be the facts.

UNION HALL MISSION.

DESTRUCTION OF TENTS.

WE had erected our large new tent at Queen's Park, Kensal Green, for services every night; but during the absence of the watchman, some evil disposed persons set it on fire, and at seven o'clock on Sunday morning I received a telegram from the police at Kilburn, stating that the tent had been burnt down at 2 a.m. that morning. Mr. Jackson, of Sidcup, had been advertised to preach on Sunday evening, so we hastily removed what remained of our tent, and erected a smaller one for the evening service. At 5.30 on Monday morning I received another telegram from the police, informing me that the tent in Station-road, Kensal Rise, had again been damaged by fire.

Thus it will be seen that we have had most serious losses. Our first large tent was nearly new, and cost £50. The other was not so good, but was still very valuable, and could have been used much.

The week before last a large tent, being used at College Park, Willesden, was torn down and greatly damaged. Will Christian friends sympathise with us in our heavy losses, and send help that we may be able to replace these tents? I shall need quite £100 in order to replace these with new tents, &c.

Obituary.

REV. DR. DAVID DUFF.

ON Monday last, Rev. Dr. David Duff, Professor of Church History in the United Presbyterian Theological Hall, Edinburgh, died at Craigmore, Bute, from acute bronchitis. He was a native of Greenock, where he was for many years Rector of the Academy. He was sixty-years of age, and had served the cause of preliminary education on the Edinburgh School Board, of which he was president at the time of his death.

REV. DR. JOHN J. CARRUTHERS.

Intelligence has been received of the death, at Portland, Maine, of Rev. John Johnston Carruthers, D.D., for seventy years in the Congregational ministry. He was born at Ecclefechan, Dumfriesshire, soon after Thomas Carlyle, with whom he was a playmate. He laboured for awhile in Russia, but returning to this country held pastorates at Gosport and Toxteth, Liverpool. Subsequently he was sent by the London Missionary Society to Canada, and at Montreal he organised a Congregational Church. His last pastorate was at Payson Memorial Church, Portland, where he was a minister for thirty years. He was regarded as the Father of the Congregational Churches, and was in his ninetieth year when called to rest.

REV. JAMES MURDOCK.

By the death of the Rev. James Murdock, of Holywood, co. Down, the Methodist Church in Ireland has lost a valued and prominent minister. Deceased was a native of Hyde Park, co. Antrim. He entered the ministry in 1833, and for forty-seven years in various parts of Ireland discharged the duties of his office with diligence, faithfulness, zeal, and success. He was connected with several revivals, and was very much beloved by those who knew him, especially by the young men in his congregations, with whom he was generally a great favourite, and to whom he was often most useful. He was an able preacher and a man of unswerving integrity. His end was very sudden. He took part in the public service in Holywood Methodist Church on Sunday week, and passed away unexpectedly to be with Christ on Thursday week in the eighty-second year of his age and sixty-eighth of his ministry.

THE DORKING CONFERENCE will be held in the Church Room, Falkland-road, on October 7-9. Several of the Nonconformist ministers have joined with Rev. H. C. Sturdy of St. Paul's Church in the invitation to the Conference, the main subject of which will be the Work of the Holy Spirit. Among the promised speakers are Rev. J. J. Luce, Rev. E. W. Moore, Rev. S. Dixon, Rev. J. C. Hoare, of Ningpo, &c.

IKEWEZI LAMACI MISSION.—An interesting address on the work of this Mission, and missionary work in general, was given on Friday last at the Young Men's Christian Association, Birmingham, by Brigade-Surgeon Robinson, who has recently visited the station. He spoke of the sterling work being done by Mr. and Mrs. Aitchison, and how greatly they are esteemed and loved by the natives. The Mission is growing and being greatly blessed, but the workers urgently need more help in the carrying on of the work, particularly at this time, as Mr. Aitchison is building a new church and schools. Communications may be sent to the treasurer, Y.M.C.A., Birmingham.

CAWKER CITY, KANSAS, U.S.A.—This section of the country is beginning to suffer much because of dry weather and hot winds. The corn crop is a failure, pastures are dried up, and people are generally discouraged, more so than I have seen them during my eight years' residence here. People are leaving these parts in large numbers, in hopes of finding a more likely home for the winter. The ministers of the Gospel who labour here will suffer with the people that remain, yet I am glad to say our humble efforts are appreciated, and the good seed will still be sown in school-houses, in groves, as well as churches of the West. I hope our English friends will not forget us and our work, and will ask at the throne of grace that special help may be granted to ministers and people during this season of distress. I heartily thank those friends who send me from time to time literature for distribution among the people.

Hadden contributes "Anecdotes of Marrying and Giving in Marriage." An extract from a paper by Dr. T. M. Madden, emphasises important facts on the mental development of children. (7d. Bemrose & Sons.)

The Boy's Own Paper is just the periodical to stimulate the thought and imagination of growing lads. The contents are mainly of the story-telling type, but even here the matter is varied; for, if one of the running serials depicts adventures abroad, another deals with school and country life at home. Rev. L. Meadows White contributes "Jottings by a Cyclist"; Mr. Frank Cowper writes on "My First Yacht-race"; and Rev. Theodore Wood on "The Naturalist at the Seaside." (6d. Religious Tract Society.)

The Girl's Own Paper deserves the popularity it enjoys. Its pages provide instructive reading, as well as entertainment. In the current issue, Sarah Tytler writes on "Tudor Queens and Princesses"; and Dora de Blaquiere on "Women's 'Noms de Plume.'" Mrs. Ernest Hart describes German, Swiss, Dutch, Danish, and Swedish Laces, and Gleeson White some old Japanese embroideries. The contents are varied, the Answers to Correspondents and serial tales being uniformly wholesome. (6d. Religious Tract Society.)

Scribner's Magazine. The series of articles descriptive of homes in city and country is continued by a paper on "The Country House," by Donald G. Mitchell. The illustrations admirably depict American scenery and architecture. Thomas Stevens writes on "African River and Lake Systems"; N. S. Shaler begins a series, which promises to prove of wide interest, on "Nature and Man in America"; and under the title of "A Crown Jewel," C. Emma Cheney describes Heligoland and its people. This last is accompanied by excellent engravings from drawings and photographs. (1s. F. Warne & Co.)

The Young Man. 1d. 8, Paternoster-row. Rev. J. Reid Howatt gives "Hints and Helps for the Battle of Life"; and Rev. W. J. Dawson, writes tersely on the art of public speaking.

The British Messenger. 1d. Stirling Tract Enterprise. Pure in teaching and spiritual in tone. The serial "Loyal to Truth" is continued. There is an inspiring article on Christian service.

The Band of Hope Chronicle (1d.) contains sound advice on "The Education of Children in Temperance Principles," by Charles Wakely. Dr. Ridge continues to write on "Alcohol and the Human Body." (4, Ludgate-hill, E.C.)

In The Christian Worker (1d. Partridge) earnest endeavour in various directions is described in language coming from the heart. "The Atonement in the Light of Revelation" is the title of an address (given in part) by F. H. Bowman, D.Sc., F.R.S.

The Advance, the monthly magazine of the West London Mission, records important developments in the work which Rev. Hugh Price Hughes directs. Marion Elaine Wisesse (West) continues "The Story of my Life as an Actress." (1d. Woodford, Fawcett & Co., Salisbury-square.)

China's Millions (1d. Morgan & Scott) opens with "The Last Days of Miss Annie Dunn," extracted from the diary of Mr. G. A. Huntley; pathetic and cheering, for while there was much suffering, there was full confidence in the Saviour. "The Story of Mr. Ts'u" is a specially attractive contribution. Mr. Ts'u is one of the most interesting native Christians, and head of a clan of over 10,000.

Service for the King affords a pleasant glimpse of Mildmay work. An account is given of the recent garden party at Marlborough House, when the nurses were the guests of the Princess of Wales. Perhaps the most interesting pages are those in which Rev. John Wilkinson tells how God is blessing his world-wide work among the Jews. Details are given of the two contributions of £5000 each towards the further circulation of God's Word among the people of Israel. The reports of work cover a wide field, and are in a high degree encouraging. (2d. Shaw & Co.)

"A. 1" is a very useful magazine, containing something for readers of different ages and tastes. There are stories, of course; a new serial is "From Chrysalis to Butterfly," by Isabel Hornibrook. In the department of travel, Arthur Montefiore writes "In Sunny Spain," and Knyghte Ryder "Nancy's Ten Pound Tour." Recreation is well represented; Mrs. Tom Jerrold contributes "The Garden in the House," and Walter E. Woodbury enlarges upon the wonders of photography, even explaining how "spirit photographs" are produced. There are in these pages short pieces for leisure moments, as well as abundant provision for more sustained reading. The illustrations are numerous and good. (6d. Partridge.)

The Missionary Review of the World. Dr. Pierson contributes an article of absorbing interest on "The Supernatural Factor in Missions." He shows with much force of fact and argument that there has been a governing power behind missions. "The whole century has been full of new developments, which have been so much beyond all human devising as to present a series of surprises to the Church herself. As a new emergency has arisen, a new interposition has been evident. The Church has found in every crisis a higher hand controlling." The mission in Basutoland is graphically described by Dr. Andrew Thomson, of Edinburgh. The reports from foreign countries are extended and numerous. Missions may be studied to excellent purpose with this magazine. (1s. Funk & Wagnalls, 44, Fleet-street.)

The Church Missionary Intelligencer (6d.) opens with a stimulating article entitled "Forward!" There are letters on the Shanghai Missionary Conference; an account of lay evangelistic work in Bengal; and a description of the Bhil Mission. Rev. R. H. Walker sends graphic letters from Uganda. In March last a feeling of greater security was prevailing among the people, and houses were being built, roads made, &c. One of the first acts of the Christian chiefs has been to undertake the building of a church. No heathen are allowed to hold any office in the newly organised government of the land. All the people want peace, as the food supply depends thereupon. The letters strongly emphasise the appeal for fresh workers. "It is," says the editor, "a tremendous responsibility for the Church Missionary Society to be the one representative of Protestant Christianity in so wide and inviting a field as Equatorial Africa now presents." (Church Missionary House, Salisbury-square.)

The Tract Magazine (1d. Religious Tract Society) gives the first part of a sketch of Bishop Ken, author of the hymn beginning "Glory to Thee, my God, this night." "A Woman's Story," in verse, points many admirable lessons.

The Welcome Hour. The proverb illustrated this month is "A rolling stone gathers no moss." Dr. G. H. Riches carries forward his articles on "The Beginnings and Growth of History," Spain and Portugal being the last countries dealt with. (1d. Marshall Bros.)

In consonance with the holiday season, a large proportion of the contents of The Quiver is of the lighter sort; though there are some good and short expository articles, and an interesting sketch of the late Mrs. Augustus Hare by Dr. Blaikie. This serial sustains its character for variety, brightness, and real profit.

The Reaper (1d. Marshall Bros.) is filled with interesting matter. Pastor F. E. Marsh writes on "Separation to God"; mission work in Southern Morocco is described; and Messrs. Hannington & Richmond tell the story of their journey on foot through the Holy Land. Church officialism and the life of faith are among the subjects dealt with editorially.

The Jewish Intelligence. 1d. Nisbet. "The Present Attitude of the Jews towards the Christian Church and towards the Nations," by Rev. John Pitkin, gives a large amount of valuable information. The Jewish Herald (1d. Snow) contains notes on Mission work in the Holy Land, by Rev. A. Ben Oliel; and an account, by Rev. C. A. Schoenberger, of a visit to the well-known Rabbi Lichtenstein, at Tapio-Szele.

North Africa opens with a financial statement as to the excellent work of the North Africa Mission during last year. Extracts from the journal of Mr. W. Summers give particulars which are well worth reading of a recent journey into the Sous country, a district south of Mogador. Mr. G. Mercadier describes Bible work in Susa and Kerouan, and Miss C. S. Jennings writes on "Camping in a Moorish Village." (1d. Partridge.)

The small publications of Messrs. Partridge include: The Family Friend, which is always very readable. The work of Rev. James Calvert in the Fiji islands is briefly related, with capital illustrations.—The Mothers' Companion is also a capital magazine for the home. Josepha Crane writes on "The Art of Nursing," and Sarah Tytler on the outer circle of "Kith and Kin," beginning with the step-mother.—The Friendly Visitor, in large type, will delight the aged. (1d. each.)

The Chronicle of the London Missionary Society. 1s. Snow. An article on "Founders' Week" affords opportunity for rehearsing, in brief, the story (ever welcome as illustrating the faith and courage of our fathers) of the establishment of the London Missionary Society. In addition to a digest of news from abroad, these pages contain an account of a trip to the Fly River, New Guinea, by Rev. James Chalmers, and notes on "Christian Leaders and Church Life in Amoy," by Rev. John Macgowan.

Evangelical Christendom.—The organ of the Evangelical Alliance, this monthly summarises the best of all activity as it goes forward throughout the world. A spirit of kindness characterises the controversial portions, while the records of efforts to carry on the work of Christ are uniformly pitched in the high key of duty earnestly pursued. The open letter of Rev. Dr. Dalton, of Edinburgh, to the head of the Russian Synod, on "Religious Liberty in Russia," is concluded. This deliverance is pregnant with facts and arguments which will, it is hoped, be duly estimated by the authorities. The writer says, in conclusion, "Proofs have been heaped up that you have neither found the weapons of your combat, against liberty of conscience and the Lutheran Church of the Baltic Provinces, in the armoury of your Church nor in the heart of the Russian people. Both contain better arms. We have recognised in your instruments of warfare the mark of Rome and the Jesuits. Thank God, the Russian people, with their patience and piety, are clumsy in the use of such weapons, and in time will certainly rebel against their chiefs carrying on a war with a sister Church in their name. For they see that the blows dealt by such weapons must inflict disaster on State and Church. Whether you will live to see this revulsion of feeling is in God's hand. It would bring you increased suffering, but, however that may be, the Apostle points to a time beyond the fleeting life of each human being, and the day on which every work shall be made manifest." (6d. J. S. Phillips, 121, Fleet-street.)

Our Darlings, the children's treasury, edited by Dr. Barnardo, is, as usual, bright with pictures and filled with attractive reading. (3d. Shaw & Co.)

Y.W.C.A. Monthly Journal. Secretaries and workers will find this specially useful. There are notes on the various departments of effort in town and country, at home and abroad. (2d. Office: 316, Regent-street, W.)

Irish Congregational Magazine. 1d. Belfast: W. W. Cleland, 20, Great Victoria-street. Rev. J. Cregan, who edits this capital monthly, gives notes of a holiday in London. Rev. James Ervine, of Kingstown, writes on "The Silence of Jesus," and there are terse and helpful notes on passing events.

The Worker's Monthly becomes increasingly valuable, its contents being specially intended to assist Sunday-school teachers in their work. "The Christian's Mission, Commission, and Field," is good, also "The Route of the Exodus," both by the editor, Rev. S. R. Crockett. (2d. Gall & Inglis.)

The Cottager and Artisan (1d. Religious Tract Society) gives a portrait and sketch of Thomas A. Edison, the inventor, with some account of his talking dolls.—The British Workman (1d. Partridge & Co.) tells the story of Richard Arkwright, the founder of the factory system, and enforces wholesome lessons in other articles.

Home Words gives a portrait and biographical sketch of Right Rev. Alfred R. Tucker, bishop of Eastern Equatorical Africa. The editor, Rev. Charles Bullock, writes on Alpine Climbers, the article being illustrated. In The Day of Days, Mr. W. Davenport Adams tells the story of Anne Askew, the martyr. (1d. each. 7, Paternoster-square.)

Rest and Reaping. 1d. Morgan & Scott. This monthly, edited by Charlotte Mason, gives details of varied work, and contains some very instructive articles. "Young Yuk-kevai; or, A Chinese Jewel Reset," is continued, by M. J. Oxlad; Mrs. McHardie writes on "The Mizpah Band" (Glasgow), and the editor on Biblical themes, prophetic and otherwise.

The Voice of Warning. 1d. Monthly Tract Society, 181, Queen Victoria-street. Rev. W. Burnett, M.A., writes of the witness of the Jew to the truth of the Bible. Several sections are given of an Act passed in the reign of George IV. for the registration of Jesuits and members of other religious orders; and the editor pertinently says: "If, as we are informed, the Act has never been repealed, why is it not enforced?"

The Sentinel, the organ of the social purity movement, fully justifies its existence. "Infant Marriage and Enforced Widowhood in India," is discussed at some length, and sad facts cry aloud for the redress of an enormous wrong. Several questions involving public morality are brought under notice. This little paper watches the commonweal as affected by iniquities old and new; and faithfully asserts the application of Christian principles to the life and actions of all sorts and conditions of men. (1d. Dyer Brothers, Paternoster-square.)

MESSRS. CASSELL & CO.'S SERIALS.

THE DICTIONARY OF RELIGION, a very useful work, has proceeded as far as part 5 of the reissue. Answers to a thousand questions, religious and ecclesiastical, will be found here.—The cheap reissue of Farrar's LIFE OF CHRIST makes a bid for many readers. Part 8 carries forward the story as far as the teaching by parables on the shores of the Sea of Galilee.—THE HOLY LAND AND THE BIBLE, by Dr. Geikie, is an excellent work. Part 12 gives a graphic description of Bethlehem, ancient and modern.—Part 18 of CONQUESTS OF THE CROSS continues the account of missions in India by describing the great work of Dr. Duff. The revolution in Japan is the title of another very attractive chapter.—THE LIBRARY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. The second volume of this work concludes with part 20, which contains a very instructive chapter on Newman, Arnold, Maurice, Kingsley, Whately, and others who have been celebrated in the theological world.—THE WORLD OF ADVENTURE is replete with stirring stories. Part 24, which concludes the second volume, relates experiences among savages, and exciting incidents in civilised life.—THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS AND THE HOLY WAR is completed with part 24. The closing chapter, Immanuel's Address to Mansoul, reads as fresh as ever, and proclaims itself a fitting end to a noble work.—Dr. Wylie's well-known HISTORY OF PROTESTANTISM, in part 28, begins the story of Protestantism in Poland and Bohemia. The painful character of many incidents is relieved by records of devotion on the part of those who took their stand for God and his truth.—Part 47 of CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF ENGLAND, in the new and revised edition, is occupied with matters of world-wide interest, including the trial of Warren Hastings, the French Revolution and its effects in England, and early efforts to abolish the slave trade.—THE OLD TESTAMENT COMMENTARY FOR ENGLISH READERS, edited by Bishop Ellicott, will, when completed, prove a work of immense utility. Part 72 carries forward text and comments as far as Jer. xxiii.

JOYFUL TIDINGS FOR YOUNG AND OLD is a capital series of tracts, published by Mr. A. Holness; in packets, 75 copies, assorted for 6d.

ROMANISM. Some useful tracts on this subject by Miss E. J. Whately are published by Mr. W. Wileman, 34, Bouverie-street, E.C. (1s. and 2s. per 100.)

GOD OR SELF? By Rev. Samuel McComb, B.D., of Reading. A cogent and forcible criticism (in lecture form) of the Secularist theory of life. (E. Stock.)

THE USE OF SUFFERING. By Edith Edmundson. Sixpence per dozen. Partridge. Here are words of substantial comfort for such as have "to suffer and to bear."

Two interesting penny tracts, by "M. A. (Cantab.)" are THE PROPHECY OF THE ANTICHRIST and APOSTOLICAL SUCCESSION. The author finds the Antichrist in the Papal power.

THE CHURCH AND THE AGE. An address by Rev. G. H. Brown, Chairman of the Congregational Union of Gloucestershire and Herefordshire. Thoughtful and stimulating. (2d. Bristol: W. F. Mack, 70, Park-street.)

In a small booklet, entitled, WHAT THE BIBLE SAYS ABOUT IT, and issued by the Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C., there are gathered many weighty passages of Scripture respecting the sin of impurity and its results.

Messrs. Partridge & Co. are publishing popular editions of wholesome stories at a penny. Among those lately issued are JACK THE CONQUEROR (by Mrs. C. E. Bowen), HOW PETER'S POUND BECAME A PENNY, and GRANDMOTHER'S CHILD (by Annie S. Swan).

THE CITY QUARTERLY: THE MAGAZINE OF THE Y.M.C.A. WHITTINGTON-AVENUE, LEADENHALL-STREET, E.C. This is a new penny publication. It describes a grand work among City clerks and others, and will, we trust, prove a helpful agency in the development of that work.

SOME PHYSICAL ASPECTS OF THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION. A lecture delivered at Torquay by George Black, M.B. 1d. National Temperance Publication Depôt. A weighty pamphlet on a deeply important subject. The facts are well marshalled, and made the basis of unanswerable arguments.

"HE LEADETH ME" is the title of a booklet describing how the Lord led Elbert S. and Emma Clarke to devote their lives to Gospel work among the Kaffirs in South Africa. It should induce many to help on the good work. Copies of the booklet may be had from Mrs. S. Fothergill, Pierremont-crescent, Darlington.

IGNATIAN DIFFICULTIES AND HISTORIC DOUBTS. A etter to the Dean of Peterborough. By Rev. R. C. Jenkins, M.A. David Nutt. Here are powerful arguments against the genuineness of the Epistles of Ignatius. The ecclesiastical spirit pervading the Epistles declares for an origin considerably later than the second century.

ON SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHING. An address by Dr. M. C. Hime, head master of Foyle College, Londonderry. Dublin: Sunday-school Society for Ireland, 17, Upper Sackville-street. The true character of the work is stated, and valuable hints given as to how it may be made more effective. Essentially practical, this pamphlet is likely to serve a very useful purpose.

Mr. Kensit's recent publications include two trenchant pamphlets on great evils:—REASONS AGAINST IMAGES IN CHURCHES, adduced from Scripture, church history, &c., by W. H. Tucker; and THE TEACHING OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND AS TO CHURCH ORNAMENTS AND THE PERIL OF IDOLATRY, by Rev. W. Heber Wright, M.A. The former costs twopence, and the latter a penny.

Some excellent missionary tracts are being issued from The Orphans' Printing Press, Broad-street, Leominster. It would be well for some of them to be circulated among church members generally. Extracts from Rev. J. G. Paton's "Autobiography," and Rev. J. Hudson Taylor's article in China's Millions, are very stimulating reading. "The Reflex Influence of Missionary Work" gives a collection of exceedingly valuable testimonies. (1s. per 100.)

Literature for Soldiers at Sea.—Rev. F. Flynn, Chaplain of H.M.S. Indian troopship Euphrates, writes to say that his vessel will soon be engaged in carrying troops to India. He says that generally they take a thousand troops, besides many wives and children of the soldiers. He is very anxious to have a good supply of reading matter for those on board during the twenty-eight days' voyage, and asks the help of our readers in providing a store of good Gospel literature in the shape of magazines, weekly religious papers, tracts, small books, cards, and hymn sheets for the children; copies of Songs and Solos, as well as good books for a lending library. Interesting slides for a magic lantern would be most acceptable; as also would copies of the illustrated and daily papers. Mr. Flynn may be addressed H.M.S. Euphrates, Portsmouth.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

REGENERATION.

DEAR SIR,—Mr. Webb-Peploe says, "the very moment a man receives the blessed truth that God was in Christ saving him, he receives regeneration ...and he is endued with the Holy Spirit." How is this to be reconciled with Acts xix. 1-6; where believing, being baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, and receiving the Holy Ghost, are described as three successive states?—Yours faithfully, Château d'Oex, Suisse. E. H.

REPLY.

Believing and being baptized cannot be called successive states. As soon as they believed the disciples were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus as the confession of their faith in Him. And as soon as they had been baptized Paul laid his hands upon them, and the Holy Ghost came on them. All happened as nearly simultaneously as three consecutive but closely-related events could follow each other.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—On Thursday last week, at the Bedford Chapel Schools, Charrington-street, Camden Town, Mr. John H. L. Christien, of the above Society, gave an address on Palestine and Syria, on personal recollections of travel there—on the fufilment of prophecy in the condition of the land and of the people, resident and dispersed, showing clearly the causes of the ruin and decay of home life and national life, and proving that the same causes of family decadence and national disaster exist strongly in the United Kingdom. One of these causes of ruin it is the business of the above Society to actively combat. Mr. Christien appealed earnestly for Christian help.

SEAMEN ON THE DEVON COAST.—The Sailors' Rest opened by the Seamen's Christian Friend Society at Appledore three years ago has proved a great success, and has been a blessing to numbers of seamen and fishermen. The commodious and attractive reading-room is always well filled, and the mission services are crowded. On the occasion of the annual meeting, held on August 28, the building was packed with seamen and fisherfolk. Mr. W. D. Hanson, J.P., who is the local treasurer and mainstay of the work, presided, and gave a very gratifying account of the work. Mr. Cairns, the earnest sailor-missionary, by means of his mission boat carries on a good work at Bideford, Barnstaple, &c. Mr. George Williams, of London (president of the Society), addressed the men in a most faithful, clear, and winning way, and General Sibthorp, Rev. G. J. Hill, and Mrs. Hill, of London, also took part in the proceedings. A week's special mission is being conducted by Rev. G. J. and Mrs. Hill. Every night the Sailors' Rest is crowded, and blessing attends the meetings.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Services conducted during the current month, by Mr. Herbert R. Francis, in Eccleston Hall, S.W.——A mission to be held at Luton, Beds., by Mr. Walter Bradbury.——A fourteen days' mission in Bradford, by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, commencing Sept. 6.——Camp meetings on Sunday and Monday next, at Pontypool.——Tent services at Bakewell, Derbyshire, by Messrs. Pope and Thorpe, of the East London Institute.——A mission by Mr. William Forbes, at Glasgow, to commence on Sunday, Sept. 7.——Children's services on the sands, and at the Gospel meetings at the "Hall-by-the-Sea," Margate.——Two weeks' mission at Five Oaks, by Mr. John Stanger.——A united mission in Airdrie, conducted by Mr. John M. Scroggie, commencing Sunday, Sept. 7.——A work of the Holy Spirit in the parish of St. Mary's, Halifax.——The new Baptist Chapel, Nantmawr, Buckley, to be opened on Sept. 9.——Special Gospel meetings, to be held in the Callander Mission-hall, from Sept. 7 to 14, conducted by Mr. Arnold, from London.——That Mr. and Mrs. Somerset Gardner may have a safe voyage to America, and be there used of the Lord for his glory.——That efforts for the spread of the Gospel, in connection with the Baptist Chapel, Birchington, may be richly owned of God.——On behalf of a lady who is suffering from a mortal illness, that she may be led to trust in the Saviour.——PRAISE: For blessing on a three weeks' mission at Billingshurst, by Mr. John Stanger.——For saving blessing on tent mission in Haddingtonshire.——For blessing received during a recent mission at Chipping Sodbury.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. George Rodney Eden, vicar of Bishop Auckland, has been nominated Suffragan Bishop of Dover.

With a view to aggressive work, steps are being taken to obtain a complete list of all Welsh-speaking clergy labouring in England.

Archdeacon Denison declares his intention to move for the appointment of the Committee of Inquiry in Convocation with respect to the teachings of Lux Mundi.

The Bishop of Chester has just created an order of "Special Service Clergy" for general mission work. The order has some features in common with the brotherhood advocated by Archdeacon Farrar and others.

Dr. Philpott, Bishop of Worcester, who is eighty-two years of age, has resigned his see. Although still active and in good health, he feels that the time has come when he should give place to a younger man. The establishment of the proposed new see of Birmingham and Coventry is being discussed. The late Bishop had promised to surrender £800 of his annual income in favour of the scheme.

The Bishop of Lichfield is issuing invitations to about 100 Nonconformist ministers in the diocese, inviting them to luncheon, on Michaelmas Day, at Bishopstowe, the episcopal palace at Lichfield. It is understood that there is no intention of discussing the questions which separate the ministers from the Church, or of considering the subject of Home Reunion, but there will be additional meetings in which the Nonconformist ministers will be invited to take part, and evening service at the cathedral, in which they will be asked to join.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A Presbyterian church has been organised in Cuba. Mr. Graybill, a missionary of the Southern Church in Mexico, found in Havanna about thirty persons who were in the habit of meeting for prayer and the study of the Scriptures under the direction of Signor Collezo. After holding services for about a month, and instructing them in the principles of the Christian faith and of the Presbyterian Church, he organised a church of twenty-nine members, who elected two elders and two deacons. Then the church was of one mind in desiring Signor Collezo to become their pastor, and this wish has been realised.

METHODIST.

Rev. W. Darlow Sargeant is now added to the list of the West London Wesleyan missioners.

Rev. Thomas Champness preached at St. John's-square, Clerkenwell, on Sunday last, morning and evening.

A proposal is made that in connection with the centenary of John Wesley's death a fund should be raised sufficient to endow City-road Chapel, London, with £200 a year.

A new Bible Christian Mission has been opened at Southsea with encouraging results. The hall newly erected is well filled with the congregation; a membership has been formed consisting of nearly forty persons, and a Sabbath-school has been commenced with over one hundred children.

A new chapel has been opened at Arkholme, where services have hitherto been held in a room. The site (given by Mr. F. Pearson) adjoins a public-house, which has been purchased, and is being converted into a schoolroom and two cottages. Accommodation is provided for 120 worshippers.

Mr. George Fowler, of Rock Ferry, has presented a house of rest at Grange-over-Sands for the use of Wesleyan ministers. The building is rapidly progressing, is beautifully situated, and commands from its lofty position on the hillside a magnificent view over Morecambe Bay and the Lake District.

The West-end Mission in Edinburgh has lately been attended with remarkable success. Rev. George Jackson's congregation has grown so much at the evening service that it has been found necessary to move from the Albert Hall into the U.P. Synod Hall, the largest and best in the city, seating two thousand persons.

The Wesleyan Methodist Sunday School Report, just issued, shows that there are 6,936 schools, 129,285 teachers, and 932,888 scholars. The average attendance is in the morning 349,612, and in the afternoon 603,041. Of the teachers 106,235 are members of the Church, as are also 73,781 of the scholars, whilst 57,649 are returned as belonging to junior society classes.

Truth says:—"A clergyman at a Bristol church, on Sunday week, substituted one of John Wesley's discourses for his own composition. This reverend gentleman had the sense and courage to declare that 'he should not apologise for delivering another man's sermon, but he thought it might be well, perhaps, if he apologised for delivering some of his own occasionally.'"

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The Committee appointed last year by the Dublin Yearly Meeting is actively at work in Ulster. Social gatherings, succeeded by earnest advice, were held last week at Lurgan and Bessbrook. At the former a very large public meeting was held on Sunday week. Thomas W. Fisher and John Douglas, jun., of Dublin, have rendered able help to the local members of the Committee. There is doubtless an open door in the North for the evangelisation and teaching that once characterised the Friends.

SALVATION ARMY.

During the last three months 108 candidates have applied for officership in India and Ceylon.

Adelaide has followed Melbourne and Brisbane, and started rescue and prison gate work. The premier (Dr. Cockburn) and the Sheriff have both promised material assistance.

Mr. Herbert Booth, youngest son of the General, is to be married to Captain Corrie Schoch, at Clapton Congress Hall, on Thursday, September 18. Miss Schoch has two sisters engaged in the work in London. They are the daughters of an officer who has resigned an important commission under the King of Holland to give himself and family entirely to the work of the Salvation Army.

BAPTIST.

Mr. J. Francis Matthews, late of Nottingham College, has accepted the pastorate at Audlem, Cheshire, and commences his ministry on September 7.

Upton Vale Chapel, Torquay, has been re-opened after undergoing extensive alterations. The interior of the building has been completely renovated. Rev. E. G. Gange, of Bristol, preached the opening sermon.

Mr. T. Idwal Jones, of North Wales College, has accepted the pastorate of the historic church at Llynceiriog. This church was founded in 1760. At that time there were only two other Baptist churches in Denbighshire; now there are nearly fifty, with a united membership of 3270.

The centenary of Kingston Baptist Church, Union-street, Bristol, is being celebrated this month by special services. The friends were fortunate in securing Pastor C. H. Spurgeon as preacher for Wednesday, September 3, and Pastor Archibald G. Brown for Wednesday, September 10. It is hoped that the season will prove beneficial spiritually, and that means will be raised for the much-needed renovation of the chapel.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Dr. Parker recently preached in the Established Church at St. Fillans. Canon Scott was present, as were many visitors from various parts of Scotland.

During the fourteen months of Rev. M. D. Morgan's pastorate at Harwich, the congregations have, it is reported, more than doubled, and the attendance at the Sunday-school has increased from 100 to 400.

Collins-street Church, Melbourne, has become a centre of social and philanthropic activities. Dr. Bevan is (says The Australian Independent) in the midst of it all—ever active, always genial, equally at home in the pulpit, on the platform, and in the committee-room. The church is popularly known and advertised as "Dr. Bevan's Church." The Salvation Army find it a suitable and profitable place for holding their annual Prison Gate and Rescue demonstrations.

The report of the Church Aid Society for 1889-90 shows that assistance was rendered to 677 churches and branch churches, in addition to 381 evangelistic stations and mission stations connected with them. The number of church members increased from 32,116, the total returned at the end of the preceding year, to 35,000, an increase taking place in all the county associations except five. There was a slight falling off in the number of Sunday-school teachers and scholars.

Rev. W. Scott, of Brisbane (late of Hull), has been delivering a series of lectures on "The Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures." They have attracted considerable attention as a contribution to present-day theological discussion from the evangelical standpoint. Mr. Scott commenced his ministry, on December 8, by preaching in the Wharf-street Church. He soon introduced into the service a sermonette for children. In January was commenced the minister's class for little children, which numbered eighty-five and was increasing. Since the new minister's arrival mission services have been held, resulting in the deepening of the spiritual life of the church. A Christian Endeavour Society has been formed, consisting of eighty members with several committees actively at work.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

In two or three Presbyterian congregations in Belfast collecting boxes are now employed for foreign missions. Since the adoption of the system the subscriptions of the congregations concerned have increased about tenfold.

Methodist home mission work has been prosecuted with vigour during the past year. Nearly 2000 new members were received during that time, and colportage and evangelistic efforts were carried on throughout the country without intermission. In the annual report many striking instances of encouragement and success are recorded.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Matthew Dickie, of Alva, minister of the United Presbyterian Church.—Mr. Charles Goodwin Smith, aged 80, deacon of Cannon-street Congregational Church, Louth; for several years president of the local Sunday School Union.—Rev. Alexander Ferguson, Presbyterian minister, Kilkinamurray, co. Down, who for many years laboured at Corbay, co. Longford.—Mr. Thomas Harker, of Bishop Auckland, well known throughout the north of England as a Wesleyan evangelist.—Rev. Richard Abbey Tindall, rector of Cowden, Edenbridge, for a long time rector of St. Stephen's, Chorlton-on-Medlock.—Rev. D. B. Tinning, pastor of the Congregational Church, Richmond, Tasmania, a native of Carlisle, who left England in 1849.—Miss Elizabeth Bultitude, aged 80, for nearly thirty years a successful travelling preacher in connection with the Primitive Methodists, and the last of the female ministers which years ago did such important service to the Connexion.—Rev. Peter M'Kerron, of the North Church, Kelso, a man of varied activities, religious, educational, and parochial.—Rev. Henry Thomas, Congregational minister, for some years resident in Victoria, Australia, but for some time (returned to England) incapacitated by ill-health from doing any but occassional work.

Notices.

E. W.—If you will entrust us with your address we will write to you. Be assured that there is no one on earth who is willing to believe and obey the Gospel for whom there is no mercy. Leave off looking in upon yourself and look to Jesus. The Holy Spirit is given to those who accept and trust the crucified and risen Jesus as their Lord and Saviour.

REV. DR. NORMAN L. WALKER, of Dysart, has started on a two months' tour in America.

MR. WILLIAM FORBES, who has been holding services lately in the Metropolis and different parts of Surrey, will commence a mission at Glasgow, in a large tent, on Sunday next.

PASTORS' COLLEGE.—Evening classes at the Pastors' College, Newington, have been established to provide a free education for Christian workers and Bible students. The subjects are as follow: Greek, Theology, English Grammar, English Literature, Roman History, &c. There are also Greek and Shorthand classes for beginners, which are now in formation. Further particulars may be obtained by applying to the secretary, Mr. F. A. Patrick.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—The London County Council has granted the band-stand in Finsbury-park to the Open-air Mission for preaching on Sunday evenings during this month. Mr. Gawin Kirkham, the secretary, and Mr. Walter Jervis, secretary of the Camden Town branch of the Y.M.C.A., were the preachers last Sunday. Mr. Kirkham wishes us to say that helpers will be welcome to make "the service of song" attractive, and who can reach the Park without the use of public conveyances. The meeting commences at half-past six.

THE NAVAL MANŒUVRES.—An acting chaplain on board one of the troopships engaged in the recent manœuvres supplements Miss Weston's account, given in our last issue, by some details of Christian work done on board his ship. Bible-classes, mission services, and Gospel temperance meetings were held with deeply encouraging results. Our correspondent reports a number of hopeful professed conversions, besides many others inquiring after the way of life. He writes in the very highest terms of the work carried on in the Navy by Miss Weston and her helpers.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.—The Newquay (Cornwall) branch of the Church of England Missionary Society held their annual meeting on Monday evening. Lord Halsbury, in an address, remarked that opportunities were increasing for mitigating evil, but when one contrasted efforts for worldly conquest with efforts for propagating the Gospel of God, men must feel humiliated. Half a million was spent upon one ironclad, but, on the other hand, wide fields of ignorance and folly were left with no one to help or save. Let them get rid of the easy, slumbering conscience. They might thank God that there were signs of the rising light; yet until the Gospel was preached in all lands the glorious end would not come.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 7.—Psalm CXXI.

ANOTHER of the Pilgrim Psalms, prepared for the annual festival journeys. This seems to have been specially designed to be sung in view of the mountains about Jerusalem, and is probably an evening song for the pilgrim-band. The keynote of the Psalm is the word keep, which occurs six times in one form or another (see R.V.)

1. We must not be contented with looking merely at the hills, but above and beyond them. The loftiest and mightiest sources of help are too low for us. Nothing short of God will avail for us.

2. The name applied to the Lord, as Creator of heaven and earth, indicates his inexhaustible abundance of help. "Despair is madness in any one who has such a God to help him."

3. The sliding of the foot is a very natural type of misfortune, especially in so mountainous a land as Canaan, where it is in the highest degree dangerous to lose one's foothold (see also Gen. xxviii. 15).

4. This is said of Israel's foes (Isa. v. 27); but it is more true of Israel's God. When the pilot comes on board the captain may turn in to sleep.

5. Shade is a metaphor for protection from the scorching heat, like Jonah's gourd. God is a Sun (Ps. lxxxiv. 11), but He is a shadow from the heat (Ps. xci. 1; Isa. xxv. 4).

6. Heat and cold stand for the extremes of condition to which we are all exposed. Sometimes everything is warm and bright around us, at other times we are lonely and depressed; but in all circumstances God is sufficient (Phil. iv. 12).

7. These repeated assurances are to calm and quiet our unbelief, which needs to be told again and again that God will watch over his own. Nothing that happens to us can be evil. Whatever God lets pass through the meshes of his protection must be good.

8. The "going out" is for work and service; the "coming in" may be for rest and refreshment. The Good Shepherd keeps his flock through all (John x. 9).

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 8.—Psalm CXXII.

If the former Psalm was sung of the pilgrim-band, when retiring to rest on the last evening, when Jerusalem was already in sight. This would be sung one station further on, when the pilgrims had reached the gates of Jerusalem, and halted for the purpose of arranging themselves for solemn procession to the temple.

It is ascribed to David, and internal evidence confirms the inscription. The city was newly built and beautified, and was the seat of David's government. The house of the Lord, referred to in ver. 1 and 9, is clearly the early sanctuary, which was known by this name (Jud. xviii. 31, xix. 18).

1. There is an illustration of this in Isa. ii. 3. It was much to have reached Jerusalem, but much more to have a desire to visit the Lord's house, for that was not merely a material edifice—it was also the place where God met pious souls. Oh for this desire after God!

2. "Our feet are standing" (R.V.). What a difference a step may make! All the difference between outside and inside—between a stranger and foreigner and a child at home.

3. Compare 2 Sam. v. 9. This is an expression of wonder that the stately city had arisen so quickly under the genius of David. What shall we not say, one day, of the new Jerusalem, when she descends from God in his glory (Rev. xxi. 2)?

4. From her external splendour the Psalmist passes on to praise her internal glory, in that she was the religious centre and metropolis of the nation. The law to that effect had been laid down in the opening of the national history (Exod. xxiii. 17; Deut. xvi. 16).

6. In the Hebrew there is a graceful alliteration in this verse:—

> Peace in the City of Peace;
> May those be at peace who love her!

as though David would make the beloved name as dear to his people as it was to himself. Prosperity still attends those who love the name and cause of God. In such souls there are already present the elements of prosperity and blessedness.

7. Let us never forget to pray for the good estate of the Church Universal; not in public only, but also in our private devotions. Such prayers must be dear to her Bridegroom, Christ.

8. All who are members of that Church are our brethren and friends.

9. Let us all strive to promote the cause of God by word and life, by exertions and prayers.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 9.—Psalm CXXIII.

This Psalm must by internal evidence be carried, as to its authorship, to a much later date than the preceding one. It was probably composed after the return from captivity, when Israel was suffering so much from the Samaritans and others (Ezra iv. and Neh. ii. 19). Calvin shows the application of the Psalm to the Church of all ages when he says: "The Holy Ghost, by a clear voice, incites us to come to God, as often as, not one and another member only, but the whole Church is unjustly and haughtily oppressed by the passions of her enemies."

1. Our Lord looked upward when He prayed (John xvii. 1), and He has taught us to look up to our Father in heaven. It is his throne (Matt. v. 34). Sometimes we cannot articulate words and sentences, but we can put a prayer into a look.

2. It has been truly said that the servant looks to the master's hand: (1) for direction; (2) for the supply of his needs; (3) for protection; (4) for correction; (5) for reward. A very slight gesture is enough to indicate the master's will. Oh to be so incessantly occupied with the Lord Jesus as to need but a sign! There is perhaps also here the thought of the eagerness with which the eyes of a slave watch for the master's signal that a fault has been expiated by sufficient chastisement. There is a striking parallel in the history of Hagar (Gen. xvi. 6. 8, 9).

3. Contempt is hard to bear, but we are taught to expect it, as the followers of Him who passed through storms of contumely, but who despised the shame (Heb. xii. 2-4). Set your hearts on the joy set before you, and rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, "that when his glory is revealed, ye also may rejoice with great joy."

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10.—Psalm CXXIV.

One of David's Psalms, perhaps written during the Aramaic-Edomitic war (2 Sam. viii. 3-13; compare Ps. xliv., lx.). Luther says, "We may well sing this Psalm, not only against our enemies who openly hate and persecute us, but also against spiritual wickedness."

1. What an If is this! One shudders to think what and where we might have been without the delivering, preserving hand of our God. If we are on the Lord's side, and walking uprightly, we need never doubt as to whether He is on our side. That we may rest assured about.

2. Weigh these two in the balances, God and men; and how unworthy do our fears appear! (Ps. lvi. 11.)

3. Probably an allusion to the destruction of the company of Korah (Num. xvi 32, 33). The word quick is old English for "alive."

4, 5. Yet, as a matter of fact, the proud waters never have gone over us. They have threatened us again and again, but there has always been a "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther" (Job xxxviii. 11). God makes of soft sand a strong bar to the sea. His voice on high is greater than the voices of the waves (Job. xxxviii. 8; Ps. xciii. 3, 4). Trust Him. As it has been, so shall it be.

6. These outbursts of praise are so characteristic of the sweet Psalmist (Ps. xxviii. 6, xxxi. 21).

7. We have often marvelled at the way in which the evil one ensnares us. Quite unexpectedly he begins to weave the meshes of some net around the soul, and seems about to hold it his captive. And then, all suddenly, the strong and deft hand of our Heavenly Friend interposes, as we sometimes interpose on behalf of a struggling insect in a spider's web. The snare falls into a tangled heap, and the soul is free.

8. All the help of Omnipotence is pledged on the side of the weakest of the saints. Lean back upon it, and be strong!

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11.—Psalm CXXV.

"The Church first sang this Psalm under the oppression of heathen rule (3), but in her own land; from the natural features of which the figures of her security in the Divine protection are taken. Struggling with manifold troubles, which might have led her to doubt as to the protecting favour of God, she here rises above these to faith, whilst many of her members were true, others had departed from the living God (4, 5). These circumstances are exactly those which existed after the deliverance from captivity; at the time when the building of the temple was interrupted (compare Ps. cxx., cxxi.)."—Hengstenberg.

1. Trust so links us and our cause to God, that we acquire something of his stability; as the limpet, sticking fast to the rock, partakes of the nature of the rock.

2. Robinson says: "The sacred city lies upon the broad and high mountain range, shut in by two deep valleys. All the surrounding hills are higher; in the east, the Mount of Olives, on the south the Hill of Evil Counsel, which ascends from the Valley of Himmon." What an exquisite picture this is of the believer, God-encompassed; God-encircled; God-girt! And as the mountains made Jerusalem well-nigh inaccessible and impregnable, so is God round about us, warding off the attacks of our foes. They cannot get at us except through Him. Oh that our eyes might be opened to see the invulnerable walls by which we are surrounded (2 Kings vi. 17).

3. The wicked do oppress the righteous: but their oppression shall not be permanent; that the righteous may not be tempted to relinquish their righteousness, and relapse into backsliding.

4. God is to us what we are to Him (Ps. xviii. 25, 26).

5. Crooked ways are by-paths or private ways, apart from the highways. The commandments of God are as the public road. To travel along them is to be at peace. To diverge from them is certain misery.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 12.—Psalm CXXVI.

The circumstances in which this Psalm was written are evident upon its face. The exiles were still rejoicing with the new ecstacy of deliverance from captivity, and were extremely anxious as to their future. The first three verses express their joy, the fourth is a prayer for complete deliverance.

1. A fulfilment of Isa. lii. 8. There are times when the soul seems to dwell in a captivity which hinders both its joy and free devotion. And then suddenly and unexpectedly the captivity is turned. The soul is restored, and is as in times past. It is the Lord's doing, and we are as in a blessed dream (Acts xii. 9).

2. God loves the singing and laughter of his saints. Trust and wait. The memory of your present anguish shall be soon forgotten in tumults of joy (Job viii. 21).

3. Joel ii. 21.

4. Much had been done for the exiles; but a large portion of the nation was still in bondage, and heavy disabilities remained on those who had returned. When God has done much for us, we may venture to ask more. The metaphor of "streams in the south" is derived from the rapidity with which, after the heavy rains, the dry watercourses become flushed with torrent streams. Would that to our hearts and churches might come abundant life, as when the snows melt in the springtime and flush the brooks.

5, 6. The sowing and reaping are figurative expressions for the commencement of undertakings and their results. Often the farmer who sows in anxiety is agreeably disappointed with the harvest. And this is invariably the case with the children of God. They are often in pain and sorrow, but when these are undergone for righteousness' sake, they must be followed by a harvest of joy, which shall be a hundredfold compensation (Matt. xix. 29; Luke vi. 21). Let the Christian worker not count as lost the seeds he sows or the tears in which he steeps them. But let all such rest on that word doubtless, which is God's guarantee. Precious tears, precious seed, precious reward. Comp. Jer. xxxi. 9, 12.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 13.—Psalm CXXVII.

This Psalm may have been suggested to Solomon by the building of the temple. It teaches us to depend in all our undertakings on the blessing of God. The Divine blessing is the only true source of prosperity; and it should be sought on the threshold of every undertaking.

1. There is no condemnation implied here against our building and watching, but against our doing anything independently of God; or as if we could permanently succeed apart from Him. We must be fellow-workers with Him (Prov. x. 22).

2. Bread of trouble is that eaten amid hard labour; rising early and sitting late thereat; reminding us of the ancient curse. What a picture this is of the anxiety and care which fall to the lot of so many! On the other hand, the beloved children of God, whilst they do not slack their toils (2 Thess. iii. 12), are yet relieved of the over-pressure of the nightmare of care. When they have done their best, they leave the results to God and sleep peacefully; and by night, the blessing or deliverance comes to them, they know not how. There is an alternative reading preferred by some: "He giveth unto his beloved in sleep." That is, that whilst those who know not God as a Father are wearing themselves down with labour and sorrow, blessing comes to the faithful even when they are resting and asleep.

3. We have here an illustration of how all we have is due to the Lord's tender care. Our family life is his gift (Gen. xxx. 2, xxxiii. 5).

4, 5. Figures are multiplied in these verses, which have thus been expounded in rhyme by Tate and Brady:—

As arrows in a giant's hand
When marching forth to war,
E'en so the sons of sprightly youth
Their parents' safeguard are.
Happy the man whose quiver's filled
With these prevailing arms;
He needs not fear to meet his foe
At law, or war's alarms.

Contending armies of a besieged city would meet at the gate (Judg. xvi. 2; Isa. xxii. 7). In view of the teaching of ver. 3, it thus appears that the comfort and support which dutiful children render to parents is of the Lord's appointment.

Sunday Afternoon, September 14.

PARABLE OF THE POUNDS.—LUKE xix. 11-27.

GOLDEN TEXT: Verse 26.

THIS parable, though very like that of the Talents (Matt. xxv.), is distinct from it. That was spoken later, and to the disciples alone (Matt. xxiv. 1, 2); this was addressed to a multitude which included many others besides disciples. Hence, in that, servants only are mentioned; in this, there are citizens also (14, 27), whose guilt and doom are intended as a solemn warning.

The people could not fail to see in the details of this parable an allusion to Archelaus. The palace built by that prince was in Jericho, probably within sight. On the death of Herod the Great, Archelaus repaired to Rome, in order to obtain the kingdom bequeathed to him. An embassy, first of fifty Jews, and after these of eight thousand more, went to Rome, begging to be delivered from these Idumean princes. When Archelaus returned, as Ethnarch of Judea and Samaria, he rewarded his faithful servants and put his enemies to death. It was proof of the humility of Jesus that He was willing to make use of such a comparison.

The parable was suggested by the excited, impatient, and mistaken imaginations of the people (11). The forthcoming Passover was anticipated, with the expectation of something unusual. Lange suggests that the parable was directed against the following fourfold error—that the Messianic kingdom would soon appear, that it would be at once visible on earth, that everyone would willingly and with joy submit to it, and that the subjects of the kingdom would be called to inactive enjoyment. The parable does not deny that there is to be a visible kingdom, but it corrects some false notions with regard to it.

THE NOBLEMAN'S DEPARTURE (12).—"Nobleman," referring to our Lord's royal descent, for He was of the house of David, and still more to his dignity as Son of God. He was among men unknown (1 John. iii. 1). "Far country."—The journey corrects the people's mistake. Though the kingdom was his right, He would not take it until his Father invested Him with it. "To receive a kingdom."—On earth Jesus appeared as Prophet; in heaven He appears as High Priest; He is yet to be manifested as King. And in due time he will "return," not again in humiliation, but "in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Nothing is more certain than this. The present dispensation is but an interval between his first and second appearings.

THE SERVANTS' CALLING (13).—Note (1) their trust, "a pound" (13). Contrast Matt. xxv. 14, 15, where the deposit is much greater. "Among the Hebrews, the pound was about £6 sterling."—Godet. The sum entrusted to all the servants was the same. It is therefore not gifts, which are various, but the salvation which all believers possess. How significant that Jesus calls this "a very little" (17)! We may judge, therefore, what He deems future glory to be. (2) "Their work."—"Occupy"=trade with. Our salvation therefore is not an end, but only a means. We are saved to serve. We receive light, not for our own sakes, but that we may shine (Matt. v. 16), both by life and by testimony. Lange says: "They are called to wait for their Lord's return, not in inactive rest, but in zealous activity. They have not to contend with carnal weapons against his enemies, but in the midst of all opposition quietly to proceed with their labour." (3) Their limited opportunity.—"Till I come."—The time is purposely left uncertain, so that the fidelity of the servants may be proved. The fact that we may have but a brief space of time should move us to greater diligence. Live in anticipation of the Lord's return, and be ever occupied with his business.

THE CITIZENS' MESSAGE (14).—There was perhaps good reason for the people's hatred of Archelaus, but there was none for their hatred of Jesus. So fallen is man that even incarnate love is hated! The Jews used almost these very words (see John xix. 15, 21). They confirmed their rejection of Him by their treatment of the Apostles. But all who now reject Jesus are similarly guilty. Is He your King? If not, you have said, "We will not," &c. Yet the sequel shows how impotent they were. His bitterest enemies, with all their strength combined, cannot prevent Him being King. All they can do is to deny themselves the blessings of his reign, and expose themselves to his merited wrath (27). "Whoever will not let himself be pastured by the Lamb, him shall the lion devour."

THE KING'S RETURN (15) was the occasion for the judgment of his servants. Of these, only three are mentioned; and these are divided into two classes. (1) The faithful (16-19).—There is a difference between these two—in the result of their trading (16, 18), in the measure of praise the King bestows (17, 19); and in the reward they receive. Both are alike in the humility that attributes the success to "thy pound" (16, 18). They say nothing of their own faithfulness; but the Lord does not overlook it. Learn that the way to increase grace is to use it; that fidelity in little things (17) is the test of character; and that the reward of fidelity is greater and more responsible service. This is true now, as well as at our Lord's return. Seek, not to do great things, but to be faithful in doing that which is least. Fidelity is ours, promotion is the Lord's.

(2) The unfaithful servant (20-26).—If we suppose this man to be a Christian, he is one of those unsatisfactory Christians, whose building of wood, hay, and stubble is entirely destroyed at our Lord's appearing (1 Cor. iii. 11-15). He mistook his calling.—The pound was kept, but not used. For the napkin=the sweat cloth, he had no other use than to wrap up his pound. Such are they who are content to be saved themselves without seeking to save others. They are "at ease in Zion." He did not know his Lord (21).—He thought he did; but every half-hearted Christian mistakes his Lord's character. He fears instead of loves. It is only love that constrains (2 Cor. v. 14). Of the joy of service he knows nothing. His judgment is according to his own words (22, 23).—He had been unfaithful even to his own false idea of his Lord. Godet suggests that by the bank (23) "Jesus would represent the Divine omnipotence of which we may avail ourselves by prayer. Of him who has not worked the Lord will ask, 'Hast thou at least prayed?'" Even the angels—"them that stood by" (24)—seem astonished at the sentence (25), but it is according to a principle often repeated (viii. 18), and easily understood. Not to use even a limb soon renders it entirely useless. We practically do not possess that which we do not use, and the punishment for not using it is the total loss of it. "To gain nothing is the way to lose all."

LESSONS.

(1) The great event of the future is the Lord's coming.—Here it is the argument for diligent service (13). The prospect of it is used also to comfort the bereaved (1 Thess. iv. 13-18); to lead to purity of life (1 John iii. 2, 3); to promote watchfulness (Mark xiii. 35-37).

(2) Our present duty is to serve Him.—The "pound" every believer possesses is his capital. As grace is used it grows, as the strength of the smith's arm increases by exercise. It is in very little things our true character appears.

(3) Our Lord's coming will be a time of judgment.—He will find three classes; Faithful servants, unfaithful servants, and enemies. To which class do we belong?

A GOOD WORK IN LAMBETH.

AT the Fisheries Exhibition of 1883 there were on view many highly finished specimens of the boat-builder's craft, but while these were comparatively overlooked by the throngs of sightseers, one old, weather-beaten boat, a rough-looking fisherman's cobble, was the object of constant and lingering interest. Why was it the centre of attraction? It was "Grace Darling's boat"; and the circumstance was typical. In this practical age of ours, most undertakings, and especially the various forms of Christian endeavour, are judged from the utilitarian, rather than the ornamental point of view, and are interesting in proportion as they exist for a useful purpose, and are successful in accomplishing it.

Judged from this standpoint the work prosecuted and the results achieved under God, at the George-street Mission, Prince's-road, Lambeth-walk, S.E., under the leadership of Mr. George Goodman, are satisfactory in the highest degree The mission has been established about fourteen years, and the neighbourhood in which it is carried on is rich in historic memories, and teeming with present opportunities.

It is chiefly inhabited by pottery men (employed at the famous works of Messrs. Doulton & Co., James Stiff & Sons, &c.); costermongers who ply their trade in Lambeth-walk and other popular markets, on every day of the week, Sundays not excepted; and, as in similar localities, gamblers and betting-men; tipsters and cardsharpers; bird-fanciers and pigeon-fliers; merchants of wonderful bargains in secondhand clothes, boots and shoes; singers of the last low song; vendors of objectionable papers; and a host of other characters are there; while drunkenness and blasphemy are prominent on all sides.

In the midst of this modern pandemonium, the Open-air Band of the George-street Mission stands every Sunday morning at 10, and every evening at 8.15 (under a brilliant gas-light kindly provided by a sympathising tradesman), to sing and speak of Christ, a Person, not a creed.

Temperance pledges are taken, conversations held with the anxious; casual hearers persuaded to attend the rousing Gospel meetings held in the Mission Hall close by; and not seldom the workers are cheered by seeing sinners convicted and converted, and brought to confess Christ as their Saviour, where once they scoffed at Him.

On an average 1000 tracts are given away every Sunday; Gospel services and temperance meetings are held, and, both in and out of doors, attended with large blessing; relief is judiciously distributed, as funds allow, to the poorest; and in the effort to bring the bread of life within reach of all, the people are constantly visited in their homes. The Hall seats between four and five hundred persons, and some twenty workers are engaged in the Mission.

Tracts (Gospel and Temperance), old clothes, and other useful gifts, with the names and addresses of Christian friends willing to help by speaking, singing, or playing on the cornet or violin, will be welcomed by the Missionary, Mr. George Goodman, 29, Prince's-square, S.E. The treasurer is Mr. T. Allin, 122 and 124, Lambeth-walk, S.E.

REV. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE AT BERWICK.—Mr. Webb-Peploe gave a Bible-reading on "Your Reasonable Service" in the King's Arms Assembly Room on Monday, August 25, at 3 p.m. The large room was crowded to hear the popular preacher, and he interpreted this cordial reception as evidence of the rising tide apparent everywhere in favour of a higher spiritual life than the Christian Church has yet attained. The Vicar of Berwick gave a few cordial words of welcome, and opened the meeting with prayer; and at the close he said that he had felt it a great privilege to be present and hear the address. Mr. Webb-Peploe was listened to throughout his long address with the most earnest attention. He gave a masterly view of the structure and substance of the whole Epistle to the Romans. He expressed regret that so few had brought their Bibles with them; but, immediately after his remark, the Bibles appeared, and were opened at every passage referred to, in order to mark carefully the preacher's interpretation. The discourse was eminently Biblical, and it was fitted to send the hearers home to further search the Scriptures. The reasonableness of religion was presented in a most attractive form.

LIFE.

I HOLD it false when poets sing,
In weary wails and doleful moans,
That life, 'tis but a vap'rous thing,
A flitting shadow that doth fling
Vague shapes on Hope's broad stepping-stones.

Oh! life is long, if hearts are rife
With thoughts of purity and worth,
With noble longings for the strife,
Efforts to war the curse of life—
FALSEHOOD—and crush her to the earth.

Aye! Life's a vapour when alone
In words our days are spent, not deeds,
When we have neither toiled nor sown,
Ne'er made the golden hours our own
And loved, but did not live, our creeds.

Aye! Life's a shadow when with sighs
We view the Past's neglected scene,
And from their graves the spectres rise
Of murdered opportunities
To haunt us with "What Might Have Been!"

PRINCIPAL FAIRBAIRN, of Mansfield College, has left Oxford for the United States, and is to be absent about three months.

REV. MARK GUY PEARSE is at present in Ireland, and preaches nearly every Sunday to large congregations at Bundoran, near which he is staying.

THE PORTRAIT OF SIR GEORGE BURNS that appeared in a recent issue was erroneously stated to be from a photograph by Messrs. Elliot & Fry; it was engraved from an admirable photograph by Mr. John Fergus, of Largs, Scotland.

MR. JAMES SPRUNT has during the past month conducted evangelistic services in Gloucester, and Corsham-side and Atworth, in Wiltshire. The meetings have been well attended, and much blessing has rested upon the Word.

DROMORE, CO. DOWN.—During the past month Rev. Jas. Kirkwood, Methodist Conference evangelist, conducted Gospel meetings in a tent near this town. Although the weather was by no means favourable, the attendance was excellent throughout, and several professed to decide for Christ.

NORTH-WEST DONEGAL.—In this remote district a forward movement was made a few months ago by the Methodists for the purpose of reaching the scattered Protestant population. An evangelist was employed, and about thirty services, attended by fully 500 persons, are held each month. A ten days' Gospel mission, which was largely attended, has been held, and has been a means of much blessing.

West Indies.—Rev. J. Grant, Wesleyan missionary, Grand Turk, Turk's Islands, West Indies, writes:—"We are much in need of a magic lantern, with Scripture slides, to help us in our work among the natives. Will some of your readers lend us a helping hand in these needy and out-of-the-way islands? A lantern with Scripture slides, securely packed in a case, may be addressed to me, care of John W. Darrell, merchant, Turk's Islands, and sent to Thomas Ronaldson & Co., Agents, 'Furness' line of steamers, 34, Leadenhall-street, London, E.C., with a note requesting them to ship it by first opportunity, viâ Halifax, Nova Scotia."

Naples Sailors' Rest.—Mr. Gawin Kirkham writes us:—"I wish the readers of THE CHRISTIAN could see the building in which the work is at present carried on. It is utterly unsuited for the purpose. I spent two days in it on my return from Palestine last April, and therefore I know both its locality and its condition. Mr. Stephen Burrowes, the superintendent, longs for other premises. He says:—'We are now face to face with a real danger. The prevalence of cholera in various countries is our chief anxiety, as, if the plague comes to Naples, we certainly should suffer from the public washing establishment at the back of our premises.' Will not Christians in England give Naples a Rest? It will cost £1000. Messrs. Meuricoffre & Co., Piazza Municipo, are the bankers, and Mr. Burrowes' address is 15, Flavia Goija, Naples."

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1890.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children."

THREE THOUSAND FIVE HUNDRED rescued Boys and Girls are now in the "Homes," requiring maintenance, clothing, education and industrial training.

Throughout the summer months, and especially during the absence of Dr. Barnardo, now engaged in visiting the Distributing and Farm Homes in Canada, it is no easy thing to supply the daily wants of this large family.

Friends in sympathy with the work of Rescue and Training carried on by these Institutions, are EARNESTLY INVITED TO CONTRIBUTE PROMPTLY towards their present urgent necessities.

Donations will be gratefully received and acknowledged, if addressed to the Treasurer, Mr. William Fowler, or to Dr. Barnardo, at the Chief Offices, 18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

John Odling, Secretary.

Scripture Readers' Society
FOR IRELAND.

INSTITUTED 1822.

Funds greatly needed to extend the Itinerant work.

The Scripture Readers are placed under carefully selected Superintendents, and not only located in Towns and Cities, but also sent into remote districts where they are generally well received by all denominations.

Irish speaking Readers are sent where required. Sailors in Seaports are visited, and Bethel Services held.

The work is carried on in a spirit of love and not of controversy.

Reports and all particulars sent post free on application to Captain JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, Secretary, Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin, and 9, Paternoster-row, London.

Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of THE CHRISTIAN.

Please notice exact title of Society as above.

"These hymns have abundant 'swing' and 'march' in them, and will be found largely suitable for evangelistic work. And so, indeed, they should be; for the chief raison d'être for any new hymn-book must be the special value it may have in connection with Gospel effort."—The Christian.

"A charming collection. . . . While it includes some of the finest compositions of the great masters of sacred song from Watts to Bonar; there are many hymns and tunes in it that will be new to the Christian people of this country; and it may probably surprise most readers to find how prolific and successful Mr. Hammond himself has been in this department of literature. Not a few of his pieces have been suggested by the touching testimonies of children, led under his ministry, to give their hearts to Jesus; and in these strains there is a richly experimental power."—Christian Leader.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

CONSUMPTION—ADVANCED STAGE—CASE of Mrs. DARBY, of BOSTON, Linc.

This patient (then living at Fydell-street) applied to me on the 14th of last December. She was recommended by REV. C. WATERTON, of BOSTON.

Her illness dated from the August of 1889. It commenced with cough, debility, fainting fits, and spitting of blood. The symptoms now were a hacking cough, mixed and difficult expectoration, periodic paroxysm of short breathing, pains in the chest and left side, secretions all wrong, palpitations, increasing weakness, and loss of flesh all over the body. Dr. P. had pronounced her left lung decidedly diseased.

She commenced my treatment, and continued for several months.

On the 10th of April she writes:—"With feelings of deep gratitude I add my testimony to the great value of your medicine. Before I began with it every one thought I was past all cure, the doctor telling me my left lung was almost gone. By Rev. C. Waterton's advice I applied to you. I have received the greatest benefit. I feel like a new person. My friends all think it a wonderful cure. I shall not fail to recommend your treatment whenever I have the opportunity."—(Mrs.) M. DARBY, 3, JUBILEE BUILDINGS, BLACKFRIARS STREET, SALFORD, MANCHESTER.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

"It is the most touching, thrilling narrative we ever read. Talk of the sensational in tales, and novels, and romances—none of them is as stirring, or is filled with incidents of such extraordinary interest, as this life-story."—Bolton Guardian.

"The book has all the charm—far more than the charm—of any work of fiction; and we venture to say that no one, especially young men, can read the experiences of Mr. Gough without being the better for it."—Stockton Herald.

"It not only shows the pitfalls into which others have stumbled, but is rich in side lessons on the great battle of life, teaching men how to struggle against temptation, and how best to deliver others."—Freeman.

PORTRAIT OF JOHN B. GOUGH.

STRIKING AND LIFE-LIKE.

BEAUTIFULLY PRINTED FROM STONE. SIZE 20 BY 14½ INCHES.

Price 1s. post free.

"A very fine lithographed Portrait of J. B. Gough, printed on fine toned paper, and published at the price of one shilling. We unhesitatingly pronounce this likeness to be the best likeness we have seen of our friend Mr. Gough."
Temperance Journal.

"It has caught one of the great Orator's happiest expressions; should be framed, and added to every home picture gallery."
Church of England Temperance Chronicle.

"We have seldom seen anything of the kind more to our taste. The admirers of Mr. Gough will find in it a rich treasure, while those who have not seen the original will doubtless be delighted to have such a faithful likeness of the renowned orator."
British Temperance Advocate.

ORATIONS BY JOHN B. GOUGH.

A VOLUME OF ORATIONS DELIVERED IN ENGLAND BY THE LATE JOHN B. GOUGH.

COPYRIGHT EDITION. REVISED BY HIMSELF. WITH LIFE-LIKE PORTRAIT.

Cheap Edition: Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

Superior Edition: Cloth boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"To those who have not had the good fortune to hear Mr. Gough, these printed ORATIONS will convey some idea of the wonderful dramatic force and eloquence which held audiences of many thousands spell-bound."—The Good Templar.

"These contain the most remarkable of the Addresses given by Mr. Gough; and as one reads them over quietly now, the effect produced when they were delivered in our hearing rushes back, and we can hardly restrain our shouts of approval and acquiescence."—The Fountain.

"This work contains eleven of Mr. Gough's addresses, and forms an admirable record of his arguments and illustrations. For those who take part in temperance work, there will be abundant material in these pages."—Sunday School Chronicle.

THE NEW LARGE TYPE ILLUSTRATED GOSPEL TEMPERANCE TRACTS

By JOHN B. GOUGH.

(SELECTED FROM THE "ORATIONS.")

A SERIES OF SIXTEEN FOUR-PAGE TRACTS, PRINTED IN LARGE TYPE AND ILLUSTRATED.

Price 1s. per packet of 64 Tracts, assorted.

"No man has uttered words more burning, or more piercing, than John B. Gough; and we are glad to see passages from the Orations issued in the form of tracts. Short and decisive, they appeal directly to the common sense of men, forcing them to think."—Liverpool Argus.

"The earnest temperance worker may now secure the soundest argument against the modern curse—Moloch, the drink fiend; conveyed in language the most poetic, eloquent, pathetic, and enthralling."—The Sentinel.

"For descriptive force we have seldom read anything to equal 'They are Coming Now,' 'My Boy,' and 'Drink's my Curse.'"—Church of England Temperance Chronicle.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Pastor G. LECOAT, of the Breton Evangelical Mission, Tremel, Brittany.

We received a cable despatch from Mr. Sankey, too late for our last issue, stating that Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Stebbins, of Brooklyn, will accompany Dr. Pentecost and his party to India.

After ten years of waiting and importunity, the Palestine Exploration Fund has obtained permission from the Turkish Government to excavate in South Palestine. Mr. Flinders Petrie, "the prince of excavators," will at once begin the work, and, as Professor Sayce says, in this month's Contemporary Review, discoveries of the highest interest may be expected. Monuments of the Kings of Israel, and clay records of the earlier races of Canaan may be unearthed; and as surely as they are brought to light, they will assist in the interpretation of the Old Testament Scriptures. It is simply marvellous how witnesses have of late years risen from beneath the dust of ages, and borne testimony to the historical accuracy of the writings of Moses and the Prophets.

In the same Review there is a very timely paper by Dr. R. W. Dale. While holding that the ultimate conclusions of literary criticism will tell most favourably on the beliefs of the Church, with regard to the writers and dates of the Books of the New Testament, Dr. Dale contends that the authority for confidence in the Christian religion is not an externally dogmatic one. He argues that modern Protestant theologians have not maintained the position of Luther, Calvin, and the great Puritans. The Reformers placed the authority of the Word of God in its subject-matter. They withstood Romanists by finding the witness for Scripture, not in the authoritative voice of the Church, but in Scripture itself. They maintained that the seat of authority was not in a demonstration of literary and historical investigations, but in God's Word which by itself attests its truth to the hearts of men, and by its Divine inherent power.

The point is of supreme moment. Preachers have, by the power of the Spirit, to win men from their carnal, unspiritual lives. They have to insist that the first point with inquirers is not to find either a literary authority or a theory of inspiration of the New Testament, but to come into fellowship with Christ, and as, in a teachable and obedient spirit, they read his words and what He has done, they will exclaim, "My Lord and my God." Moreover, so as they bring to their temptations, their sorrows, their joys, and their duties, the New Testament revelations, they will assuredly find that the authority of the Word is in itself, and its credit will be confirmed by the testimony of the Spirit in their own experience—"O taste, and see that the Lord is good."

It is very greatly to be regretted, in the interest of the fifty thousand gipsy and van children throughout the country, that the much-needed, simple, and inexpensive "Movable Dwellings Bill" of Mr. George Smith, of Coalville, has not yet passed into law. In a recent letter to the papers Mr. Smith attributes this failure to the obstructive action of Lord Wemyss' Property Defence League, which body, however, now "find after years of examination that there is nothing in the Bill to which they can object." He further states that he accepted the League's amendment to the only clause to which they demurred in time for the measure to become law last session, but that this was prevented by the dilatory action of certain M.P.'s. It is earnestly hoped that this reproach will be wiped away during the next session, for it is truly humiliating to our boasted civilisation that scores of thousands of men, women, and children should be tramping the country in such a condition of dirt, ignorance, wretchedness, and sin as Mr. Smith has from time to time described. He says, "So long as God gives me strength I shall work for neglected little nomads and their parents, and get them on the way to the moral and social joys below and the heaven above, be the consequences what they may": and we wish this untiring champion of the neglected little ones God-speed.

The Hospital is responsible for a statement that there are one million seven hundred and fifty thousand women and girls engaged in domestic service throughout the United Kingdom, and that of these two hundred and twenty-six thousand are to be found in London alone. The subject of the condition of the class is, therefore, a very important one, and, like most of the questions bearing upon our social life, the matter is one pre-eminently for the consideration of the individual rather than for that of the State.

Our contemporary urges, with only too good ground, that the life of the servant "is generally dull as well as hard," and that very often "she spends the evening all by herself in an underground kitchen with not a creature to speak to." The writer adds, "Her mistress seldom thinks of providing her with books or amusements," and the case is quoted of a servant girl who spent fourpence a week upon the "light literature" of the penny dreadfuls, so keenly did she feel the need of escaping in spirit into other scenes.

We are sure that but few readers of THE CHRISTIAN will need to have impressed upon them their responsibility in regard to the servants within their gates; yet so much of the evil which darkens the present day is due in the first instance rather to carelessness and want of thought than to actual wrong-doing, that we feel it to be our duty once more to appeal for more consideration to be shown to those in our households who are to a great extent isolated from many of the comforts and enjoyments of the domestic life.

Again attention is very forcibly called to the decline of population in France. The last returns, just published, show that the reduction is steadily and rapidly progressing. No nation can accept the immoral doctrines which are the groundwork of a large section of French society and prosper; and it goes without saying that the people who forget God must sooner or later be brought, even by the lessons of national decline and degradation, to recognise the fact that God is, and that He rules the universe. With the decrease of population in France there is no increase in the comfort or well-being of the toiling classes, and this is a somewhat startling fact for those who have not hesitated to urge that poverty in England is greatly due to the steady growth of our population. God's Word has given us the real causes of national evils, and we need not go elsewhere to find them clearly laid down, with their only remedies.

An interesting article, descriptive of a visit to Rangoon, appeared in a recent issue of The Times, containing (inter alia) graphic word pictures of the Golden Pagoda of that city, as it appeared crowded with worshippers and devotees of Buddha, performing their empty rites and offering their unavailing prayers. We extract the following passage:—

> In some of the temples the worshippers were serious and intent enough; these were mostly women, and whatever the theory of the creed which acknowledges no God or superior power to whom to address prayers with a hope of hearing or response, it would certainly seem, from the tearful eyes and earnest prayers of those poor creatures that they had wants and wishes which they carried in foolish hope to the unsympathetic shrine—the dying child or faithless lover, some trouble or heartache, for the alleviation of which they sought a power outside and beyond themselves. Humanity is always weaker than its creed, and one could not but reflect that in spite of the inherent beauty and consistency of Buddhist theory, there was still in other creeds a better provision for the unhappy and desolate who yearned for a belief in a Divine pity and beneficence."

True though these words may be so far as they go, yet they are far, very far indeed, from being an adequate description of the immeasurable contrast, the irremediable discrepancy, between Buddhism and Christianity. In another portion of the same article the writer, slightly infected, perhaps, with the modern fondness for seeing the beautiful and the good in almost every form of religion except Christianity, speaks of Buddhism as "a noble creed, held by a third of the human race." What, however, of "inherent beauty" or "nobility" is there in a cold, pessimistic system of which the highest aim is the attainment of an absolute indifference to all persons and things—"an utter nihilism": or in a creed which, though recognising human misery, corruption, and sorrow, is helpless to provide a remedy; which, though acknowledging the existence and evil of sin, has no place for pardon, redemption, or forgiveness, and has nothing to offer to "them that labour and are heavy laden"? It is possible also that The Times' writer has over-estimated the numerical strength of Buddhism, for Sir Monier Williams, an eminent authority, holds it to be doubtful whether this system numbers one hundred and fifty millions of adherents out of the world's population of fifteen hundred millions.

A more agonising or pathetic wail from a woman's heart we have never met with in print than the short paper in The New Review on "Indian Child Marriages," from the pen of Rukhmabai, the well-known Indian lady reformer. The horrible social system that prevails among the Hindu people is laid bare and its baleful results described, as they only could be by one who has experienced in her own person some, at least, of the sorrows she speaks of. But for us in England the point of her impassioned outburst lies in her appeal to the British Government to interpose on behalf of her down-trodden Indian sisters. She declares that child marriage is not sanctioned by Hindu religious teaching, but has grown up as a mere custom. As our Government have, more than once, put down by the strong hand of law other social customs in India that were opposed to righteousness and the best interests of the people, she urges that the same thing should be done in this matter. How her appeal can be resisted we do not know, and we would urge all the friends of India's women to bestir themselves in moving our Indian Government to act promptly and effectively in staying this national blight and curse.

Eastern and Central Africa have of late absorbed so much attention that the public is apt to lose sight of important events in other parts of that vast continent. The Aborigines Protection Society have addressed an important communication to the Colonial Secretary, calling his attention to the grave fact that on the Gold Coast and adjacent British territory, owing to the apathy and connivance of Her Majesty's representatives, there is a very large number (estimated at five thousand) of boys and girls bought and retained as slaves, and that child-slave-dealing is on the increase in that district. They assert that the "Ordinance of 1874," framed for the purpose of strengthening the general law forbidding slavery in the Queen's dominions, has been very inadequately enforced; and that, owing to grave neglect of duty on the part of the Governor of the Gold Coast and his subordinates, who decline to decide cases of slave-dealing, the evil is increasing; and this allegation is supported by the quotation of the official records of recent cases. The authorities have promised that these statements shall be investigated, and we trust that the inquiry will be a real and searching one, and that it will result in the suppression of a traffic which reflects disgrace upon British rule.

If our Lord's warning against those who "love the uppermost seats at feasts" (Matt. xxiii. 6) has any application to-day, there need be no doubt as to the persons to whom it refers. In the arrangement of the guests for Lord Stanley's State banquet to Prince George of Wales, Cardinal Taschereau was given a position below Admiral Ross and General Watson, but above Bishop Williams, the Protestant Bishop of Quebec. To this the Cardinal objected, and declined to attend the banquet because he was not given a position next to Prince George himself. This is a further illustration of the arrogance of the Papacy, and is an intimation of what may result from giving further liberty to Romanists. The individual cannot be separated from the system. According to the fable, the miller found himself driven out of his own house by the camel whose nose he had so generously admitted. The manner in which Romanists are using their liberty should certainly make our legislators pause before they make further concessions.

Rev. D. L. Leonard, in The Missionary Review of the World, deals with the subject of Mormon Proselytism, and points out how carefully in Mormon teachings unpalatable, though fundamental, matters of Mormon faith and practice, have been suppressed. Mr. Leonard asserts that in choosing the Mormon missionary elder, learning, intellectual gifts, piety, and moral character are scarcely taken into account at all, the Jesuit's ability and readiness to lie being the chief qualification. It is not surprising therefore, quite apart from all other considerations, that Mr. Leonard comes to the conclusion, like most other modern writers capable of deciding, that Mormonism "though not dead, is dying, and the Salt Lake saints will soon have dwindled to utter insignificance."

While we are bound to protest against giving facilities to vice to the British soldier, we are no less under obligation to listen to the story of the wrongs of men whose profession is that they are ready to die for their country. The current Nineteenth Century gives a prominent place to a carefully reasoned appeal to the nation by a late sergeant of the 79th Highlanders. According to him, the promises which induce young men to enter the service are fraudulent. Exactions are made upon them with respect to their food, clothing, treatment on board troopships, and in manifold other particulars, which belie the expectations created. If these serious accusations are real grievances they ought to be inquired into, and spoken of by legislators. In the light of recent insubordinations the subject demands serious attention.

THE SEASIDE HOME AT LANCING, SUSSEX.—Mr. Chorley writes to say that application forms for this Home of Rest will in future be sent to any accredited missionary or other labourer amongst the poor. The charge for mothers will be 7s. 6d. per week, infants under two years free, children under twelve years 5s. The fares (reduced) are 5s. and 2s. 6d. return. Lancing is specially recommended as a winter resort. Applications must in all cases be made to the London address of the Mission, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N. There is at present no provision for men.

A CONVERT'S COMMISSION.—Who can tell what converted Chinamen will accomplish for Christ and their countrymen? One of them living on the Pacific Coast sold himself as a coolie to work in New Guinea, that he might make known to other Chinamen the glad tidings of salvation. Before he died he led 200 of his companions to the Saviour, and had the unspeakable joy of seeing them reconciled to God, and in possession of the blessedness of the justified. Such converts are worth making. The great matter is to understand the Chinese, to get them to work in their own way, to fire them with enthusiasm, "the passion for saving souls." A few evangelists like this converted coolie would soon fill all China with a knowledge of Christ.—The Freeman.

Witness-Bearing.

Christ Jesus came into the world to deliver men, first from the dominion and then from the consequences of their sins. The Holy Ghost comes to convince men of the guilt and evil of sin, and to reveal Christ as the Saviour from it. We are therefore co-working with God when we lead men to see sin in its true character, and to accept Christ as a Saviour from its tyranny.

It is greatly to be deplored that much of the testimony of Christians seems to lack force; men appear to think we have no subject to present to their notice in which they have an immediate interest, whereas the sober truth is we are in possession of a glorious and available remedy for all the evils under which they suffer.

I have lately been serving as a special juror in one of the Law Courts, and I have been impressed by the efficiency of the method there employed in convincing interested persons as to the facts under consideration. An advocate states his case, calls his witnesses to say what they know, and then comments upon the value and effect of their evidence, the presiding judge taking care that all is done in order. Now, assuming that the advocate has all the truth and all the facts on his side, and that he has good witnesses to speak to the facts, the result is almost inevitable: the jury and all intelligent listeners would and must be convinced.

With reference to the unspeakably important matters of the destructiveness of sin and the glorious power of Christ to deliver men from its horrible domination, we have all the facts in existence, ancient and modern, moral and physical, on our side, and I feel much impressed that if, in some similarly definite way, we could get a hearing for what we have to present, we should succeed in creating an absorbing interest in the truth, personally affecting, as it would be felt to do, every listener, and with the blessing of God and by the power of his Spirit working with us, we should succeed in so getting the verdict in every man's conscience, as to produce most important results both in the sanctification of believers and in the conversion of sinners.

Could we not have meetings of some kind—some, perhaps, of men exclusively—under the presidency of suitable Christian men, in which the effects of sin in some of its most salient forms, as betting, dishonesty, impurity, or drunkenness might be considered, and in which evidence might be taken and testimony given both as to its destructive effects on individuals, families, and communities, and as to the blessed and wonderful power of our Risen Redeemer to deliver from its dominance?

With such a glorious redemption available as that in which we rejoice, how one groans at the sight of the superfluous misery occasioned by its rejection, and longs to have men accept the gracious dominion and loving care of our wise and mighty King.—The late Thomas D. Marshall.

HEAVEN'S CURE FOR EARTH'S CARE.

"Be careful for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God; and the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds in Christ Jesus" (Phil. iv. 6, 7).

THE THREE GARDENS.

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN WHERE THEY LAID HIM.

VII.—Mary Magdalene (concluded).

THE Lord has made Himself known to Mary, who had lingered at the sepulchre after the departure of Peter and John. He made Himself known to her by simply naming her name, in the old familiar tone, "Mary!" In a moment her heart knows Him, and "Rabboni" is the swift response of her joy. "Touch Me not," says Jesus, "for I am not yet ascended to my Father; but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God." These words have caused great perplexity to expositors, and numberless explanations of them—some very far-fetched and mystical—have been offered. Without questioning that they contain a depth of meaning never yet explored, I cannot help thinking that the most obvious explanation is really the true one—and, if the true one, certainly the profoundest—though it may take us long to understand its profoundness. Mary has thrown, or is throwing, herself down in a rapture of love and joy to clasp his feet. It would seem that she apprehends Him too much "after the flesh." She fears, too, lest He should immediately depart; and she is eager to detain Him, like Jacob when he said, "I will not let Thee go except Thou bless me"; or like the three disciples on the holy mount, who wished to prolong the blissful vision there. The Lord forbids her action, and for this reason, "I am not yet ascended to my Father"; this is no visit from the unseen, brief and final; I have not yet taken leave of earth and of my beloved disciples; I will see you yet again, that your hearts may rejoice; and, beyond this, the period of true and highest communion lies in the future. Wait, and after my ascension you will know what I mean. Pentecost will reveal it.

It does seem strange, however, even with such a suggested reason, that Jesus should forbid his disciples so much as to touch Him. But, if his words begin as a repulse, they end in an infinite blessing. Indeed, it has been no withdrawing of Himself from his disciple's love. We utterly misread the narrative, if we read it so. Jesus finds out for her what will give the deepest joy of all: "Go to my brethren, and say to them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God." Oh to be one hour beside Him is the meaning of the clasped feet. But here is something better and more blissful still—to be the messenger of so great joy to others. The "wording" of the message which He bids her carry is unspeakably tender. He calls the disciples "my brethren." Ah, his heart is unchanged; He is "that same Jesus" whom they knew before; He has not laid aside that humanity which He assumed when He was "born" our Saviour, as He laid aside and left his grave-dress in the sepulchre; He wears it to-day, and is our Brother for ever. "My brethren! Blessed Jesus, who are these? Were they not thy followers, yea, thy forsakers?... At first they were thy servants; then disciples; a little before thy death they were thy friends; now, after thy resurrection, they were thy brethren. But oh, mercy without measure! how wilt Thou, how canst Thou, call them brethren whom, in thy last parting, Thou foundest fugitives? Did they not run from Thee? Did not one of them rather leave his inmost coat behind him than not be quit of Thee? And yet Thou sayest—Go, tell my brethren! It is not in the power of the sins of our infirmity to unbrother us."*

He wishes them to know of his approaching departure to the Father. He had spoken of this again and again while He was yet with them; but they had not understood Him. The telling of it now will carry a new meaning. It is not simply, Tell them that I am risen from the dead; that would have been good news indeed; but, as when Jacob's sons told him, Joseph is yet alive, and he is governor over all the land of Egypt, so Mary is to tell, not merely that Jesus lives, but that He is about to be glorified as He had foretold, returning to the Father, and sitting down on the right hand of power. "I ascend"—the time already regarded as present; for what now are forty days to Him? Wonderful and of profoundest suggestion is the glimpse given of that union with Himself, and of its great consequences, into which his disciples are brought. He to whom I ascend is "my Father and your Father"—not, our Father; He could not have expressed Himself thus; my Father essentially, your Father as ye are my brethren. And He is likewise "my God and your God"—not, our God; but my God, as I have become one with you, and your God, through your union with Me—your God to whom ye are now restored and reconciled, and in whom ye have an eternal portion.

From the time of this going up to the Father, the whole mode of disciple-intercourse with Him shall be changed; and the forty days are the transition period. The touching that belonged to the past, the touching by hands, the physical contact, the whole "knowing after the flesh," is over; the touching of the future shall be that of faith and love. His withdrawal from Mary now is parallel to what the Emmaus friends afterwards experienced, when, in the moment of recognition, He vanished out of their sight; and is a prelude of the ascension-parting and of what has followed, "Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see Him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory."

Charged with such a message, Mary went with swift, glad steps—her face lighted up with a strange glow, haste and gladness looking out from her eyes, her heart rejoicing and saying, "I know that my Redeemer liveth"—and told the disciples that she had seen the Lord, and that He had spoken these things unto her. It was the one grand service which He had ordained her to perform—as Simeon's life was perfected and crowned when he took the Holy Child in his arms in the temple. Henceforth she disappears from our view. When she died, and where, and how, and by whom attended, no man knows. But of this we may be sure, that one tone would dwell for ever in her memory, unforgotten even when her ear grew dull, and her brow was chill with the dews of death—the tone which woke her soul to sudden rapture, revealing her Risen and Living Redeemer, her LORD and her GOD.

Such was the earliest manifestation of the risen Christ. But it was only the first of many. Over a period of forty days, his disciples tell us, He gave them "many infallible proofs" that He lived. He appeared to them, not once or twice only, but many times. He appeared, not only to single individuals, but to companies. These manifestations were not mere repetitions one of another, but were marvellously varied, both as to circumstances and occasions. He appeared in the grey morning, in the bright sunshine, late at night, on the Galilean mountain, by the margin of the Galilean sea, on that sweet upland near Bethany, whence He ascended to heaven, in the very act of blessing them. The disciples were fully assured of his identity, even the most incredulous being satisfied. From beside the empty sepulchre they went forth preaching "Jesus and the resurrection." They began, not in some remote province, but in Jerusalem itself, where the facts transpired, and where they might have been contradicted, had contradiction been possible. Nothing could silence them—neither stripes nor threatenings, nor the face of death. And they continue as they began, not holding out for a year or two only, but even unto death. "We are witnesses of these things," that is their word to the last. If Christ did not live again, they are "false witnesses"—not mistaken, not deceived, but deliberate and persistent liars. It is impossible in such case to save their honesty. And it takes a very robust scepticism to go so far as that.

"Why did He not show Himself alive in the streets of Jerusalem?" But would the man in the street have been a competent witness? Was not former intimacy a prerequisite? A public appearance among crowds of people imperfectly acquainted with Him previously would have been valueless as evidence; indeed, could only have caused perplexity, some affirming, This is He, and others saying, He is like Him. We do not want the vague reports of the street, which, as Bishop Horsley says, "everyone adopts, and no one owns"; such reports "serve only to multiply doubt and to propagate uncertainty." We must have the testimony of previous intercourse and intimacy.

"Why, then, did He not submit Himself to the examination of the authorities, Jewish and Roman, who might have made exact scrutiny and reported?" Why did He leave faith an uncertainty when it might have been so easily secured? This is what Renan would have had. "A miracle at Paris before competent savants would put an end to all doubts...No miracle has been produced before those who would have been able to discuss and criticise it." But if I cannot receive the testimony of the disciples, whose truthfulness I can test, why should I receive the testimony of Caiaphas or Pilate, or the savants of Jerusalem? Besides, the question implies a misapprehension of God's method of dealing with men. There is no compelling external evidence for the unbelieving. If a man do not want the light—if he shut down his eyelids that it may not enter—there shall be no lightning flash to force them open. If a man do not want to believe, he shall not be compelled by remorseless logic, as one is compelled to accept a proposition in Euclid; and the disputer of this world may have the last word if he choose.

The attitude of Christ toward insincere men is represented, I think, in his dealing with Herod the night before the crucifixion. Jesus is brought into the presence of "that fox," who is "exceeding glad" of the interview; it gratifies an old wish; he has heard many things of Him, and hopes to see some miracle done by Him. But Jesus is silent to him; has no reply to his many questions; answers him nothing. Jesus and Herod are fronting each other still in this nineteenth century; and still, as of old, Jesus is silent to the Herod spirit, and leaves its thousand questionings without reply. If the understanding shall conduct its inquiries apart from a sense of spiritual need, and faith in God, and honesty of intent, it shall never rise out of the region of doubt, but more probably shall sink down into Sadducean denial. It is the man who "will do his will" that "shall know of the doctrine."

The Northfield Convention.

ALL the correspondents who have written about this year's Conference seem to be of the opinion that the proceedings were above the average in point of interest and stimulus. Mr. Moody does not issue any fixed programme, but he takes care that the topics introduced will be marked not only by variety but the practical bearing on Christian life and testimony. This year the expository addresses and Bible talks by such men as Dr. Pentecost, Dr. Pierson, Dr. Munhall, Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Bishop Thoburn, Mr. D. Baron, Rev. F. E. Marsh, Mr. W. R. Lane, and others formed a solid back-ground for the missionary intelligence—home and foreign—of which there was a very plentiful supply. Then there were rousing appeals on temperance work and other forms of social evangelism, besides evangelistic addresses for any who might have found their way to the Northfield hills and were yet unbelievers in the Gospel or outside its converting energy. The only complaint was that Mr. Moody effaced himself too completely, and that his ringing voice was not heard often enough, in those magnetic and whole-souled utterances that have set two hemispheres on fire many a time during bygone years. There is certainly no more welcome or coveted speaker at Northfield than Mr. Moody himself.

A POWERFUL TEMPERANCE ADDRESS was given at one of the sessions by Mr. J. G. WOOLEY, of Minnesota. Himself a brand snatched from the burning of the liquor habit, he can speak with an emphasis and a force that cause his words to enter the very soul of the listener. He spoke on this occasion of the woe that Habbakuk pronounces upon the man who puts the bottle to a neighbour's lips. We may give a few of his impassioned and keen, cutting sentences:—

"Have you a bottle in your church? Many a man standing firm and strong with his faith in God has been toppled over and sent whirling to hell by the touch of the bottle that lies behind the altar rail of the Christian church. A sip of wine given me by a physician for my own good, after I had been away from drink for eighteen months, threw me down.

"In New York there is a brewery with the sign, 'Hell Gate Brewery.' Well may there be over the grog shops:—'Hell Gate to the American People.' The saloon of America is as national a thing as a national bank. Well might we call the drunken men reeling through the streets of Boston to-night the national currency, as much as the national bank bills. What advantage comes to the country from this thing which may offset this fact? You know there isn't any, and the only reason why the black alcoholic drink is kept at all is for the express purpose of putting it to some neighbour's lips.

"If you have got a bottle at your house, in your church, anywhere, from which a suffering, weak man might be led to his fall to-night, don't go back and enter into Christian work. I don't believe that the hands that hold a bottle can be stretched helpfully to fallen men: I don't believe that the heart that will consent to the bottle anywhere can succeed anywhere in the name of Jesus Christ. Think what nonsense it is to hire an evangelist to come and try to save drinking men in a church, the membership of which is consenting to the existence of saloons whose only purpose is to damn these very men. Do you think God will ever trust his temperance cause into the hands of a Christian manhood that has the blood of 70,000 dead drunken men upon it every year? There will never be much progress in the temperance cause till it comes through the church of Jesus Christ; but there will never be that revival in the church till it is fit for it, and they will never be fit for it while the blood of a single drunken man is on the membership.

"Reduce the liquor problem to its lowest term and it becomes perfectly simple. Imagine only four persons in the universe; God yonder, a man here who wants some whisky, another who wants to sell whisky, and yourself. What is your duty? To stand and fight and die so that he don't do it. Am I bound to destroy the saloon in the United States? I don't know, but I am bound to destroy my portion of the saloon in America. There are 12,000,000 voters in the country, and having washed my hands of my one-twelve-millionth part of it, I can look in the face of God."

One is not astonished to hear that such testimony coming from such lips, was felt to be very powerful and impressive.

THE INTEREST IN MISSIONS

was well sustained throughout. The home fields were largely represented, and the large assemblies listened with genuine interest to the accounts given by workers in different parts of the United States. Perhaps the most striking and fresh of these accounts was the story of Gospel effort among the American Indians, told by Mr. C. W. SHELTON, of New York. Two years ago the people at Northfield gave money to establish five mission stations, and the speaker gave a sketch of the interesting and fruitful work carried on at these places. Two of the stations are named after Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey. As to Christian work among these Dakota Indians, Mr. Shelton said:—

"Our Indians are getting beyond the wild life. Forty thousand Indian people have come out of the tepee life into little homes that these Indian men have built for themselves, taking their people forward toward Christ. We talk of the Indian in his paint and blanket, forgetting that they are coming forth into life. His game is gone, his wild, roving life is gone, his reservation is gone. They understand their position; the old life is back of them for ever. What is before them? In Christ's love take them by the hand, and lead them out into the same light, the same love, and the same Christ that you have. Fifteen Indian churches gave 200 dollars more for home missionary work outside themselves than 250 churches of white people in the same time.

"When you think that your five stations have gathered in two or three hundred scholars, and for each is the possibility of such work as that of a young son of a chief I knew, who brought his whole village into Christianity and civilisation, can you think what will be the result of this Mission? There are 30,000 poor Indians in Dakota alone, lifting up their cry to the Christian church for light and hope."

When the speaker had ended Mr. Moody saw his opportunity, and like a master workman he struck while the iron was hot. So successful was his appeal on behalf of this deeply interesting and hopeful work that in the space of twenty minutes he had secured gifts and promises representing more than 3,300 dollars for the Indian Mission. The enthusiasm was great, and so was the gladness when the needed sum had been raised.

had an illustrious representative in Bishop THOBURN, of Calcutta, the well-known veteran Methodist Missionary. Near the beginning of the Convention he gave a most admirable address on the constraining power of the love of Christ, and its effects in the Christian life:—"It is upon this great truth that I found my belief in the missionary enterprise. Christ loves Germany, Africa, America, England and China, but not one more than another. I must love all the people in this wide world; a missionary must have a wide heart, and he ought to have a wide mind, and the heart will expand the mind if you give it a chance. If you have a wide heart and mind, you are bound to believe in the missionary enterprise.

"If you have the constraining love of Christ, you will work as he lived here. I read sometimes the proceedings of these Bible conferences and particularly in England, and have a single remark to make about them. Often these men are studying this book as if it were a detached book which they wanted to understand, but don't seem to give enough time to consideration of the question: How can we apply that to the salvation of the race from the sorrows of the world? If you want to understand the Bible, always study it from this point of view: 'I want to help my fellow-man. How will this book help me to do that?' You may find that men may be very good and yet not make other men better.

"If I do not misunderstand the signs of the times, we are living on the threshold of a great change, and I believe God would have his Church universal consider how she can do something for the wants of the great masses of humanity. You will never know the luxury of the love of Christ till you have found a broken heart and bound it up, and with the divine skill which Christ has given you, restored that heart to health.

"The question is asked all the time: How are we to reach the masses? As quickly as a steel needle will be drawn to the magnet, the love of Christ will draw you to the masses if you will go. We ask that question in words, and our thought is, how can we get the masses to reach us, and we sit there and groan. If Christ had to wait for us to go to heaven, would we have gone? You smile at the thought, and yet we sit with our hands folded in the churches, and say: 'How shall we reach the multitudes?' You might sit there through all eternity, and they would not come. Christ did not tell you to sit that way; he told you to go.

"I don't feel like trembling in the least at the problem of the great cities. God intends to magnify Christ in the salvation of the American cities. You send people to work in the slums; that is all right, but you don't make an attempt on the strongholds. It is not the slums that make people bad; it is the great multitude of people that have abandoned all hope of Christianity in the world. When I see the churches of this country rising up in their might, leaving everything and risking everything and throwing themselves into that work; when I see 100 men organized in these cities, and failing, then my friend may say that there isn't a word of common sense in my words. But it is not going to fail. God intends that the greatest victories since the day of Pentecost shall be won in these cities, and that this country shall be the great missionary nation of the world."

AMERICAN MISSIONARIES FOR JAPAN.—A meeting was held recently at Park-street Church, Boston, to bid farewell to several missionaries. The list included seven returning to the scene of their labours, and twenty-seven who had had no previous experience. Ten of the latter are going to Japan.

THE PASSION PLAY.—Writing in The Christian Leader an account of the Oberammergau Play, Annie S. Swan says: "The whole performance saddened and perplexed me; and, as I looked through the open space above the proscenium to the everlasting hills and the rolling mists, which enshrouded them and hid the sky, a great wonder was in my heart. Is heaven then so very far away; has the Almighty lost his hold upon the creatures of his love and care; has Christ been hid within the veil so long that we need this mummery, beautiful and artistic though it may be, to rouse us from our long sleep? I said in my heart that Sabbath afternoon, and I say again, God forbid!"

MR. J. C. RAINEY'S TENT WORK.

MANY praying hearts have followed us this past summer; for their cheer, therefore, let me recount what God hath wrought before us. In June, we pitched our canvas at Denbury, a village almost under Dartmoor, nine miles from Paignton, over some stiff hills, up and down which our brave little Gospel Horse "Bobby" pulled us out by day and home by night. The outcome of the work is that a chapel belonging to the Baptists, which had fallen into disuse some two years, was offered us. The people besought us to re-open, which we did on Sunday, August 31, after complete renovation. The Lord put his seal to the enterprise in the conversion of souls that day.

In July, the tent was removed nearer home, to the villages of Marldon and Compton. Here the word of the Lord was as a fire, and the whole place was soon ablaze. Many old people hobbled, feeble of foot, but strong of heart, to the meetings, exclaiming, "Never seed sic a thing in Marldon afore. On'y to think of voks bringing a tent to tache we the better way!" Strong men came too, and children without reckoning. Upon very many,

THE SPIRIT WROUGHT WITH POWER.

One man, so confirmed in evil ways that he had been turned from as many masters almost as he had worked years, was brought to the feet of Jesus, clothed and in his right mind. We lingered here longer than we intended, at the entreaty of the people, and when, at last, owing to the harvest, we had to move the tent, the population turned out and wept to see it go. We are not forgetting them.

Our last pitch was at Pavor, near St. Marychurch, and each night during the sixteen days the tent remained it was our joy to point inquirers to the Lamb of God. Mr. W. Harry Dawe, of Exeter, mine own son in the faith (twelve years ago), was my whole-hearted and willing-handed helper during the campaign. At Paignton we have also had good times. The Gerston Hall has been crowded Sunday after Sunday.

The after-church-hour open-air meetings on the Green, which this year we put on the lines of the Y.M.C.A.—with various leaders from the local churches, the better to draw around us all the vital, evangelical, Christian energy of the town—were largely attended to the close, and many testified to the blessing received.

During August the youthful visitors, together with their parents and guardians, drew round the C.S.S.M. banner in large and attentive crowds, to listen to warm addresses from many friends who among them Messrs. T. B. Miller (chairman of the Mission to the Deep Sea Fishermen); J. Barnes, LL.D., of Newport; Danvers Bidlake, of Stroud, Glos.; Miss Tracey, of Plymouth; and the Misses Habershon, of London. An additional interest and help was afforded by the arrival in Torbay of the new Hospital Mission Ship Albert, of the M.D.S.F. Skippers White and Macdonald and their gallant crew, all "bound for glory," with Mr. Simons, the superintendent evangelist, came ashore and spoke home truths on the sands and in the tent.

We wound up the summer's work (as far as our poor efforts were concerned, thank God it goes on) on Wednesday by erecting the tent under spreading trees in a lovely garden, kindly lent by a resident in Paignton, for the purpose of a lawn meeting for the Y.M.C.A. After tea in the tent and healthy games on the lawn, all moved under the canvas as the twilight deepened, and listened to addresses from Rev. J. Stuart Fox, vicar of Trinity Church, Torquay, and Mr. W. H. Roberts, District Secretary Y.M.C.A. This report must not close without one word of regret that, owing to a lingering and dangerous illness, our faithful, fervent friend, Rev. T. Cameron Wilson, vicar of Christ Church, Paignton, was unable to be with us on the sands as heretofore, though his spirit was, and his sympathies and prayers too. May the faithful in Christ not forget this servant of the Lord in his slow convalescence, also his devoted wife in her constant care and nursing. I ask prayer for myself also in Dublin all this month—"a great city and much people therein."

GOSPEL OPENINGS IN ITALY.

LAST autumn I opened a few rooms as a "Home for Christian Workers" in Rome, and two English ladies kindly gave us their assistance, and engaged in various branches of Christian work. Having now secured larger accommodation, and being able to receive comfortably six ladies, I am praying that the Lord may direct some consecrated workers to this part of the Master's field. As we hope to extend this effort, and make it ultimately self-supporting, we shall ask from £1 to £1 5s. per week from those who enter the Home. The close connection of this Home with already in existence, and the co-operation of my sister, Miss Yates, who will reside in the Home, will ensure the comfort of the inmates, and also very much facilitate their acquiring the practical knowledge of the work itself.

Together with our English sisters, one or two Roman converts will offer themselves, and, as these are unable to support themselves, we hope that some ladies, who would gladly come but cannot, will accept such as their representatives, and assume the responsibility of their support. We consider this phase of the work of the greatest importance.

The branches of work needing help, and in which, according to their gifts, the workers would co-operate, are our Sunday-schools, medical missions, Bible work, tract work, visitation of sick (with Bible-woman) at the homes and hospitals, assistance at meetings, harmonium, and singing, mothers' meetings, and sale of work, as well as evangelistic visits to country places. There are of the best English families, who, having given up all, have devoted their lives to the spread of error, and have come for the purpose of counteracting Protestantism. Is it therefore too much to expect that some of the Lord's people should give themselves to the spread of the truth? These English perverts feel the importance of sustaining the Antichrist. Shall not we come to the standard of the Christ of God? As we hope to commence in October, friends who desire to come should communicate with us immediately.

To show the great need of providing workers not only for Rome, but also for the country, I will add a few lines in reference to the state of the people among whom my dear husband, sister, and myself have been spending the last six weeks. We came from Rome to Tagliacozzo, a small town of some eight thousand inhabitants, on the new line of railway between Rome and the Adriatic. The place is prettily situated, but the people have been living in a state of UTTER IGNORANCE AND SUPERSTITION.

We could not hear of anyone (even among the more respectable) who possessed a copy of the Word of God, and very few knew that such a book exists. Their religion consists in the observation of feasts in honour of their innumerable saints and Madonnas, the sacrifice of the Mass every Sunday morning, and the prayers which they offer in Latin for their friends in purgatory. In general the priests are most immoral, drunken men, and yet when dressed in their sacerdotal robes are considered by the people as God on earth. With one exception, we never saw them approach the homes of the poor, and this was when a woman living near us lost her only little girl. We had been in the morning, and talked and prayed with the friends who had come to sympathise with her; but when in the afternoon the priest came to accompany the little body to the church he just stepped inside the door, sprinkled the holy water on the corpse, and then waited outside until the little coffin was brought out on the head of a woman, who took it to the church, and afterwards to the Campo Santo. Can we wonder at the dreadful state of darkness and superstition in which we found this people? Truly they are as sheep without a pastor; no one has ever cared for their souls.

We found we could get a welcome everywhere—hardly a home where they were not willing to receive us, even when they knew we could not approve of their fearful idolatry. We distributed portions of God's Word to all who could read, and taught those who could not some little prayer and verse of Scripture. We hope to visit these towns from time to time, and shall not rest until we have a Bible-reading in each place. Many of the villages are almost deserted during the winter on account of the quantities of snow. The men, with the stronger of the women and girls, come to seek work either in Rome or on the Campagna, leaving only the old people and the little children at home. We have been much encouraged by meeting in many of the villages up amongst the mountains those who have recognised us, having been to our meetings and medical missions in Rome. Last evening we went to a small town of about 5000 inhabitants.

THE POSTMAN HAD RECEIVED A GOSPEL

before for himself, and returned, asking us to give him some to distribute in the village. We gave him two or three, but he was not satisfied, and we agreed that he should bring us the names of those who wished to receive the Gospels; meanwhile we thought it well to go and see for ourselves. We found it a most curious and picturesque old place, famous for its excellent water, which flowed from under the mountains, and which is used in a most skilful manner to irrigate all the valley. We began by distributing the Gospels and tracts we had with us to the more respectable men whom we met in the piazza and streets, and going into the different workshops. While taking a glass of lemonade, some gentlemen came and asked most politely for copies. Several men recognised us, having been at our meetings in Rome, and were delighted to see us in their own little town. We found that twenty-five of them had written their names asking for Gospels and books. The next morning the postman himself brought us the list with their written request.

We find, from our visits to the distant villages and towns, how very important the work in Rome is during the winter, and how, with the Holy Spirit's blessing on the simple Gospel message, the precious seed may be carried to many places, for which at present we are unable to provide workers.

We trust our friends will feel with us the great need there is for devoted consecrated Christian women in this part of the Lord's vineyard, and we ask them to unite with us in earnest believing prayer and effort that many may be sent out this winter to speak, and live, and act for Jesus among these ignorant and deluded Roman Catholics. E. J. WALL.

VACATION TIME.—Dr. Cuyler thinks that ministers who spend their vacations in the country should imitate Dr. Howard Crosby, who, while summering in the Catskills, preaches every Sunday in one of the village churches near him. He says: "My own experience has been that such discourses as I have delivered during forty summer vacations have been among the best spiritual work that my blessed Master has ever permitted me to do."

American Notes.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

HENRY WARD BEECHER'S successor has been the subject of theological discussion of late. His own brother, Dr. Edward Abbot, has entered the list of opponents reviewing Dr. Lyman Abbot's theory or theories of the atonement. The review appeals to Scripture, while the Plymouth Church pastor appeals to what he terms "the consensus of the Church." He joins in the tirade of abuse now heaped on "Calvinism." Hence his needless ravings: "We do not believe that God looked on his great family of children with wrath and hatred, and that it required the blood of Christ to extinguish the flames that were burning in his soul." I have italicised the above sentence to emphasise Dr. Lyman Abbot's bug-bear of Calvinism. Certainly this implication is unfair and unmanly. But then he has joined the school of the higher critics!

One of the leading coloured preachers of the Southern States has been making a careful examination of the coloured preachers, as to their moral and intellectual status. The membership of the Coloured Methodist and Baptist Churches he estimates at 2,224,000. Of the negro pastors he says:—

"After coming into direct contact with the coloured ministers for eight years in the heart of the South, I have no hesitation in asserting that three-fourths of the Baptist ministers and two-thirds of the Methodists are unfit, either mentally or morally, or both, to preach the Gospel to any one or to attempt to lead any one."

This is rather a dark outlook. I do not, however, fully endorse our coloured brother's estimate of the character of the preaching, especially in the cities. I have met many a clear-headed, thoughtful negro preacher whose line of work is the opposite of this testimony.

"With few exceptions, the preaching of the coloured ministry is emotional in the highest degree, and the minister considers himself successful in proportion as he is able to set the people in all parts of the congregation to groaning, uttering wild screams, and jumping, finally going into a trance. One of the principal ends sought by most of these ministers is their salary, and to this everything else is made subservient. Most of the church service seems to resolve itself into an effort to get money. Not one in twenty has any business standing in the communities where they reside, and those who know them best mistrust them most in matters of finance and general morality."

There is, no doubt, great need in the country districts. What is most wanted is not the higher education of a few, but the general diffusion of elementary knowledge, especially Scriptural knowledge. However, there are good men and true seeking to work out this great problem.

The Jewish missionary, our friend Jacob Freshman, is recovering from severe bruises which resulted from a railroad accident. He was a passenger on his way to the Niagara Conference when the cars collided. He received two cuts on the forehead, and for a while was rendered insensible. After a season of quiet and nursing he is able to resume his missionary and pastoral duties. He is constantly cheered by the springing up of seed sown on Jewish stony ground.

The New York Mail and Express, a secular daily, has over its editorial columns a passage of Scripture for each day. The selections are admirable, many of them bearing especially on the way of salvation through Christ our Lord. The last I purchased, en route through New York, had in capitals that magnificent Gospel verse found in 1 John iv. 10: "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins."

CONFERENCE AT OCEAN GROVE.

THE third annual Inter-denominational Conference for Bible Study, held at Ocean Grove, New Jersey, in the United States of America, closed its sessions on Sabbath evening, August 10. It was a delightful occasion, full of interest and enthusiasm. The whole was under the immediate management of Dr. L. W. Munhall, a distinguished evangelist of the Methodist Church. The principal teachers, besides Dr. Munhall, were Dr. J. H. Brookes, of St. Louis, Mo.; Dr. Nathaniel West, of St. Paul, Minn.; Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston; Dr. William Nast Brodbeck, of Boston; Bishop Thoburn, of India; besides the Brothers Needham, of Boston, and Dr. W. J. Erdman, of Asheville, North Carolina. Much regret was expressed at the absence of Rev. Professor Morehead, and our well-known brother, Dr. Pierson, whose presence would have been a delight to all.

Among the themes of study were the interpretations of Rom. vii. and viii., and John iii., by Dr. West; "Jesus and the Resurrection," and the "Verbal Inspiration of the Word of God," by Dr. Brookes; the "Characteristics of and Differences between the Four Gospels"; and "How to Study the Bible," by Dr. Erdman; the "Need of true Revivals of Religion," by Dr. Brodbeck; the "Hope of the Believer and Coming and Millennial Glory of Christ," by Dr. Gordon; the "Tabernacle and its Lessons," in three presentations, by Mr. George C. Needham; the "Importance of Missions," by Bishop Thoburn; and the "Philosophy of Revivals," and exposition of Matt. xiii., by Dr. Munhall.

Other topics, such as the Worship of Giving, the Power of Prayer, and the Duty of Consecration, were introduced, and special emphasis laid upon them. The Word of God was magnified, and, at times, the presence of the Spirit of God was deeply manifested. The audiences varied in numbers as a matter of necessity, amid a changing population of 35,000 by the sea-shore. The largest number present at any one time was about 7000 people. No papers of any kind were read. The speakers were alive and in earnest, and went direct to the core of their themes, and held the audiences in rapt attention. The doctrine of the Second Coming of Christ was given a prominent place in many of the addresses, and the minds of the people were directed to in reference not only to the missionary activity of the times, but also to the enormous defection from the truth in professing Christendom, the materialistic and mammonistic development of our age, manifest symptoms of Israel's uprising again, and the clear providence of God in the great questions of Eastern politics and diplomacy. In this blessed work, Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Congregationalist, Friend, the converted Jew and the reclaimed Roman Catholic took part.

The "Inter-denominational" idea has been a marked success, all the more so as it has been realised in the very bosom of a great American Methodist encampment at Ocean Grove. This does not mean looseness, or heresy, or indifference to doctrine. On the contrary, none could be more thoroughly orthodox, or Pauline, in reference to law, sin, grace, depravity, helplessness, the Holy Spirit, the blood of Christ, election, predestination, and perseverance, than all the speakers on this occasion. The harmony was wonderful, and is accounted for simply by the determination that God's Inspired Word should be master, and not human speculations.

The higher critics and their criticism, also the worldly-wise philosophers and scientists, came in for their full share of consideration, and were dealt with in a masterly way. As at Niagara-on-the-Lake, and Northfield, so here, the test and dictum to prove the standing of the teacher and of the professor is, "Does he believe that the 'great fish' swallowed Jonah? If he doesn't, we don't need him and don't want him." This is a shorter and easier "Method with the Rationalists" and "Naturalists" than "Leslie's Short Method with the Deists," and it is appreciated by the people; and it is an Ithuriel spear to detect the lurking infidelity of certain religious teachers and professors who pretend to "Evangelicism," while yet denying the inspiration and authority of the Bible.

There is no false teaching here. Not science and philosophy, and the progress of the race, and man's millennium, with the schoolmaster abroad in this age, are ventilated; but the Word of God alone, which teaches the truth and smites the boast of men.

May such Conferences increase everywhere more and more! God's people want Apostolic dogmatics, Apostolic fervour and fire, and the smiting of the world, the flesh, and devil straight between the eyes every time. God's Word is and a "two-edged sword," or it is a lie. Neither Rationalistic nor Ritualistic formalists, scientists, philosophers, or critics could stand one hour before it in Apostolic times, when it was preached in faithfulness, and the Holy Ghost attended it. Nothing is more evident than the increasing defection of ministers and church teachers in our day; while still faithful men are found to contest the claims and repel the aggressions of the many forms of heresy that have honeycombed Christendom.

Such Conferences, not only in America, but in England and in Germany, are breakwaters against which, in public sight, the adversaries of the truth are broken like waves against a rock, and fall back into the surf of their own restless agitation. God has raised up, and is raising up, faithful men of learning and true piety, who are not afraid of the professionalists in pulpits, or seminaries, or universities, who, too often, teach subtle errors. The Bible, amidst a remarkable defection from its Divine authority, and remarkable denial of its inspiration, yet finds its staunch defenders, who are content to accept its utterances as final, and as the work of God, in spite of a host of objections which when sifted amount to nothing. Let us pray devoutly that it may have free course and not be bound, and go to all nations as the authoritative Word of God, and by its publication as a witness to the world, hasten the day and the coming, and the kingdom and the glory of Christ and his saints.

ENGLISH ANTI-TOBACCO SOCIETY.—The committee's monthly letter to members and friends contains the following sentence:—"To thoughtful British Christians it cannot be a pleasing announcement that the only organised national protest against a vice which, in addition to its injurious influence upon the health, does more to undermine the will power and deaden the soul to the still small voice of conscience than almost any other indulgence, is in danger of being withdrawn for lack of funds." Many will regret this state of things. The hon. sec. of the Society is Mr. Frank Spence, 25, Market-street, Manchester.

CITY LADS.—Thousands of lads between thirteen and sixteen enter upon business life in London every year, and are exposed to many temptations. In their interest some members of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. are promoting a special work. The committee of the Association have set apart two rooms, which it is proposed to furnish and supply with publications and means of recreation. Arrangements will also be made for Bible-classes, social meetings, and lectures. About £50 is needed to start the agency, which will, it is hoped, prove self-supporting, when once on the way. Communications may be addressed to Mr. J. H. Putterill, financial secretary, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

A FRESH START.—This week (says The Methodist Times) more than six hundred Wesleyan Methodist ministers will enter new pastoral charges. The pecuniary cost of these mechanically-enforced changes cannot be less than £10,000, and probably amounts to nearly double that sum. The main burden of this enormous annual expenditure falls upon our poorer circuits, which are ill able to bear it. But the waste of money is the smallest sacrifice offered to a cast-iron system, which was originally created to suit a totally different state of things. The most serious evil of the three years' limit is the destruction of a minister's local influence at the very time when it is greatest and most beneficent. It is to be hoped that the Special Committee appointed by the last Conference will have the wisdom and courage to look facts in the face. If the three years' limit is such a blessed arrangement for circuit ministers, it must be an equal benefit for ministers in departments. The actual work of bringing sinners to Christ, and making Christians Christ-like, is much more difficult than any departmental function, and ought not to be exposed to special limitations and hardships. This great issue must, at no distant day, be considered without prejudice and without passion. The sooner the better.

Mr. Quarrier's Orphan Homes.

THERE was on Wednesday, last week, at the Orphan Homes of Scotland a "Thanksgiving" in connection with the dedication of eight new buildings. At the dedication meeting held in the fine church, about a thousand persons were present. Provost Yellowlees, of Stirling, took the chair.

Provost YELLOWLEES said he did not need to speak of the nature of the work. It was Christ-like. A short time ago he became acquainted with a painful case in London. A gentleman who was once prosperous became so reduced in means and health that he had to be taken to a public hospital. But the consumption with which he was afflicted was so offensive that he was told he must leave. He (the Provost) then discovered that there was in London perhaps the most Christ-like of all institutions—a hospital supported by the Mildmay friends for those rejected by other hospitals. The same idea was at the basis of the work in these Homes; for the recommendation of the boys and girls admitted was that they were desolate, neglected, and needy. Thus many, otherwise doomed to a life of neglect and sin, and perhaps early death, have been rescued by Mr. Quarrier, and trained up for bright, happy, and useful lives here, and fitted, so far as human instrumentality could, for the happier and perfect life hereafter.

Mr. WILLIAM QUARRIER said God had been specially blessing the Homes during the last two years in the matter of stone and lime. They were opening eight new buildings, representing £16,000. If other things done were included, the amount would be £18,000. He thanked God for these gifts from the east, west, north, and south. Some of the donors he did not know; but Jesus knew them, and He would reward them some day for their generous sympathy to the orphans. During these two years there had been about 900 children in the Homes, or 450 each year. That number, added to the six or seven hundred with which the year began, gave 1100 children dealt with annually. The poultry farm given by a number of friends was a house to nurse 1000 hens and chickens, in other words, a fowl for every child in the Homes. He hoped the poultry farm would be a commercial success. Then during the past two years there had been five hundred of these children sent to Canada. The feeding of the children just meant nine tons of flour per month, which were baked into bread. Besides which they used two and a half tons of oatmeal, and he did not know how many tons of potatoes and groceries.

If those present were to see the children when they were first in the Homes, and after they had been there a while, they would not know them. Indeed he did not know them himself, so great was the change caused by good food and good lodgement. He was a sanitarian as well as a spiritual Christian, believing in good houses, substantial and wholesome food, and the body kept clean. He was also anxious that every child should know and feel that God was his Father and the provider of his daily bread: that it was not Mr. Quarrier nor those who gave the money, but that it all came from Him who was the Father of the fatherless, the Husband of the widow, and the stay of all who put their trust in Him. He felt he was a servant in the Lord's house. He felt he had gone to the market-place, and been hired by the Lord, who said unto him: "Come into my vineyard; whatever is right I shall give thee." In weakness and fear he entered upon the work, thinking he could do nothing; but the Lord had helped and blessed his work all through these twenty-six years, and he was there that day to say "He will bless us still." To God did he want them to give all the glory, and he asked them to worship Him for having touched the hearts of the men and women who had given the money to found and carry on the Homes. In a word, he was there to say that Jesus had done all things well.

Whence did they get the money? It came as they needed it. The month before last he had only a few shillings over after clearing up the four weeks' account. He did not go to Stirling and say to the Provost: "You had better lend me money," nor did he go to the Lord Provost of Glasgow and say: "You are a rich man, will you not help us?" He went rather to the Lord Jesus and said: "Unless you come to our help we will be in debt," which they never had been. He said: "Lord, give us money to finish up the month." He did not want a big account in the bank, for he preferred to draw from the bank of the Lord. So from Kirkcaldy there came a cheque for £30 from one who did not know they were in straits. It came and helped to finish up the month and leave a balance on the right side. In concluding, Mr. Quarrier said that he and those who had worked with him would not be content till they had gathered home every poor neglected orphan in the land; and, when they gave their account, they would say: "Here am I and the children whom Thou hast given me."

A short address followed by Miss Annie Macpherson, of the Home of Industry, London.

THE GOSPEL IN FRANCE.

A VAST AND NOVEL MISSION SPHERE.

IT has long since occurred to me, what great access we have for evangelisation into France by means of its canals and rivers. Some years back Mons. D. Robert, writing of the great success of the missionary boat Mystery at Dunkirk, remarked:—

"It is now the time to say that we have acquired an experience during this missionary campaign, begun more than a year ago near Roubaix and Croix, but accentuated at Dunkirk. I refer to the people, men, women, and children, found on the canal boats which travel from one end of France to the other, and who are met in such great numbers at Dunkirk. We have always found them accessible by conversation, and always ready to receive with pleasure the journals and books which we can give them. Allow me to say, in a parenthesis, that there is amongst these thousands of persons a vast mission field to open up. We have often seen the boat-people pressing forward to surround the Mystery, in order to hear the addresses given from its deck, a good number seeming to hunger after the truth, and some at a distance have sent a boat, rowed by a young girl, to obtain some good reading."

The subsequent encouraging experiences in other parts of the French coast by Mr. Henry Cook's mission boats showed how wide a field was to be found there; but now quite recently the trip to Paris of the Herald of Mercy, and its anchoring at the Pont de la Concorde, when crowds pressed in and around to hear the Gospel, all this is very promising, and has suggested what further may be done inland by this novel mode of evangelisation. The committee of the McAll Mission wish to turn this experience to account, and follow up this indication of a successful opening by having a boat of their own—a kind of house-boat—for permanent work on the canals and rivers of France.

There are some favouring circumstances for such a work, the people being to some extent loosened from the ties of superstition on the one side, and libre pensée on the other, and showing a readiness to welcome the advances of evangelical Christians. A feeling is gaining ground with them that they cannot do without some religion.

France, in the good providence of God, is remarkably covered with a network of rivers, which, flowing down from its mountains and hills, bring fertility and prosperity, and an easy mode of inter-communication, to the whole country. The majority of its departments are named after their rivers. The extent of navigable water mileage amounts to 4,575 miles.

This has long been supplemented by its splendid canals, which connect the main rivers and their affluents with important centres of commerce, the Canal du Midi even connecting the Mediterranean with the Atlantic, running from Tarascon at the Rhone along the Etangs and Agde at the sea, and by Toulouse and Agen into the navigable part of the Garonne; in the north they extend into Belgium. Two of the canals in the east communicate with the Rhine; a very long one runs through Brittany, from Nantes to Brest, but they are most numerous in the centre in connection with the Loire and its affluents. The mileage of these canals is 2,900 miles, so that the whole of the water communication amounts to 12,000 kilometres.

What a vast proportion of this lovely country is thus laid bare to the gaze of the earnest Christian who longs to bring the glad tidings of the gospel to the millions so long remaining in darkness, and under the blight of superstition, ignorance, and indifference, and, to so great an extent, still without the consolations of the Book of God and its precious doctrines!

The eighteen great canals and upwards of eighty rivers (with their feeders) call aloud for this Rob-Roy kind of ministry. The bateliers with their families present in themselves a wide field of Christian labour; then the men at the locks, the douaniers, the inhabitants on the banks of the water-way, the numerous villages and towns within call, give vast opportunities for the spread of the Gospel. The modest request of Mr. McAll's committee for one boat ought not to remain unanswered a single day. A boat could easily be constructed in this scientific and ingenious age with all needful appliances for living, sleeping, and cooking, so as to render it a convenient residence, if not a comfortable home, much more so than a Bible-carriage has proved to be; a house, in fact, on the water, and it need not cost much. It could be rowed or propelled, and in case of necessity a little assistance for towing it could easily be found, or a horse hired to take it from village to village; a more enterprising manager might even introduce steam.

Surely friends could be found in England who would be glad to put a boat of their own for Gospel work on the rivers and canals of France, and take a turn in it, and see how gladly it would be welcomed by the people—a happy change from their usual continental tour.

What a bright enterprise for a couple of young Christian men, filled with a holy enthusiasm to obey Christ's command to preach the Gospel to every creature. The variety of scenery and of character encountered in passing through so large a portion of the country would be singularly interesting, and when it became rather monotonous on the water, a temporary residence in an inn would be a pleasant change. In collective evangelising, a helping hand from a French Christian brother would sometimes be found. Of course a fair knowledge of French is indispensable, but fluency would soon be acquired by contact with so many French people.

With the present extensive interest in foreign missions, surely it is not too much to expect that two volunteers will present themselves for France, and if they have means of their own so much the better. A person with even small means could meet so very moderate a cost of living in this way.

One is not obliged to pass by a country at our very doors whilst regarding the foreign field, for here is a sphere of missionary labour as important and pressing as those at the Antipodes. Who will enter in? GEO. PEARSE.

Protestant Notes.

THIS week the anniversary services have been held of the Ritualistic Society, known as the "Association for the Promotion of the Unity of Christendom." This Society must not be confounded with the Home Reunion Society. The latter seeks to secure reunion with Nonconformists on the basis of submission to the claims of the Church of England, while the former seeks for the restoration of visible communion between the Church of England and the corrupt Eastern and Western Churches; and treats Nonconformists as quite outside of the visible Church of Christ on earth, leaving them in a spirit of narrow-minded bigotry, to what is termed the "uncovenanted mercies" of God.

The real object of the Association for the Promotion of the Unity of Christendom may be more briefly stated as that of corporate reunion with the Church of Rome. The Association was formed as far back as the year 1857, and is therefore, with the exception of the Society of the Holy Cross (founded in 1855) the oldest of existing Ritualistic societies. Its members are required only to pray for this reunion, and their names—for obvious reasons—are kept strictly secret. It is stated in one of the papers officially circulated by the Association that "The names of members will be kept strictly private." Under its auspices the famous "Essays on the Reunion of Christendom" were issued in 1867, with a Preface by the late Dr. Pusey. In this volume the desire of the Ritualists for corporate reunion with the Church of Rome is unblushingly admitted; and it is even declared that, "Had men listened to the voice of God, in place of giving way to their violent tempers, we can scarcely doubt that Rome would have become a Monarchy by assent of the whole Church" (p. 26). In the way of those who thus traitorously seek to make Rome the Monarch over the whole of Christ's Church on earth, there stands one great obstacle, which is thus described in the volume from which we have just quoted: "The first great hindrance that is before us arises from the 'Protestantism of England.' Till that is removed, the Reunion of our Church, as the Church of England, with either the Greek or Latin Churches, is absolutely hopeless" (p. 89).

The real character of the "A.P.U.C." being thus ascertained, it is specially important to note that the Ritualistic papers of last week mention the names of no fewer than 125 churches where "celebrations" of the Holy Communion had been promised on behalf of the reunion schemes of the Association—37 in London, and 88 in the provinces. These statistics powerfully proclaim the onward progress of the Romanising movement. It is a conspiracy on too gigantic a scale to be ignored or treated with contempt.

If the "A.P.U.C." were the only society working for reunion with Rome, we might have some excuse for not being over anxious. But unfortunately it is not the only organisation of the kind. The English Church Union boasts of a membership of no fewer than 25 bishops, 3731 clergymen, and 25,843 laymen and women. This Union also is officially pledged (by its annual report for 1878) to the "restoration of visible communion" with the Church of Rome; and since then Lord Halifax has, again and again, from the presidential chair of the E.C.U., declared his earnest desire for corporate reunion with the Church of Rome. Is there no danger when such a large Society as this has adopted visible communion with Rome as a part of its programme?

The Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament also makes official "intercessions" every month, "that unity may be vouchsafed to Christendom"; and in 1877, Canon Carter, Superior General of this Confraternity, officially declared, that in the matter of "Eucharistical Adoration," there was no difference between what its members held and that which is taught by the Church of Rome. There are two bishops of the Church of England, 1410 clergymen, and 12,500 of the laity, who are members of this Confraternity, which may be truly termed a Romanising Conspiracy.

There is yet another Ritualistic Society formed for the special purpose of labouring to persuade the Church of England to submit to the Pope, viz.:—the "Order of Corporate Reunion." It is more traitorous and secret than any of the other organisations. There is reason to suppose that its members are but few, yet it is well to consider that a very few people, working in the dark, may cause a great deal of mischief—the Gunpowder Conspirators, for instance—and that it is never safe to despise an enemy. The Order of Corporate Reunion was started in 1877. This Society has its own specially consecrated bishops, who secretly ordain young men for the ministry of the Church of England; for, in its opinion, it is doubtful whether the orders conferred by the Diocesan bishops are valid, and, therefore, it is sometimes considered necessary conditionally to re-ordain those priests who join its ranks. The head official of the Order has thus declared its attitude towards the Pope of Rome:—"It is quite true that we do 'not assume an attitude of independence towards the Holy See.' We frankly acknowledge that, in the Providence of God, the Roman Pontiff is the first Bishop in the Church, and, therefore, its visible head on earth. We do not believe that either the Emperor of Russia or the Queen of England is the head of the Church. As the Church must have some executive head, and as there is no other competitor, we believe the Pope to be that head. But he is more to us than this, for he is our Patriarch as well. So that we admit his claim to the veneration and loyalty of all baptized men, and in a special degree of all Western Christians; and in these capacities we prayed for him in the Services connected with our Constituent Synod [of the Order of Corporate Reunion]" (Reunion Magazine, page 242).

DUFF MISSIONARY COLLEGE.—The Principal of this Calcutta Institution writes: "I am glad to hear of Dr. Pentecost's intended visit. November will suit us very well, and we shall be glad to give him opportunities of addressing our Bible-classes. We fear not the most pointed appeals, if they come from one who understands and has sympathy with students."

THE "NOON REST."—The business women and girls of Indianapolis are enjoying what is styled a "Noon Rest," established in a central portion of the city by the Young Women's Christian Temperance Union. The institution is a sort of woman's club, and the "plant" consists of a number of rooms, open each week day from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., where all young women who work in stores and shops are invited to spend their noon hours. Tables are provided for lunches, and milk, tea, coffee, and chocolate are served for three cents. per cup. The Indianapolis News says that the new institution does not come under the head of "charity" in any sense, and the details of its management are the free offering of those who are sensitive enough to realise the instinct of women for the grateful seclusion which exclusive surroundings can give.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE (58, St. George's-road, S.W.).—The following extracts from a letter received from Miss Cunningham (Swediah, Syria), a former student, will interest many:—"I have been kept very busy, as we had a good deal of influenza and tonsilitis during the winter. I prescribed for over 300 patients, and visited over 100 in their own homes. I have had abundant success, and can never be thankful enough that I was led to study medicine. It has been a great help to me in my work; indeed, all the pupils in my school have come because I attended some member of their families when ill. Even the local governor called on me for sore throat, and also for his family. I had so run down, I had to come here (Deritsyah) for a change; it is a very pleasant village, about twenty hours from Damascus, and much drier than Swediah. It soon leaked out who I was, and I have been nearly as much beset with patients as I was at home."

SOUTH AMERICAN PORTS.

REV. E. W. MATTHEWS, secretary to the British and Foreign Sailors' Society (offices, Mercer-street, Shadwell, E.), has just returned from visiting some of the ports of South America. God blessed his mission to the extension of the operations of the Society. He writes:—

"Friends gave and promised in the ports of the Plate some 40,000 dollars. At Buenos Ayres a harbour mission and temperance sailors' home, &c., were strongly organised. Mr. Walker, of Pernambuco, is to be the missionary in charge. The souls ruined in that spot no tongue can tell. At Rosario a seamen's mission was established, agent engaged, and Captain Ferguson gave a mission boat. The secretary, Mr. Macdonald, was a class-mate (and shared his room) with the popular preacher, Rev. John McNeill. At Montevideo God opened the way in a wonderful manner. At the service in the harbour Captain McDonald, of the ship Lombardian, promised on behalf of his brother ship-masters a large sail mission boat; the three English men-of-war in port promised a collection towards furnishing a sailors' home on shore; a friend led off the subscription list with 1000 dollars gold, or some £214. The hon. secretary proved to be the brother of our sweet singer, Miss Mary Davies. Mr. Williams, the organist of the American Church (whose good wife has been visiting with himself among our bluejackets), offered his services to look after the home and be port missionary. We had the presence and help of envoys, consuls, and ministers, irrespective of nation or creed.

"To go into the needs of the ports, fleets, and ships, number of seamen, previous absence of missions, destruction of body and soul, crimping and its evil consequences, would require several articles. A number of Brazilian and other ports, deadly in more ways than one to our seamen, are still without Bethel, Mission, or anything else. The work in the mighty port of Rio must be extended, and Mr. Wesson, who has gone out in faith, should be supported by the faithful. Bahia Blanca, some 400 miles South of Buenos Ayres, I found in a sad condition—for weeks together not even a service on Sunday. One captain put a mate out on account of drink, and half the crew of another vessel ran away. A boatswain and two able seamen of another ship were in prison, a sailor mad with drink, threatening to stab everyone, had to be arrested by the police, while an English barque was detained over five weeks, being under arrest with four of her crew in prison at La Plata, waiting their trial for murder. Saturday night and Sunday are the great times for drinking and its fearful consequences. I promised, in the hope that friends would help, to take immediate steps in this port also. A few hundred pounds would help to complete this chain of stations in these neglected places."

Mr. George S. Froggett, of Montevideo (296, Calle Cuareim), writes:—"I am glad to say that an era of Gospel work has begun among the sailors in this beautiful harbour. For weeks now, weather permitting, divine worship has been held on board some merchant vessel or other. The ministers of the Methodist Church have enthusiastically taken the matter up, and the sailors in their turn have shown an appreciation of these services which has been very gratifying. Vice-Admiral H. D. Grant, C.B., has been a most valuable coadjutor in this noble work, and to him we are indebted, under God, for much of our success. The English-speaking community of this city welcomed with joy the Sailors' Home and Harbour Mission project, advanced by Rev. E. W. Matthews, and additions are still being made to the Home and Harbour Mission fund."

The Home Teaching Society for the Blind provides seventeen teachers and seventeen libraries in as many districts embracing the Metropolis. Owing to the decease of some regular supporters, the funds have rather diminished of late, and the Committee solicit help that they may tide over this temporary difficulty.—RALPH TAIT, Secretary, 31, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars, London, E.C.

For the Young.

AN UPPER CONGO SCHOOL.

BY MRS. JOHN MCKITTRICK,
Of the Congo Balolo Mission.

(The Balolo Mission is a branch of the East London Institute, Harley House, Bow, London, E.)

A FEW months ago we steamed up this great Lolanga river, a tributary of the Congo, and landed in a district called Lolongo, where hundreds of people crowded round us to see and hear for themselves the white man. It would be difficult to say whether they felt more astonishment or fright. Sometimes their curiosity quite overcame other feelings, and they stared with open eyes and mouths; then, if by chance we looked at or touched one of them, he or she would run away, followed by most of the crowd. We told them we had come to "sit down" among them and tell them the "words of God."

Days passed on, and by degrees the people became more friendly, and the children less frightened. Then we began a school, and it is about this school I am going to write. First, as to the school-house. It is very different from any English building, and really consists only of a roof made of palm fronds and bamboos supported on poles. The floor is of earth, trodden hard by many black feet. Benches, chairs, tables, or forms we have none; but some old canoe boards placed on sticks form good seats, and the most advanced of the pupils sit or squat around a large wooden case which serves as table. Our lessons are not numerous or difficult; singing, reading, and writing are the only things the children learn at present. One rule we have, very easy to remember, and when all the children keep this rule I have not much trouble; when they do not, I have to bring out my stick.

"DO WHAT YOU ARE TOLD,"

Now let me show you the children who came to-day, and tell you about some of them. When the bell rings, you may see them running in from all quarters, some from the towns, some coming in canoes to the landing-place, and others from our own station, until thirty-five to forty are gathered together; their dress would amuse and shock you very much. Our station boys wear a piece of cotton stuff tied round the waist and a kind of jacket over it, and they generally look clean and neat. The boys who come from the town only have a tiny strip of cloth a few inches long, and the girls a very short grass petticoat. All alike have bare feet and black woolly heads. The town boys have their hair done up in all sorts of curious fashions; each head is quite a work of art, made up with partings, rolls, fringes, circles, crescents, curls, spikes, triangles, and horns! Of course, when the hair is once built up in this fashion, it has to remain so for many days. Some have bright intelligent faces, others look dull and unattractive.

School always opens with a hymn; they have learnt translations of several English hymns, such as "Jesus loves me," "Jewels," &c., and then we go to the reading and writing. At 11·30 I call the roll, and, having answered to their names, the boys march out single file, and I have often thought that though you might find better looking boys in England, you would not see in any school such straight backs and upright figures as our boys have. As they file out one by one I must introduce some of these Balolo boys. The head of the procession is Nyange: he has not a prepossessing countenance, but he is the cleverest one of the party. Already he can read the hymns from our little book, and writes very fairly. He is our head boy in the house, and I find him very useful. He is fond of study, and ambitious to maintain his place as head scholar.

The other day, on dismissing the boys, I changed the order of march, and a stranger boy took the lead. No sooner were the boys out of school than they all rushed at the unoffending new boy and knocked him about most unmercifully. I called them back and inquired the reason of such behaviour. "He knows nothing," said they, "why should he walk first?"

Following Nyange is our laundry-boy, or jackwash as we say out here. He does all our washing, and, if you were to visit us earlier or later in the day, you would find Malele standing in the river, the water up to his knees, bending over a wooden box in which he rubs and pounds the clothes. A few months ago this boy, like all his people, had never seen soap, and never dreamed of washing a piece of cloth. They wear a cloth until it is so covered with dirt that no colour is distinguishable, but do not think of washing it. However, Malele does his work well, and few boys in England could iron forty or fifty garments in one day as well as our young jackwash: he is about fourteen years old. The next in order is Bateko, our cook-boy. He is a slave belonging to a man in the town who claims all his wages. Nevertheless, Bateko is very glad to work for us, and is probably happier than ever in his life before. He can cook fairly well, and is getting on with his lessons.

Further down the row are two brothers, very much alike in face, but otherwise very different. Bombamba, the elder, is an intelligent boy, who comes regularly from his dress consists of a strip of cloth only, his body being smeared with palm-oil and cam-wood dye. The younger, Nyanga, fourteen or fifteen years of age, is a very handsome lad, and has progressed sufficiently with his reading and writing to help me to teach the alphabet. He thus acts as monitor; but is useful in many other ways, working in the garden, clearing the yard, &c. He is certainly inclined to be somewhat lazy; but on the whole gives less trouble than any of the others.

It would take far too long to tell you about all our boys and girls. One little fellow, named Monganja, comes every day and is anxiously looking forward to being a "white man's boy." Many of them would like to come and live on the station, if we could take them.

Friday is the great day for the boys; then they all have a fine game with a ball of their own making. All are armed with long sticks, and as they dash about with only a small piece of cloth tied round them brandishing these things, jumping over fences, plunging into the river, and struggling with one another, they look more like young warriors actually fighting than boys playing. This is their favourite game. They have no week of seven days as we have, but they always know when Friday comes round, and call it "Bokolo wa botufi," the day of the ball.

Of course there are thousands of children who never come to school at all, and it is for their sakes we want the boys here to learn to read and write. If thirty or forty boys are trained here, they will be able to go out and teach others. But above all we long to see our boys give their hearts to the Lord; mere reading the Word of God will not save them, but the knowledge of the love of Jesus in the heart brings salvation. I wish every boy and girl who reads this will remember to pray for our school-children so far away in the dark continent of Africa.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Sept. 14, John xiv. 16—31:- Mon., Sept. 15, John xv. 1—15; Tues., Sept. 16, John xv. 16—27; Wed., Sept. 17, John xvi. 1—15; Thurs., Sept. 18, John xvi. 16—33; Fri., Sept. 19, John xvii. 1—13; Sat., Sept. 20, John xvii. 14—26.

CHILDREN'S SEASIDE SERVICES.

Arrangements now in force in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission:—Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Llanddulno, to Sept. 14; holding services also at Colwyn Bay (Rev. H. S. Hume, M.A., in charge), Llanfairfechan and Pensarn. Captain Bruce Moorhouse, Rhyl. Mr. Ernest E. H. Reed, St. Leonards.

A MORNING INVITATION.

See, the rising of the sun
Tells another day's begun.

Little children, rise and greet
God's free gift with anthems sweet.

Kneel and thank Him for his care,
For He loves to hear your prayer.

Ask from Him a thankful mind,
Praise Him for his mercies kind.

Read his Word, and strive to grow
Like the Saviour, when below.

Here on earth a child He dwelt,
All our troubles knew and felt.

In your work and in your play,
Strive God's Spirit to obey.

Try to please the Lord above
Who surrounds you with his love.

FISHERMEN IN BANTRY BAY.

ACROSS Bantry Bay—where the British Fleet is annually moored for naval manœuvres—is a wild, mountainous, poverty-stricken peninsula, in area about equal to the Isle of Man.

In this vast district, the only preachers of the simple Gospel of Jesus Christ are the rector (Rev. John Halahan), and his curate (Rev. Z. W. Miller), both of whom have the very great advantage of being able to speak and preach in native Irish, which is there the prevalent language. In this extensive parish are four churches, at such distances apart as to involve, on Sunday, a twenty-mile drive on the part of each minister. Of these churches, the central and most important one is at Castletown, at the head of the famous harbour.

Berehaven has of late years become a centre of the mackerel fishery, which causes an influx of hundreds of

ENGLISH FISHERMEN AND BUYERS.

It is, therefore, proposed considerably to enlarge the church, so as to provide ample accommodation for these annual visitors, who otherwise would be without a place of worship. These men come chiefly from the Isle of Man, Lowestoft, Yarmouth, Whitehaven, &c., and, as it is mainly for their benefit these improvements are to be undertaken, it is hoped that English Christians, and especially those who are interested in Christian work among sailors and fishermen, will strengthen the hands of these solitary but hard-working ministers, and aid them in accomplishing the work they have in hand.

The resident Protestants are only a little over two hundred in number, none of whom are wealthy, being chiefly small farmers, coastguards, and fishermen. Yet these parishioners and their friends have themselves contributed £500 in various ways, a task involving in these hard times. But having done this they cannot possibly do more.

From personal visits to these churches, as Association Secretary for the South of Ireland of the C.M.S., I can, as an Englishman, testify of the deeply spiritual tone and generous missionary spirit of these congregations, as well as of the affectionate regard in which the clergy are held by both parishioners and fishermen, and of the quiet, yet successful work being done among the Roman Catholics. The rector, I may say, has spent his entire ministerial life amongst these people, having been ordained curate for the parish in 1846. During the terrible famine period he was employed in relieving the hunger and sufferings of the famishing multitudes that flocked in from the country around. All through his long life he has ever been a trusted friend and faithful pastor. For the re-roofing of the church at Castletown, Berehaven (an imperative necessity as a protection against the weather), and its enlargement, £1000 are still required. I will gladly correspond with any friends willing to extend a helping hand to their poor but true Protestant brethren in this remote part of Ireland.

(REV.) JOHN P. HAYTHORNTHWAITE.

Kimberley Diamonds.

EIGHT thousand heathen compounded within a radius of five miles, and representing every tribe in South Africa, from the degraded Hottentot to the manly Zulu. What a field for a missionary, you say! Certainly it is without exception one of the most unique fields of labour in the world; in dealing with them you know you are talking to an ever-shifting congregation. As soon as their little "heap" is made they return to their tribes, many walking hundreds of miles, and some, thank God, taking back with them a living Saviour and his precious word, as well as their hard-earned wages.

My visit there in 1888 convinced me of the need of more missionaries, and this opinion was more than confirmed when Mr. Morris, the Wesleyan missionary in the compounds, told me that such was indeed the case. On returning to England the Cape General Mission was founded, and now we have our representative hard at work, under the direction of, and in true fellowship with, Mr. Morris, although distinctly recognised as our missionary. To increase agencies, we felt sure, would only confuse the natives, and so we resolved to avoid this. Our worker, Mr. Walklett, is in full swing, working morning, noon, and night, and already with encouraging results. His spare time is devoted to acquiring the language, for which, until he knows it, he has to fall back upon an interpreter.

Diamond stealing and drunkenness were very rife some few years ago. As long as the men had money to spend the cursed canteen was their resort; here Cape brandy of the vilest sort, and similar fiery spirits, were forced upon these natives. On Saturday some of the streets of Kimberley were turned into for the drink had transformed its victims into devils. Fightings, bloodshed, and murders were then the order of the day, and those who have seen these sights can never forget them. Of course this greatly hindered the mining operations; besides, many were able by swallowing diamonds to get off with impunity. The diamond companies suffered considerably, and to stop this the compound system was brought into force. One to three acres were enclosed with high walls; inside and against these walls comfortable sheds were erected, and in the largest compound a hospital was built. Each compound had its store, where everything needful could be bought, except drink. Men wishing to work in the mines became voluntary prisoners for specified times.

To see the remarkable contrast between the compounded and uncompounded natives would give you some idea of the blessing have been. I visited the two largest and one small one, and immensely enjoyed the interesting sight, as well as the short service conducted by my good friend Mr. Morris, assisted by Mr. Walklett. We found the stores were well conducted, and prices reasonable. Accompanied by one of the managers, we commenced an inspection of the premises, and as we went on our interest increased; for in this compound alone there are two thousand heathen. Passing by the sheds occupied principally by Kaffirs, we were greatly amused at the antics of some who were thoroughly enjoying the large swimming bath. A hasty glance at the washing tanks reminded one of an English washing day; and then we passed to Mr. Kidd's favourite department, the compound hospital. The sickness which principally proves fatal is pneumonia. My heart ached so as I saw some gasping for breath; and evidently their hours were numbered—dark as night, and no one to tell them of Jesus, for the majority did not understand English. One Basuto had just died, a few moments before our entrance, and next to him lay another, a fine strapping fellow, his eyes fixed, and just passing away.

We went round the ward with sorrowing hearts, knowing that when some left they would be carried out only to a grave. Precious diamonds indeed; and to think the Saviour died for them, and yet so many knew it not! All this impressed us with the necessity of making the compounds

A VERY SPECIAL BRANCH OF OUR WORK.

The different tribes were very conservative in the way they associated. Each occupied a special part of the compound, but all were more or less friendly towards each other. We went into some of the sheds, and were always welcomed. They seemed to appreciate any interest we took in them, although they were in many cases but raw heathen. After a short service, we turned from this compound, much impressed with the perfect order and good management which characterised it.

My first visit only gave me a very limited idea of all the interesting sights inside, so I made an engagement with Mr. Morris to enable me to glean more particulars, and the second and third visits were more interesting than the first. It was Sunday afternoon, and the well-known Kaffir hymn led by our missionary, Mr. Walklett, on the harmonium, soon attracted a large congregation. I was struck with their reverence; at prayers they all knelt down, the heathen imitating the professing Christian. The singing was very sweet, and Mr. Walklett's special gift in this direction will prove an acquisition. It was my privilege to speak to these dear fellows of the love of God, Mr. Morris kindly interpreting.

At the close of the service I was attracted to a part of the compound resorted to by the Bechuanas, a native Christian kindly piloting me. They were in all the excitement of a war dance. My good friend the interpreter told me how utterly careless and indifferent they are. They have no religion at all, and their only belief is in the power of evil spirits. The witch-doctors have tremendous influence over them, their power consisting in a series of simple frauds, which not being detected by these darkened minds are looked upon with deep awe and implicitly believed in.

On turning from this sight it was only to face another, which reflected discredit upon my own countrymen. Little knots of natives were deeply engrossed in card playing, gambling not merely with silver but gold. Quarrelling was frequent, and the worst of English oaths indulged in. These vices, as well as the gambling propensities, have been acquired from the English. Of course this is a hindrance to the missionary, as the natives naturally class Englishmen all together.

As I was leaving, some new comers from Basutoland were just arriving, and were greeted by a general chorus of shouts. Some Basuto friends soon had them in tow, no doubt rejoiced to hear some news from their own tribes.

Three days after this visit I obtained permission to visit the convict compounds, where are housed, working under the eye of armed sentries. They were certainly well cared for as regards food. Not a few are under sentence for two years or more. A good many of these poor fellows are the trapper's victims, and are to be pitied; others are regular rogues.

Urgent work in connection with our mission necessitated another run to Kimberley, and I decided on some more visits to these compounds. We soon arrived at the Orion Company's compound, and were kindly received by the manager. It was a small one compared with the De Beers, but still very full of natives, mostly representing the Amashangaana tribe. They are fine fellows, but awfully ignorant. We went round to the sheds inviting them in, while Mr. Walklett was drawing a congregation with his concertina; for they love music.

THE GAMBLING FEVER WAS RIFE, and in many cases they told us to "go to the Kaffirs; they understand it, we don't." You cannot help loving these fellows, dark as they are. Kind attention soon wins their hearts, and they seem instinctively to know when you care for them.

In one shed several were under the influence of dagga, or wild hemp-like opium. It has a fearful effect on them when smoked, producing madness in time. They seemed in a sort of semi-intoxicated state, so it was no good asking them to come. After Mr. Morris had spoken a very earnest word, he interpreted for me. It was Missionary Sunday—i.e., voluntary offerings are made at certain times towards the missionary work. I was wonderfully struck with their liberality, nearly all subscribing from 10s. to £1. I could not help thinking what a lesson many so-called rich Christians could learn from these benighted ones.

In the afternoon I visited the Central Compound, which is the second largest, having 1100 heathen inside. A great many are Zulus; the more you see of these men you observe how much superior they are to the representatives of other tribes. They are brave, almost to fanaticism, quite indifferent to pain, and very dignified in their bearing; tall, and splendidly proportioned, with remarkably open faces, but in utter darkness of soul. On leaving, I was more than ever convinced of this wonderful opening for missionaries.

The fame of Kimberley is known far and wide, and nearly all the tribes have their representatives at work in the mine. Will your readers follow the patient labours of our missionaries there, and rejoice with us over the precious souls that are being saved? It is encouraging to see how eagerly they learn to read from these servants of God. Night after night large numbers gather to hear the Gospel. W. SPENCER WALTON.

REV. DR. LANSDELL, the well-known Asiatic traveller, has arrived in London, after an absence of two years' duration. During this time he has visited every kingdom of Asia. Leaving London in 1888, he proceeded direct to St. Petersburg, whence he went to the Caucasus, the Black Sea, Merv, Bokhara, Tashkend, and Kuldja: then down to Khotan, the Karakoro Mountains, through northern India. Afterwards he went to Burmah, and then south to the Straits Settlements, and north to Siam, Cochin China, Annam, Tonquin, China, Japan, and back to the Philippine Islands, Borneo, Malacca, Ceylon, Afghanistan, Beloochistan, Arabia, Persia, Syria, the Holy Land, Egypt, Northern Africa, and so on to Spain.

A DYING TESTIMONY.—From The Friend for the current month we learn that the late Mr. Francis Davis, of Enniscorthy, sent from his death-bed the following message: "Tell everyone I die trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ, and in nothing else!" At one time during his illness he thought his work was not quite done, and prayed that he might be spared a little longer. Later on he said: "The reason I was so anxious to live was that I might direct others to the Saviour, that they might have peace, and joy, and rest, and assurance in Him who says Himself, 'I am the Way, and the Truth, and the Life'; no matter what they do, if they neglect coming to Him, it will avail nothing, and I leave it as a message to everyone to 'Come to Jesus,' who is 'the Way, the Truth, and the Life.' Tell Friends everywhere, I lament the Holy Scriptures not having been put in their right place, for the Scriptural education of the young in families, and in meetings for worship and otherwise." For a while he was in great distress at the remembrance of lost opportunities, and said: "It is an awful thing to lose opportunities God has given." The evening before he passed away, he awoke suddenly, saying, "Oh! surpassing!" and on being asked what was surpassing, he replied, "Joy! Joy!!" Very near the end he said, "Heaven is not far away."

THE LATE MR. R. C. L. BEVAN.

IN the death of ROBERT COOPER LEE BEVAN, a well-known figure has been removed from the ranks of evangelical Christians. He was born in 1809, and was the elder son of Mr. David Bevan of the Manor House, Fosbury, Wiltshire, an estate which is still held by the family. At a suitable age he was sent to Harrow School, and from there he went to Trinity College, Oxford. He had hardly become of age, however, when he became a partner in the great banking house, which was established in the year 1700, and which to-day has its headquarters in Lombard-street and at Pall Mall, as Barclay, Bevan, Tritton, Ransome, Bouverie & Co.

The recently-deceased head of this firm was thus associated with the City of London in business for over sixty years, though for some time past he was unable to attend personally at the bank in consequence of the rheumatic gout from which he so greatly suffered. At the time of his death, Mr. Bevan was also chairman of the Committee of Bankers; he was a Justice of the Peace for Middlesex; and in politics he was a Conservative, but hardly took sufficient interest in party strife to rank as a party man at all. Indeed, since his retirement from active business, his chief concern had been to aid and stimulate the many Christian agencies and societies which looked to him as one of their most liberal contributors.

Nowhere was Mr. Bevan more respected or beloved than at Fosbury, the quiet out-of-the-way village on the Wiltshire downs, the manor house of which was built by Mr. Bevan's grandfather in the last century. As might be expected, the parishioners found it to be a great privilege to live under such a proprietor, or one who appears to have considered no advantages too great to confer upon the poor who might stand in need of a friend. As a correspondent of The Record wrote at the time of his death:—

> He built and endowed the church, built the vicarage and schools, and the pretty model cottages mostly covered with ivy, his favourite creeper, in place of the insanitary little buildings he mostly found on the estate. To the last nothing was thought unnecessary or too expensive that promoted the moral and temporal good of the people. Clubs, hospital tickets, and relief of every kind, were never wanted, but he gave with that kindness which so much enhances a gift. Little wonder that all esteem and the oldest inhabitants entertain the greatest affection and respect for him.

Of course, under such conditions, the few weeks' sojourn of the squire at his provincial seat was ever looked forward to with joy by the villagers, although the needy among them were never forgotten even when Mr. Bevan was in London, at Trent Park, or at Cannes. His example of never neglecting to be present, whenever possible, at public worship seems also to have had an influence on the people at Fosbury generally; and Mr. Bevan not only made a practice of reading the Scripture lessons in the church, he would pray in private with the ministers for the Divine blessing on their labours.

He could thus rejoice with the pastors when any were really converted. Beyond this, the squire would also set an example of active Christian service; for, as the correspondent already quoted adds:—

> Until quite lately he always taught in the morning Sunday-school, besides visiting the day-schools and questioning the children. He would also give a Gospel address in the schoolroom on Sunday afternoon, there being no service in church, or on a week night. No good cause or society in which the clergymen ever tried to interest the people but was helped on by the ever-ready sympathy of Mr. Bevan. No one could know him well and not feel that the great object of his life was to serve the Lord Christ.

He was one of those whose religion commended him, and made him more attractive with persons of every class and of all ages. While he would show a mind to enter into the games of the young, he had a good store of knowledge and of anecdotes to serve him as a conversationalist among those of riper years.

Mr. Bevan twice entered the married state. His first wife, who died nearly forty years ago, leaving four sons and two daughters, was Agneta Elizabeth, the only daughter of Admiral Yorke, and sister of the fourth Lord Hardwicke. His second wife, who with eight children is still living, was Emma Frances, elder daughter of Dr. Philip N. Shuttleworth, who died in 1842, soon after he had become Bishop of Chichester. The Bishop was an able scholar, who wrote with great force on the Inspiration of Scripture, and also against the Puseyism which had then crept into the Universities. He died at the age of sixty.

The great banking house in Lombard-street is nearly 200 years old, having been founded in the last year of the seventeenth century; and for a time a couple of clerks were sufficient to get through the business of each day. Soon after the accession of George III., the son of David Barclay, a linen draper in Cheapside, and a favourite of the king, entered the bank as partner. Mr. S. Bevan joined the firm in 1768, and Mr. J. H. Tritton followed eighteen years later. Thus, in the course of a century the business of the bank has grown from a comparatively small concern to one of colossal dimensions.

The motto which the late Mr. Bevan kept ever in view was:—

> Who builds for God and not for fame
> Marks not the marble with his name.

No one in his lifetime ever knew the number of his benefactions; it may be doubted whether he really knew them himself. He was born to a splendid inheritance; but when his heart was really turned to God, he realised his responsibility as one of the Lord's stewards to whom ample wealth had been entrusted. Hence he became a generous supporter, not only of home and foreign missions, but of numbers of other Christian or philanthropic enterprises to which he was a lifelong, as well as an open-handed, subscriber. At times a number of small gifts spread over a wide area would gladden many hearts, as, for example, when on his eightieth birthday he sent a five-pound note to each of the fifty disabled missionaries of the London City Mission; and on other occasions he has given £1 each to all of the missionaries' children. He may be said to have aided in founding that great evangelistic agency for the Christian reclamation of London; and he was certainly one of those who, by encouraging words and timely gifts, strengthened the heroic band, who, with Lord Ashley at their head, first established Ragged Schools. What he did in this department Mr. Kirk, the secretary of the Ragged School Union, could prove from the Society's records, while the City Mission Committee could bear similar testimony. In a resolution passed just after Mr. Bevan's death, the latter said:—

He joined the Committee in the year 1841, six years after the formation of the Society, but from its commencement he had given most valuable help in laying the foundations of the Institution. From that time to the day of his death he ever manifested the warmest interest in the work and the workers. Firmly attached to the principles on which the Mission was founded, and to the truths it was intended to maintain and to teach, he rejoiced in its growing influence and in its faithful adherence to the distinctive doctrines of grace. His large donations to the General Fund prove how near to his heart lay the best interests of London. In the annals of this Mission the name of Mr. R. C. L. Bevan must ever be remembered as a most munificent supporter of its work. By the missionaries he was deservedly honoured and beloved. It was his desire that every individual missionary should look upon him as a personal friend.

He had no idea of winning over the lapsed classes of the Metropolis by any methods which professed to be an improvement on the "old paths." Some well-meaning people perhaps there were who were disposed to think him somewhat too puritanical and uncompromising for such times as these; but Mr. Bevan himself did not think that he was more narrow than the New Testament. As the vicar of Christ Church, Barnet, says, "In matters of principle he was like a rock. No one could imagine the possibility of his swerving in the slightest measure from that course which his judgment and conscience pointed out as the path of rectitude." Mr. Bevan was especially the friend of the clergy of the evangelical section of the Church of England; and the vicar of the Smithfield Martyrs' Church, Clerkenwell, strikes a somewhat doleful note when he writes, "We are losing these old friends one by one, and do not get young ones in their mantles."

Mr. Cheyne Brady writes to us:—

The notices I have hitherto seen of my old friend Mr. Bevan have referred to his wealth and charities. I hope you will speak of his life. I saw him often, and found him a truly spiritual Christian. He attended the Bible-reading in my house for years, as often as his health permitted, and was always ready to take part, especially enforcing foundation truths. He has written a very interesting book on Scripture difficulties. Erroneous doctrine he combated unflinchingly, and was, indeed, a valiant defender of the truth. He will be greatly missed at Cannes. His advice and counsel were always at the service of the Lord's servants.

Mr. Bevan will thus long be remembered both for what he was and for what he did; and those who witnessed the remarkable gathering of representative persons who assembled at Trent Park on the occasion of the funeral on July 26, must have felt grateful that such a man has left behind him, not only those who revere his memory, but those who will carry on his work.

Carlisle Convention.

MANY Christians in this Border city have been for some weeks past looking forward to this their fourth annual réunion. Prayer meetings have been held on successive Friday evenings to seek guidance in preparing and blessing in carrying out the arrangements of the Conference. On Sunday last evangelistic addresses were delivered in the Drill Hall (in which all the meetings are being held) by Mr. G. E. Morgan, and on Monday evening a preliminary meeting was held, when the Convention proper may be said to have commenced. This meeting was conducted under the presidency of Mr. Robert Wilson, without whom the Conference would indeed seem incomplete.

After prayer and some introductory remarks from the chairman, Dr. WHITE spoke some searching words upon Luke xxii. 61. What would be the result if Christ were to look into the hearts of those who have come to this Convention? Would they, like Peter, go out and weep? Maybe, after last Convention many went forth, saying, "I will follow the Master whithersoever He goeth." But have the circumstances of our daily life caused any to "follow afar off"? or even to deny the Saviour? Have any slept when they should have been watching lest they enter into temptation? If so, may this Convention bring such to Peter's subsequent experience when he said, "Lord, Thou knowest all things; Thou knowest that I love Thee."

Rev. S. A. SELWYN followed with some very practical thoughts deduced from the words of Jehu in 2 Kings x. 15. Passing over briefly the circumstances of the context, Mr. Selwyn urged that his hearers should consider the words as addressed to themselves by God, the condition of blessing being that the heart should be right with Him. This gathering formed a fitting prelude to the proceedings of the Conference.

We hope next week to give notes of subsequent addresses delivered by Revs. E. W. Moore, Gelson Gregson, W. S. Standen, and other speakers.

RUSSIA: ITS PEOPLES, PALACES, AND PRISONS.—Mr. Charles Cook is prepared to lecture on the above subject, illustrated with the national costumes of Russia and dissolving views, for the benefit of the prisoners in Russia who are without the Word of God. For vacant dates apply to Mr. Cook, at Hyde Park Hall, London, W.

MR. GEORGE BLAIKLOCK has just returned from his tour round the world, in the course of which he addressed meetings in Australia, New Zealand, the United States, and Canada. Mr. Blaiklock is about to commence his winter's campaign. Applications for vacant days may be addressed to him, care of Mr. J. T. Rae, National Temperance League, 33, Paternoster-row, E.C.

A DYING MAN'S GREAT NEED.

A correspondent residing in a southern county writes:—

A FEW WEEKS ago a man fell from a tree in our garden, whilst picking walnuts. His spine was fractured, and from the first moment he was quite conscious, although he said he was "done for." He began at once to pray earnestly that it would please God to forgive him all his sins. This seemed his one anxiety. The following account has been given me by the clergyman of the parish, who has been indefatigable in his ministrations to the poor man, who leaves a widow and six children:—

"It would not be possible to find a man who conducted himself with greater propriety than C. S—— as a father and husband. As a Churchman he was regular, devout; as a neighbour he was respected by all who knew him; as a workman he was trusted by those who employed him. Such was the character of this man, and if a good life can give peace at the last, C. S—— was one who might have looked without apprehension to the future. But it was not so. For many days before his death I saw him morning and evening. He was, above all things, open and unreserved. He told me plainly that he had been a great sinner, and though he strove and prayed he could not get rid of the burden of sin.

"I asked him if there was anything he was aware of in his life—any injury inflicted, any debt unpaid, anyone unforgiven, &c., that might disturb his conscience. He said, 'No; nothing.' I then asked him if he felt that God had dealt hardly with him with reference to his accident. He said, 'Oh, no; I feel I have acted hard to God in not testifying for Him as I should. He has been very good to me, and I have done nothing for Him.'

"For several days after this he told me the load was still there, but one morning he said: 'I feel more comfortable, more hope. I can only wait and trust.' In his case the work of the Holy Spirit was very gradual, but continuous. Peace came at the last, and joy at the very end. 'I shall soon be at rest,' he said, 'singing in glory.' So he passed away. In a long ministerial experience, I never knew a case illustrating more clearly that what is called a good life gives no comfort on a dying bed, and that the regret, I may say shame, of a man truly converted, and who feels that he is going home to rest, is that during life he did not bear testimony to the love of Jesus Christ, that he was not a living epistle known and read of all men."

As C. S.'s great sorrow was that he had not done any work for God, I sincerely hope that this account may be blessed to some dumb Christians, and that, though dead, C. S. may yet speak, and find hereafter that he has not a starless crown. At one of the early prayer-meetings at the recent Keswick Convention, prayer was requested that C. S. might have peace and joy; and perhaps some of your readers will see that their prayers have been answered.

MONTE CARLO AND THE RIVIERA.—We have received from Major A. S. D. Colquhoun a very interesting report of work done by himself and Mrs. Colquhoun during 1889-90 on the Italian Riviera and at Monte Carlo. With regard to the latter, he says that, having worked, in conjunction with Signor Girardi, during the winter, among the Italian workmen, in spite of many difficulties, they were encouraged by the goodwill of the people to take in the beginning of May a larger and more suitable room. The meetings, though often disturbed, were not actually interrupted. The proprietor had been instigated to take the building away from them, but they held their ground. Now a more central and more expensive place has been taken. The meetings hitherto have been in Italian; by and by there may be opportunity for services in French. There are also openings for work in Mentone, where a mission for the numerous Italian population, and work among women and girls, are much needed. The receipts and expenditure for the year, June 15, 1889, to July 3, 1890, have been about £165.

AT STOCKTON RACES.

The race-week at Stockton, with its tumultuous tide of pleasure-seekers, necessitates an augmented force of railway officials and policemen, and splendid work has been done by this body of men this year in maintaining order. These strangers come generally from comfortable homes, for it is a pleasantly noticeable fact that, as a class, the railway employés have homes of which they and this country may reasonably be proud, and in some Christian hearts in Stockton "liberal things" were being "devised" concerning them. "These strangers," so it was reasoned, "guard our comforts; should we not minister to theirs?" So, by one well-known friend of railway officials, two of these men were invited for the night, and comfortable sleeping accommodation, preceded by supper and the hallowed exercises of family prayer, was provided.

On the Wednesday of the race-week, by the same lady, the inspector and a detachment of his men were invited to an early tea, and a large number were spared from duty for half an hour for this most welcome refreshment. Christian friends were invited to meet them, and to speak some wise welcoming words as they sat round the tables, which were not only laden with hospitable provisions for the honoured guests, but were made brilliant by the contents of a hamper of flowers, kindly sent by one of the county families, and beautifully arranged for the occasion. Only half an hour, quickly passing, but leaving in many hearts a life-long memory of Christian kindness. M. C. F.

BIBLE-WOMEN IN BRIGHTON.

I wish to enlist the efforts of Christian friends on behalf of the Brighton Bible-women's Mission. Very few, even of those who know that a work of this kind is going on in Brighton, are aware that it commenced nearly at the same time when Mrs. Ranyard first set on foot the Bible-women's work in London; yet it was perfectly independent of her enterprise. Two or three lady Christian workers in Brighton had been led to take an interest in some neglected fishermen's children, and to open a school on the beach for them. This went on for a time, and then they found that the girls, who were the chief object of their attention, were so constantly detained at home to help their mothers that regular attendance could not be secured.

It occurred to them to look out for a female missionary to visit the girls and mothers in their homes. A suitable agent was found, and the Bible-women's work in Brighton was inaugurated. The field opened more widely, more places were found in need of visits, and more women must be called to work for them. Friends joined the little band, districts were mapped out, and in time there were eight women, earnest and active Christians, all at work in the worst and most wretched parts of the town.

For thirty years the agency has worked well, and with every evidence of blessing. But at present the difficulties of the work are great. The number of Bible-women is only five, and so many old friends are removed by death or absence that more help is greatly needed. There would be ample room for many more than the original eight. The need is even far greater than it was. Besides the increase of population, the great increase of Ritualistic practice and preaching has lessened the opportunities of Gospel teaching among the poor, and the call for a faithful Bible-woman's work is greater than it has ever been. They can fill a blank which the most devoted pastor, evangelist, or Scripture-reader cannot meet. Having long supported one of the Bible-women, I have had opportunities of personally knowing the value of the agents, and can bear witness to their excellence and efficiency. If visitors to Brighton who are interested in the spread of simple Gospel Christianity would give a little help, more agents could be engaged, and districts now neglected might be supplied. A sum of £40 a year supports one Bible-woman.

Subscriptions, &c., would be gladly received by Miss Hornbuckle, 3, Alexandra-villas, and Mrs. F. B. Rew, 5, Codrington-place, Brighton.

ON THE BORDERS OF ZULULAND.

Dear Sir,—It may interest those of your readers who have been stirred by Rev. J. H. Horsburgh's paper, "Methods of Missionary Work," which appeared in The Christian of September 5, to hear that in South Africa some Swedish missionaries are working on the lines he has indicated, with every promise of blessing and success.

They have bought a farm on the borders of Zululand, quite in the wilds, surrounded by kraals, inhabited by natives in utter heathen darkness. One of them writes:—"This will be an Evangelists' Home, where they may stay and rest after itinerating. It will also afford to those converted the opportunity to learn to read, and receive a practical training as preachers." My correspondent, with another, started on a tour in July, and says:—"Our purpose is to go along the coast of Zululand, to the north end, and back over the high lands, but God may change this plan. It may take us four or five months. Pray for us, our dependence is on Him alone. We take no food to speak of, but shall have to take what we can get from the natives. No tent to live in, but shall have to live with them in their huts. A Zulu goes with us, one who has been led to Christ through the Mission. He shows signs of being truly converted, and I believe is one whom the Lord may use to carry the Gospel to others. We shall see on the tour what he proves. Pray for him and us."

The sisters who evangelise spend two or three days in each of the kraals, returning at intervals to the Evangelists' Home. What this means, and the self-denial involved, can be understood only by those who have seen the beehive huts and the wholly uncivilised condition of the people.

I may add that these devoted missionaries have no stated incomes. They do not make their wants known to God's people, but seem to have implicit confidence in God Himself.—Yours sincerely, M. S. Osborn.

MR. JOHN WOOD (of the Evangelisation Society) is at present conducting a twenty-two-days mission at the Grove-street Institute, Glasgow. The mission commenced on Sunday, 31st ult., and the meetings are steadily growing both in numbers and interest. The workers are much cheered, for "the word" has been with "signs following." All feel deeply grateful for Mr. Wood's faithful and earnest expositions of Gospel truth. Several have remained for conversation and prayer, and have evidenced their interest by bringing others to the meetings. C. J. Mitchell, Sec.

MISSIONARIES WANTED.—Within the past fortnight applications have been made to the Missionary Bureau for more than thirty missionaries. Ten young men are wanted to be trained for mission work in Ireland, four unmarried men as teachers in a large mission school in Singapore, four men and two ladies for work in Ceylon, four men for the central provinces of India, six unmarried men for Western China, two ladies for Syria, one with a knowledge of medicine; two Arabic-speaking missionaries for Port Said, a married teacher as head master of a school in South India, and one unmarried man to be the first representative in China of a Christian Association at home. Early applications for these posts should be sent, with full particulars, to Mr. R. Caldwell, 186, Aldersgate-street, London.

TRUST AND WAIT.

Trust—and wait God's time appointed.
Let Him lead thee all the way.
Thou must be by God anointed;
As He bids thee, go or stay.

Seek not, strive not, He will guide thee
In the way which thou shouldst go.
He doth ever walk beside thee,
And the way will surely show.

Trust Him always—trust Him wholly—
Look not to thyself at all.
If thou seek his pleasure solely
He will let no ill befall.

It may be thy work lies near thee,
Close beside thee day by day.
Some, perchance, whose lives are dreary,
Need thy help upon the way.

It may be no noble mission
Such as thou hast dreamed were thine;
It may be thy sole commission
In a narrow sphere to shine.

He will teach thee. Only follow
Though the light at times be dim.
Thou hast left earth's joys so hollow,
Left them all to follow Him.

Trust Him, then. God knows no hurry,
For His ways are not as ours.
Wherefore shouldst thou fear or worry?
He will use thy utmost powers.

Not perchance the way man chooseth,
Nor the way that thou hast planned;
But of all He nothing loseth
Which is yielded to his hand.

A NEW AFRICAN MISSION.

About three years ago the people of Qua Iboe, South West Africa, applied for a Christian teacher, and Mr. Samuel Bill, then a student at the East London Institute, volunteered to go. He went out with the expectation of making the Mission self-supporting, by means of carrying on honourable trade. This he soon found to be out of the question, as ardent spirits is firmly established as an article of barter. Mr. Bill resolved to remain, and wrote to some friends in Belfast stating his position. It was at once resolved to support God's servant, and so a small missionary society was formed for this purpose. A companion in labour, Mr. Archibald Baillie, joined Mr. Bill two years ago, and already they have seen fruit for their labour. A woman and a boy were their firstfruits, baptized rather more than a year ago. Since then ten have been added to the number, and there are more to follow.

Mr. Bill is at present in this country for a short rest, and has with him a bright African boy. The prayers of the Lord's children are asked for the Qua Iboe converts, that they may be kept amid their temptations. Mr. James Ferguson, 63, Hornby-street, Belfast, is hon. secretary of the Mission. We are truly thankful that a band of young Irishmen have taken up this work for Africa. May they be greatly blessed in it. H. M.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.—The usual Monthly Workers' Meeting was held at the Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway, E., on Friday last. The hon. secretary, Mr. J. T. Isaac, gave a very encouraging account of the work during the past month. Prayer was asked for Mr. F. S. Arnot, who has been summoned before the Governor of Benguella, on a charge of speaking against the Portuguese. Rev. John Wilkinson gave an address on 1 Cor. vi. 20. In the course of his address he gave very many interesting particulars of the work amongst the Jews. A party of missionaries about to leave for China in connection with the C.I.M. were also present, and two of them briefly addressed the meeting.

MORE ABOUT "OUR GIRLS."

Do you love girls? I do! Nor has their interest for me grown less now that I have learned how sad are the scrapes, how pitiful the plights, how dreadful the dangers they fall into in the great city. There are hundreds of girls on the very verge of ruin—social and spiritual—shall not the loving hands of Christian women be stretched to their aid? May I tell you a few of the actual cases that have lately come before us at the Girls' Preventive Home, Hertford-place, Globe-road, London, E.?

STRANDED IN LONDON.

Edith was a wild, high-spirited girl, just verging on seventeen, and brought up in the country by an aunt. She would not be controlled, so broke away from all home restraint, determined to make her fortune in the great city of London. In ten days she was found in one of the back streets of East London, penniless and forlorn, her only resting-place some straw in the corner of an upper room in a vile lodging-house, where she was surrounded by the lowest specimens of humanity. One of God's people found her and brought her here to the Girls' Preventive Home, where she remained in training for some months, was gently taught obedience and industry which were hard lessons for her—very—for patience she had none, and often was nigh despair; yet now, see her! out in service earning an honest living, prettier than ever, delighting her kind mistress, and serving God. To Him be the praise!

Another jewel was found in a stable loft, her home consisting of one room, occupied by step-father, mother, and two big lads (as well as herself).

"I WANTS TO BE GOOD,"

said a dear lass to me two days ago. "If I be's a good girl while I'm in the Home, will you get me a situation as far away as possible from my parents, for they are so wicked, and I don't want to be like them, I wants to be good?"

WHAT A CHANGE!

One of our Christian girls unexpectedly met her drunken father, whom she had not seen for a year and hardly recognised him, so bloated was he from the effects of drink. The man expressed great delight at the happy, prosperous look of his daughter (who, when he deserted her, was in rags and tatters) now—see what a change! "But, father," said the girl, "Jesus is able and willing to do for you what he has done for me. Won't you come to Jesus, father? He could save you yet." The tears rolled down the drunkard's face. Shall we meet him in Heaven, I wonder?

Another story is that of one girl out of five sisters saved from life on the streets. Queenie is now in the house of a lady who writes most gratefully of her faithful services.

COME AND SEE.

Would you know more of our girls and see the encouraging letters we are constantly receiving from those now out in the battle-field of life? Then come and spend a day with us—see the Home, see the girls themselves; and learn for yourselves what such work means.

During the last twelve months over 120 girls, all in need of a helping hand, all helpless, if left to themselves, all in grave danger, have passed through our Home. Each of these has involved care and cost in training and keep, as well as outfit for placing in situations, and loving oversight when sent out.

The burden of this work falls almost entirely on one honoured servant of God—but I write to ask you to help, if ever so little, either with material, new or old, for clothing the girls—or money for boots and food. Give as the Lord enables you. And will you also help us to keep open the door of the little House of Rest in Epping Forest for our sick and weary ones?

MISS MARY L. OKELL.

THE SOUDAN MISSION.

THE monthly leaflet of the Soudan Mission (C.M.S.) sketches operations during May. Dr. Harford-Battersby has been doing good work among the Gbebe people. Prayer has accompanied the various acts of faith, and God has given answers which have caused great astonishment among the heathen. The Christian congregation at Lokoja has been reduced to order, and it is hoped that its testimony will be more effective than hitherto.

A smaller building has been made the headquarters of the Mission; one consideration which rendered this needful being the insatiable curiosity excited in the minds of the natives at the comparative splendour of the place which was first utilised. Three young well-educated Hausas, who had been previously inquiring as to the way of salvation, visited the Mission on May 28. Mr. Wilmot Brooke thus describes the event:—

"They said they had no fixed abode, but wandered over the whole of North Africa, and had visited Egypt, Tripoli, Tunis, and had even been to Rome. They went to business as soon as they had sat down. 'We have come for you to read the Gospel to us, and teach us the way of life. We are not children, we are men; we mean what we say. Whatever you tell us we will do.' The reply to this was obvious, to a similar case of the young man, that they should love the Lord their God with all their heart, and their neighbour as themselves. Their leader promptly replied as the young man of old, 'That is just what I do.' Still following out the parallel, we thought of what would probably be to them a most disagreeable duty, and said, 'Then will you come with us and help us to tend the neglected poor of the town?' 'Certainly,' was the prompt and rather surprising reply; 'we told you at the outset we would do whatever you told us was the way of life. Shall we start at once?' This showed us at the outset that they were very much in earnest about their inquiries; which we came to see more and more as day by day they continued to come, having yielded the point that their own past lives came short of the heavenly standard, and continued to listen to the explanation of the way of salvation. Everything written out for them in Hausa and Arabic character, the Lord's Prayer, verses of Scripture, or epitomes of our conversations, they have taken down to the town and had copied out by Nupe and Hausa mallams (scribes, in the Jewish sense), themselves explaining it as it had been explained to them, and inviting others to come and hear with them. Certainly God has marvellously prepared these countries for the rapid spread of the Gospel in a very short time. It is almost impossible not to feel that if we see no baptisms of Moslems within the year, the fault will lie in our own lack of spiritual power, and not in their circumstances."

ON THE LINES OF CHRIST'S OWN WORDS

MR. & MRS. J. S. HARRISON have completed a Gospel mission at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. For seven weeks our brother's preaching and the sweet song by Mrs. Harrison have been listened to by thousands. Not a night has passed during the whole of the mission without some coming forward desiring to be prayed with and spoken to about their eternal welfare. On the last night the body of the hall was filled with those who had been brought to the Saviour, and those who had received blessing under Mr. Harrison's preaching.

A Model Undenominational Mission.

FROM a very touching "statement and appeal," itself a model for terseness and tenderness, we extract as follows, and heartily commend the work described, wishing it might be reproduced in every village where the need is the same:—

Four and a half years ago, our beloved mother, Mrs. Godfrey, commenced a work for God in this village. At that time the place was practically destitute of spiritual provision. Giving her house as a meeting-place, Mrs. Godfrey laboured zealously and successfully for just three years, and was then called to her reward. Meanwhile, her son, having relinquished business, and entered on a course of preparatfon for the Christian ministry, had come to share her home and work. The help thus given was owned of God, and the cause continued to grow.

From the first, the work was conducted on strictly evangelical and unsectarian lines. We endeavoured (having regard to the smallness of the village, and the impossibility of each denomination worshipping apart) to form a basis wide enough to embrace all true believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, from whatever previous associations they had come.

Our effort has so far succeeded. Our little community, most heterogeneous in its antecedents, is most homogeneous in its present character, and a happy, though humble, sample of Christian unity and love.

We admit to our membership, and to the Lord's Table, all who profess faith in Christ as their Substitute and Saviour. Our shibboleth, if any, is this: "We have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins." That is passport enough to our innermost communion; but in our teaching and preaching we strive to declare the whole counsel of God, to shun no truth which we find revealed, and to urge complete compliance with Divine commands. The main outlines of our doctrine, now and hereafter, will be sufficiently defined when we say that we and our present helpers hail from Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College, and that our future ministry will be supplied from the same source.

Four days before our dear mother's death, at the last meeting she attended, a fund was started to provide a separate and suitable building in which to continue and extend the work, and the contributions were placed into her then dying hands. The initial transaction of that night, solemn and suggestive as it well could be, was rightly regarded by the contributors as a kind of covenant with the dear departed one to realise, if possible, her design and desire. The promise thus given has so far been faithfully fulfilled, and in little more than a year over £100 has been raised. Of this sum, £70 has been applied to the purchase of a freehold site unequalled for position.

The estimated cost of a perfectly plain, but substantial, brick building, with fittings, will bring the total outlay to considerably over £300. Friends, help us. We are bold to ask it, for our work is essentially a labour of love. It brings us no jot of advantage, save a host of cares, and a constant opportunity for the liberal expenditure of effort, time, and money. Still we love it. God has blessed us in it, to it, by it. We continue to prosecute it for his sake, for our beloved mother's sake, and for the people's sake; and in the name of each we ask you to co-operate with us in our present endeavour to avert a deplorable catastrophe, and to establish this hopeful and much-needed cause upon a sure and satisfactory foundation. W. S. GODFREY.

REV. JOHN McNEILL, though he is "out of collar," still manages to combine some earnest work with his holiday. He seems to have a good share of the true apostolic spirit: "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel." Last Sunday he preached in the open air at Heriot, in the South of Scotland, to about a thousand country folk, many of whom had come long distances to hear him. The sermon was an hour long, and, judging from the newspaper account, embodied a most telling Gospel appeal, founded on the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian bondage. Mr. McNeill spoke on Tuesday evening at the Y.M.C.A. Conference in Aberdeen. Next week we hope to report his more striking utterances there.

THE CHURCH TO JOIN.—One that has got a man for a preacher, and knows something about men.—One that has a preacher who knows God, and is known more in heaven than in the newspapers.—One that has a week-night prayer-meeting which has life, spirit, and power.—One where the congregation can have part in the singing.—One where the rich and poor meet as one in one common Lord.—One where they stick to the old doctrines, and preach the Gospel both of law and love.—One where they talk the preacher up instead of down.—One where they don't wait until heaven is reached to get acquainted.—One where they have a good Sunday-school, young people's society, and give to missions.—One where they expect everybody to give and to keep at it.—One where every member can take some part and do good as well as get good.—F. C. Monthly.

THE SOURCE OF TRUE KNOWLEDGE.

I BELIEVE that if we all could be freed from undue attachment to great names and favourite authors, and apply ourselves more diligently to draw the water of life from the pure fountain of the Scripture, our progress in Divine knowledge would be more speedy and more certain.—John Newton.

TRUST IN GOD.

Beware of unbelief, and do not suspect the Lord's kindness; but seek Him, and hope in Him, and expect all good things from Him, assuring thyself that neither thy hope nor thy prayer, nor a single sigh will be lost. The Lord supplieth all thy wants, and leaveth thee nothing to be desired but Himself.—Bogatzky.

CONSCIENCE.

Conscience is either the best friend on earth or the greatest enemy on earth. And man had better have all the world against him than have his conscience against him; and if all the world be against a man, yet if his conscience be for him, if his conscience befriend him, it will enable him to bear up with comfort.—Samuel Slater.

FAITH AND WORKS.

If faith produce no works, I see
That faith is not a living tree.
Thus faith and works together grow;
No separate life they e'er can know—
They're soul and body, hand and heart.
What God hath joined let no man part.

More.

"WHEN THE SON OF MAN COMETH, SHALL HE FIND FAITH ON THE EARTH?"

In these easy-going days, the majority of "those who profess and call themselves Christians," being wholly destitute of the enthusiasm of faith, are helpless when confronted by the dogmatism of unbelief. It is a day of opinions, not of faith, and wide-spread apostasy is the natural result. But Christianity is eternal, because it is Divine.

SCEPTICISM AND DOUBT.

The jaunty and superficial scepticism of the day can claim but a distant kinship with the earnest doubts of men who recognise the gravity of a crisis, which, as has been justly said, "No one but a fanatic of Materialism can see without the most serious misgiving." Some such thoughts as these must have inspired that articulate sigh in the poetry of Matthew Arnold—words of exquisite sadness and beauty—

The sea of Faith
Was once, too, at the full, and round earth's shore
Lay like the folds of a bright girdle furl'd;
But now I only hear
Its melancholy, long, withdrawing roar."

—A Doubter's Doubts about Science and Religion. (Kegan Paul.)

GOD'S PURE WORD.

I have for many years rejected as dung the figments of the poets, and the histories of the heathens, and the study of secular letters; and have converted the whole intention of my mind to the Word of God and the Divine things contained therein.—Berno (a learned man), 1008.

THE STUDY OF SCRIPTURE.

When I, being yet a youth, was exercised in all sorts of learning, I can truly say that I did not profit less than the rest of my equals; but when I betook myself to the study of the Holy Scriptures, then the things which I had before sucked in or learned from philosophers and divines did procure me so much trouble, that being then moved by the authority of the Scriptures, I judged that all those things were to be cast away and counted as dung, and that the true mind of God was only to be received from his pure and simple Word. Therefore I began humbly to entreat the Lord that He would vouchsafe me his own light. By which means it shortly came to pass that the reading of the Holy Scriptures did much delight and please me; and they being nakedly and alone propounded, did flow unto me with much more ease than if I had read them divided and distracted with variety of comments.—Zuinglius, Reformer.

WORK IN SINGAPORE.

DEAR SIR,—English Christians ought to know how utterly they have neglected the thirty-five millions of the Malay race who inhabit the Eastern Archipelago. From 1848 till 1876 an independent missionary, Mr. Keasberry, worked among the Malays at Singapore at his own charges; and there is now one representative of the "Brethren" working in Province Wellesley. The S.P.G. have a mission to the Dyaks in Borneo, who are a kindred race, and there are quite a number of missionaries in Singapore working among the Chinese immigrants. Why should the Malays be left in the darkness of Mohammedanism?

Thank God, America is not asleep if England is. The Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church established a mission to the Chinese of Singapore some five or six years ago, and is now preparing to commence work among the Malays in real earnest. A few months ago a most accomplished young German refused a professorship at the Boston University in order to join this mission for Malay work. He has already been some time in Singapore learning the language. Early next month my wife and I propose to sail for Singapore with the same object, and as I have already lived there for two and a half years, and have learnt the Malay language, I shall be ready to commence work at once. We have also another German in view for the Malay work, and as soon as he is sent out it is proposed that the two German preachers should open a new-mission station in Borneo.

The main strength, however, of our Malaysian Mission has hitherto been devoted to Chinese work, and our Anglo-Chinese school is perhaps the most important of our agencies commenced some four or five years ago. This school has grown with such rapidity that it now ranks with the Government High School, and numbers between 300 and 400 scholars.

This school is a most important factor in our work, but just at this time we are in difficulty owing to the very abundance of the success which God has given us. Our missionaries are being drafted off into other spheres of work. What are we to do for school teachers? We invite some of the young men of England to come and help us. If we can get men experienced in teaching, all the better; but, most of all, we want thorough-going Christians, whose object will be to serve God. There is a grand chance to work for Christ both in and out of school among the boys. Surely there are godly young men in England well qualified to be principal of the school, if need be, and if the right man can be found?

We have about 20 Chinese boys as boarders, and we are greatly encouraged by the work that is going on among them. Our medical missionary, Dr. West, has opened a street dispensary, and in the past year has treated over a thousand cases. With a Chinese helper he has preached the gospel to all these and their friends. This work has been done in his leisure hours after a hard day's teaching, and it has been much owned of God.

My object in writing this letter is, first, to bring a neglected race to the notice of the Christian people of England; it may be that God will lay it upon the hearts of some to carry the gospel to the Malays or to assist us in this pioneer work. Secondly, I hope that qualified young men will offer themselves for the service of God in our school. I shall be very glad to hear from any who may believe that God would have them engage in this work.—Yours faithfully,

W. G. SHELLABEAR,
Missionary, Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Temperance Cause.

The Temperance Worker for September contains a good portrait of Mr. John Hilton, with a brief sketch of his temperance career, and a number of his poetical productions.

In connection with the Docker's Union, London, there is a flourishing temperance society. Of 170 branch secretaries, more than 130 are abstainers, and in many of the branches every member is a pledged teetotaler.

The Liverpool licensing court declined to receive memorials against the drink traffic, but the case of the Liverpool Vigilance Committee was well put to the bench by Mr. Alexander Guthrie (son of the late Rev. Dr. Guthrie), on behalf of an influential deputation present.

The chief constable of Leeds, at the Brewster Sessions, reported an increase of drunkenness. A licence was granted to the Leeds Cricket, Football, and Athletic Company, though opposed by the Leeds Temperance Society and the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

On Sunday week a Wesleyan temperance evangelist, Mr. G. F. Cook, preached in the parish church of St. Mark's, Barrow-in-Furness, the vicar of which is Rev. E. Sydney Savage, a son-in-law and former curate of Archdeacon Farrar. The service was simple, but impressive.

The Supreme Court of Michigan reversed the decision of the Bay county circuit court convicting a man for selling liquor on a scow. This decision throws all river and lake towns open to the ravages of floating saloons. Like the Federal Supreme Court, this one calls the attention of the legislature to the necessity of remedying this state of things.

"No Christian man can go round the world without becoming a Prohibitionist," said Rev. W. B. Palmore, of Kansas City, on his return from a round-the-world trip. Everywhere the fearful drink curse confronted him, as it confronts our missionaries; everywhere he felt that Christ is dishonoured before the heathen by the conduct of Christian nations.

Recent inquiries show that in certain parts of Ulster methylated ether is still largely used in substitution for whisky. It is called into requisition frequently at balls, lodge-meetings, &c., when the public-houses are closed or the drink runs short. The intoxicating effects come on speedily, and pass away with equal rapidity, so that one can get drunk and sober several times in the course of an afternoon and evening.

Some excitement has been caused amongst lincensed victuallers of West Somerset by the refusal of the Bridgewater magistrates to renew licences of "bound" houses. At the last meeting of the Bridgewater magistrates, one of them, Mr. Strangeways, said the occupants of "bound" houses were under such obligations to brewers that they could not carry our the provisions of the Licensing Act. The consideration of these cases was therefore adjourned.

The third International Temperance Congress was formally opened at the University, Christiania, on September 3. It is attended by 212 delegates, of whom 102 are from various foreign countries. The Gothenburg system was the subject of a long discussion, the prohibitionists making a vigorous attack on the system, which they regarded as a hindrance to the accomplishment of temperance objects. They demanded absolute prohibition. M. Graufelt, of Helsingfors, proposed the formation of a European Anti-Alcohol League.

On the afternoon of Sunday week a temperance sermon was preached in Manchester Cathedral by Canon Davenport Kelly. Canon Kelly, preaching from the words in Isaiah, "Liberty to the captive," said that the temperance question was a matter in which each one should be deeply interested, and from which no Christian could stand aloof. By careful training of the young, by discouraging the drinking customs of the day, by seeking for legislative enactments in favour of temperance, and by special rescue work—in those and other ways much good might be done.

SOUTHPORT.—Mr. James Albinson, of Manchester, has concluded a four days' mission at the Mission Hall, London-street, Southport. The meetings have been well attended, and whilst many Christians have been blessed and the workers stimulated, some souls stepped into the liberty of God.

TROUBLES IN MATABELELAND.

Dear Sir,—A friend sent me an extract from a letter printed in several of the daily papers, written by a gentleman in Matabeleland. As I am somewhat misrepresented therein, perhaps you will kindly find a corner for this letter. I enclose the extract:—

I am much concerned for the safety of a Mrs. Thomas, who lives all alone with three young children at a mission-house called Shiloh. Her husband is dead, and two of her sons have been murdered by the king's orders, one whilst in company with Captain Patterson, and the other trading on the Zambesi. I have it from her own mouth that such is the case; but as she is too poor and friendless to leave the country, and imagines, besides, that she is doing good to the heathen, and is in God's hands, the affair has been hushed up. I rode over to see the old lady two days ago, and found the windows barricaded because some natives had tried to break in and rob her of her trading goods. Her garden is an oasis in the desert, and, being supplied with water from a fountain in the rocks, grows oranges, bananas, figs, &c., in great profusion. Every month, then, the natives raid the lot, and the old lady simply says: "It's most provoking," and starts afresh. Such heroism is splendid, and, I think, most peculiar to the Anglo-Saxon race.

It is true that I was living alone with my three youngest children at my own home in Matabeleland. I have a large house and a splendid garden there. The king gave the fountain and valley to my husband fourteen years ago as a mission station. We spent hundreds of pounds in turning the wilderness into a beautiful farm. After my husband's death I continued to live there, as it was my home; all my money was invested in the country. I felt certain the Lord meant me to remain there. Three times I came down to civilised life, each time leaving one or two of my elder children, but Providence directed me to my much-loved home again, where I always received a hearty welcome from king and people.

The last time I went up, friends all entreated me not to go, as the people were excited about the gold-seekers, but I ventured up. After being there a year, the missionaries entreated me to leave, as there was likely to be a disturbance. I had to leave most reluctantly; I was hurried out; the king did not wish me to go—he was always very kind to me and protected me. It was not by his orders that my two step-sons were killed. Captain Patterson's party were poisoned by water (Morgan was interpreter); they went up to the Zambesi in a very dry season, and, after being without water for two days, drank some which had been poisoned by the Chañas. David, again, was trading at the Zambesi, and fell in a quarrel with his own servants. I am vexed that it should be said that I said they were killed by the king's orders. Owing to the Chartered Company, I have had to leave my house, ploughs, stool washing-machine, harmonium, furniture, books, &c., and now have to be dependent on my own children. Three are married; two boys, aged 18 and 15, are in Government service, and I have four still dependent on me. I have applied in vain for some compensation from the Company. It is a great sorrow to me having to leave the country, besides being a great loss.

I have no doubt that my steps are still being directed by a loving Providence, and I am very happy amongst my dear children; but I hope some day Matabeleland will be peaceful enough for me to return. The Matabele never made a raid of my garden. Occasionally a few starving people would help themselves to my mealies and to such fruit as was abundant; but I never knew a banana or any fruit that the king liked touched once in three months. I always sent him a bunch of bananas, which he much appreciated. There were hundreds of heathen around me, but I was safe. The chief man of the town nearest my house (three minutes' walk) told me that if any harm came to me the whole town would be killed. It was not because I was so poor and friendless that I did not leave the country, for I had my own waggon and oxen to start whenever I liked, but I could not see it my duty to throw away all my property when I had a family to care for. My sympathy is strong for the Matabele, and I am truly sorry the Company could not gain a footing in the country without bloodshed; it is but natural that they (the Matabele) should fight for their rights.

I am sorry to say that I have not received The Christian for many months. I hope the unknown friend who always forwarded the paper to me is not dead. Trusting that my numerous friends will remember me and the Matabele in their prayers, I am, yours truly, (Mrs.) C. H. Thomas.

AMONG SOLDIERS IN INDIA.

Rev. E. H. Burrows, Wesleyan chaplain, Poona, thus speaks of his work:—"We have two regiments stationed here, the 7th Fusiliers and the Worcesters. About 130 attend our services at Kirkee; some five miles away there is a detachment of artillery, and I go there every Sunday and Friday. There are regiments stationed at Ahmednugar, which is 99 miles from here; at Satara, which is 77 miles, and at Purander, 46 miles. To these I minister from time to time.

"The railway journeys are very slow; the average rate being 20 miles an hour. When I go to Ahmednugar for a week-night service, I leave here at 9 in the morning, wait two hours at Dhond Junction (when I sometimes give a service to the railway men) and arrive at 3.30. I leave again at 10 p.m. and get to Poona at 4.45 a.m.

"I visit the hospitals and the prisons; I meet with some very sad cases in these places, also some very joyous ones, for affection is one of the voices from the Father to call the prodigals home. You do not know the temptations to vice which the soldiers have here. Thank God for those who are kept by 'simply trusting every day.' It would do you good to be at our fellowship or prayer meetings, to hear the simple testimony and the fervent petitions of the soldiers. But I am not satisfied when I look upon the hundreds of dark faces that I meet. When I see the idol temples on every side, and when I hear the pitiful wailings of the devotees who try to propitiate their gods by cruel rites, my heart is well nigh breaking. Oh! if the Christians of England could only see and realise the heathenism of India, they would come over in hundreds to save this great people from idolatry, and bring them to the feet of the Lord Jesus Christ."

MOTHER'S DARLING.

Dear little treasure, baby mine,
Precious gift from the Giver Divine,
What a boundless wealth of love is thine;
Mother's darling.

What is she worth? her weight in gold?
Oh, more than that a thousand-fold,
For the blood of Jesus her value told;
Mother's darling.

Sweet baby eyes of azure blue,
Lips ever ready to crow and coo,
Loving and kissing her rightful due.
Mother's darling.

What will thy path be in life, my child,
Flower-bestrewn, or rugged and wild?
But baby only looked up and smiled.
Mother's darling.

For the Saviour had made a little nest
Safe and secure on his gentle breast,
And there for ever she'll sweetly rest;
Mother's darling.

Shall we grieve as she lies in that rest so sweet,
With no fear of storm-blast or scorching heat?
Ah! no; for in heaven we soon shall meet
Mother's darling.

LONDON YOUNG WOMEN.

Last year's work of the London Young Women's Christian Association is admirably described in a report, entitled "Looking Round." The ladies who have this cause at heart come by a knowledge of the hard facts of many a seamy social problem. Those who want to know what can be done for City young woman will do well to secure a copy of "Looking Round" (price 6d.), from the office of the Association, 17, Old Cavendish-street, W. We make a few extracts:—

"Another year's experience has shown us that in many cases the toiling hours of working girls are too long, and that the labour which girls have to engage in is unsuited to their tender years and delicate constitution; and so mind and body, kept in a monotonous round, become jaded and worn out before their time.

"But while in the present state of society there are such complex and conflicting elements, the Y.W.C.A. goes forward with its Christ-like work, to bring lightness and brightness into the lives of some of the toiling girls of London. By means of its varied departments it has benefited both the leisured and the toiling girl. The Time and Talents Department has gathered a membership of between 700 and 800 girls, who are willing to give help not alone to their own Association, but to any works of philanthropy and of charity which may apply for their aid.

"The Factory Helpers' Union has started several new Clubs and Evening Homes; has found an open door in some of our roughest factories, and has been the means of leading many a factory girl to a better life. The Travellers' Aid has continued its beneficial and watchful care at the railway-stations and docks. Many girls have been met and provided for through the station visitor. Many who otherwise would have found themselves stranded in London have been saved and helped. Some have been rescued from the peril of a false advertisement or a bad registry; foreign girls, speaking no English, have been helped and cheered. The Polytechnic Education Department has brought instruction within reach of nearly 2000 girls.

"The Teachers' Department has now seven centres in London alone, and centres forming in the provinces. All Board and voluntary school teachers may join. The aim of the Junior Department is to reach girls as they leave school, and bring them into touch with an association which provides for their intellectual, social, moral, and spiritual welfare. The Young Women's Branch of the Postal and Telegraph Christian Association has been affiliated, and is working very happily in the City and the north of London, as well as in many provincial towns, and it is confidently believed, will spread to all P.T.C.A. centres."

The report further states that a new start has been made in temperance work. It also says: "Hundreds of girls have to come to London for Civil Service Examinations, or dress-making and dress-cutting. Every country town business hand wants a few months in London, to 'finish off,' and what we want is to provide for this need, to gather them into our fold during their short stay in London, and to send them back again uncontaminated and pure to their country homes."

The Association has now 143 branches in London, with a total membership of 17,000. There are 40 Institutes, Evening Homes, and Boarding Houses, where girls and young women coming up from the country are lodged and cared for at a very small charge, giving them the comforts of a Christian home, and keeping them from the numberless temptations which beset them in London. "Looking Round" gives tabulated information of all the branches.

East-end Gospel Mission, Brunswick Hall, Brunswick-road, Poplar, E.—We are in sore need of help just now, not only to pay bills, but to carry on the many branches of our work.—George Fuller, Superintendent.

Letters to the Editor.

"MINISTERS AT THE PLAY."

SIR,—If space may be allowed for any more reference to the subject of "Ministers at the Play," a minister's daughter would like to say she is so glad her dear father never went, and trained her never to go, and she has never been, and by God's grace she never wishes to go. On the contrary, she wishes there were none who wished it either.

It is said of wisdom: "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." This has proved so abundantly true in the experience of the writer, that an intensely loving longing for others to prove it, all the world over, would lead her to urge this "more excellent way" whenever an opportunity presents itself. HAMPSTEAD.

[We have received several other letters for which we have no space. One correspondent writes: "I was a member of an amateur dramatic club until I read Mr. Archibald Brown's protest. By that booklet, under the blessing of God, I was made aware of the evils attending such things, especially to young Christians."—ED.]

WHAT CONSTITUTES SUCCESS?

DEAR SIR,—It is hardly possible to answer this question in the same manner to every worker. Our Master has sent out his servants on various kinds of work, "and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labour."

The success of the builder is a noble building that can abide the fire. The success of the shepherd is a well-guarded flock of sheep, fed on the green pastures. The success of the fisher is the fish that he has caught. The success of the teacher, the progress of his pupils. The sower succeeds when he has duly and carefully scattered the good seed in the appointed fields. The reaper succeeds as he "gathereth fruit unto life eternal."

One of the most important things for us to learn is the particular kind of work the Master would have us do. If all were shepherds, where were the fishing? If all were sowers, where the reaping? In the benighted heathen lands there is great need of those who will break up the stubborn ground and cast in the precious seed, and of them indeed it is often true "one soweth and another reapeth." But here in England the ground has been prepared for centuries, the seed has been sown, and the Master says, "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to the harvest."

In the harvest field the Master needs workers, and they who are content to sow or to work in the vineyard are not following the Master's directions: "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth (literally, cast out) labourers into his harvest." And, if we thus pray, surely we ourselves must go. Where are the white fields, where we may expect to reap? Chiefly where the "multitudes are scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd." Here "the harvest truly is plenteous but the labourers are few."

The harvest may be gathered in, in the church, the chapel, and the Sunday-school; but if we would see real success in the work in which labourers are most needed, we must go among those who are outside the folds. Walk down the streets of any of our large towns, ay, or small ones either, during the hours of evening service on a Sunday, and see if there are not sheep in England having no shepherd. They have a good knowledge of the Divine claims, have been to Sunday-school, and have read tracts, but they are not even in the outside fold of the Church of Christ. Pray for labourers in this harvest field, and "preach up the true character of the servants of Christ—reapers, and not sowers only."

In a little gathering of those who are invited in off the streets of a northern watering-place, never more than fifty present, with young men of no great ability as speakers, but where present conversion is the one thing aimed at and expected, the writer has seen such a series of conversions Sunday after Sunday as he has never seen or heard of elsewhere.

The reaper must have only one object—his whole soul must be in it, he must use sanctified common sense, and the tools that others have found useful should at least have a fair trial, and in dependence upon God he may confidently look for success, and rejoice with the joy of harvest.—Yours very truly, THOS. W. GLADSTONE.

Y.M.C.A., Southport.

CHRISTIAN PRIVILEGES IN DAILY BUSINESS.

DEAR SIR,—At a young men's society in the autumn a member will move that Christian principles are not compatible with commercial success. This I intend opposing, and am seeking such testimony as my Christian brethren can give as to its falseness. May I ask your readers who are Christians in their business to give me their experience? I should also be glad to receive any light on what the Bible says in the matter—observing that since Jesus came to save his people from their sins, He cannot intend them to sin in business, not even by the white lie or the arrogant speech.—Yours truly,

S. LESLIE PEWTRESS.

Hope Cottage, Durham-road, East Finchley, N.

REST ON THE RIVIERA.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me the privilege of making known to your many readers that I purpose taking a house at San Remo or Bordighera, as may seem best, to be a Home of Rest, where believers could spend a quiet winter in the beautiful climate of the Riviera, and have all the benefits of Christian intercourse and English home-life—with family prayers and Bible-readings. My wife would attend to the house while I looked after the Italian Missions, which have been established by me there for some years. We await responses to this before making final arrangements. Any desirous to join us will please communicate with me at 127, Portsdown-road, Maida Vale.

Anyone unable to travel alone would be taken charge of in England, and brought back if necessary. We purpose (D.V.) returning to Italy about October 1.—Yours truly,

E. C. NEWBERY, Evangelist.

ROMANISM.

DEAR SIR,—It is through reading your answer to the lady who discontinued taking THE CHRISTIAN because of "the intolerance shown in its pages towards the Roman Catholics" (June 13) that I have been moved to write a few lines.

I was a Roman Catholic for fifteen years, and I had been wrongly intended for the priesthood, but the Lord mercifully delivered me from the Babylonian captivity. Hence I naturally sympathise with those who, like yourself, in England, are engaged in exposing the crafty encroachments of Rome, and in duly reminding British Christians of the danger that attends them if the least concession is made to the Papists.

I have seen Roman Catholicism on the Continent and in the Spanish Colonies, as well as in England, and I confess that every day I am more thankful for having been brought so early to the knowledge of the blessed Gospel of Christ. How true the Italian proverb, Roma veduta, Roma perduta ("Rome known is Rome lost"), can only be fully realised by those who, like myself, in Italy or elsewhere, have been ensnared by her. Fight on, and spare not, brother! Let not the pusillanimous discourage you. The sheep cannot be indifferent in the presence of the wolf. Herewith I enclose a bit translated from La Luz, organ of the Spanish Reformed Church. I believe it would be of interest to your English readers.—Yours truly in Christ, F. DE P. CASTELLS.

Singapore, July 25.

TRANSLATION.

"In the 227th number of the organ of the Vatican, Voce della Verita, there appears the following statement:—

'We should here remark that the Catholic Church, whilst possessing the right to deny freedom of worship to people, and actually denying it as a principle (in tesi), does nevertheless admit to enjoy it by way of hypothetically granting it (come hipotesi). That is to say, in those countries where, through some lamentable cause, she is not recognised solely and exclusively as the State's religion, she claims and demands for herself that freedom which all the confessions enjoy, and she expects that by the pureness of both her dogmas and morals, little by little, all errors and vices may be vanquished.

'Notwithstanding that, in those countries where her supremacy has been established, by both the blood of the martyrs and by past theological contests, she rejects as a peaceful possessor all liberty of worship, as at once a contradiction to the truth and an attack on both her pre-existing rights and her indisputable primacy.'

"In the same way, but with a frankness akin to irony, the late editor of L'Univers, Mr. Veuillot, used to say to the Romanists:—'Whilst we are a minority, we demand tolerance because of your principles; but when we are a majority, we deny freedom because of our dogma.' And so, according to this rule, which indeed cannot be more simple, Rome carries on her operations of assault all round the world."—La Luz, May 15, 1890.

Obituary.

REV. ROBERT MAGUIRE, D.D.

THIS well-known evangelical clergyman, for many years rector of St. Olave's, Southwark, died last week, while staying at Eastbourne. Dr. Maguire was an accomplished scholar and a prolific writer on spiritual themes. Many of his works were in defence of Protestantism, and exposed the pretences of Ritualism, as well as indicating its mischievous tendencies. In an early issue we hope to publish his portrait and a sketch of his useful life.

MR. A. T. BOWSER.

Mr. Alfred T. Bowser, managing director of the Whittington Life Insurance Company, died rather suddenly on Sunday week, aged 72. He was for a long period on the council of the Baptist Union and the committee of the Missionary Society. In many other ways he rendered valued service to the cause of Christ. The Freeman says of him:—"He was wise in counsel and earnest in action, and will be long missed at our various committee meetings. He leaves sons and daughters to mourn the loss, all of whom, we believe, are actively engaged in Christian work in connection with our churches."

REV. DR. HASTINGS.

Rev. E. P. Hastings, D.D., the oldest American missionary in North Ceylon, died, on July 31, at an advanced age. Strong testimony has been borne to the service rendered by Dr. Hastings as principal of the Jaffna College at Batticotta, from the active duties of which he retired a year ago owing to the infirmities of old age. He was a very careful and exact teacher, much loved by his students, more than one-third of whom left the college, on the completion of their terms, as Christians and communicants. Mrs. Hastings is sister of ex-President Cleveland of America, and has been nearly thirty years engaged in the mission at Jaffna.

MRS. G. W. GILLINGS.

The beloved wife of Mr. G. W. Gillings, well known in the colony of Victoria for his abundant Christian services, passed away on July 16 at Geelong. It is over twenty years since Mr. and Mrs. Gillings were led out to the work of God in the southern colonies; many friends in England still remember them affectionately. They lived and laboured together, and many spiritual children will rise up and call them blessed. The closing three months of Mrs. Gillings' life was a period of acute sufferings with bitter trials. It was her earnest desire that God should be glorified, and she uttered no word of murmuring or complaint. Though the valley of death was dark, she was not forsaken. She glorified God in the agonies of dissolution, and her husband's report to his friends is that "through Christ Jesus she was victorious along the whole line."

GENERAL HATT NOBLE, we are requested to state, has not proceeded to Canada, as the arrangements were not practicable.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Evangelical addresses at Hurstpierpoint, Sussex, Oct. 12 to 25.——Three weeks' mission in Neyland, to be conducted by Mr. G. Greenwood, of the Evangelisation Society, to commence on Sept. 7.——A mission at Redlynch, Wilts., by Mr. Henry Murch, of the Evangelisation Society, commencing Sunday, Sept. 14.——Lord's-evening services from October to March next, in Kensington Town Hall, W.——Mr. Matthew Burnett, Australian evangelist, desires to return thanks to God for partially restoring his voice since his return to England. Mr. Burnett solicits the prayers of Christians that his voice may be fully restored, to enable him to speak for the Master at Whitehaven in October; that he may be anointed with Divine anointing, and be prepared for whatever work God may appoint him ere he returns to the Antipodes.

The Book World.

SEPTEMBER MAGAZINES.

The Friend of Missions. 1d. Partridge & Co. Dr. H. Martin Clark, of Amritsar, begins the story of two Afghan converts. The general contents are varied and stimulating.

St. Nicholas ought to be a prime favourite among the younger members of our households. Such a combination of literary and artistic talent is rarely placed at their disposal. The fooling is very cleverly done, though it occupies, perhaps, too large a proportion of the contents bill. (1s. T. Fisher Unwin.)

The Homiletic Magazine (1s.) is a mine of suggestion for preachers. Rev. W. J. Deane, M.A., continues to write on the Miracles of our Lord. Dr. Clement Clemance expounds Free Justification (Rom. iii. 21-31). The sermon of Rev. Aubrey L. Moore, M.A., on "The Faith of Abraham" is worth study, as are also the various homiletical outlines. (Nisbet.)

The Church Monthly (1d.) gives a portrait with brief sketch of Dr. W. Saumarez Smith, the new Bishop of Sydney. Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston points "The Lesson of the Salt" (Mark ix. 50); and Rev. Thomas Stevens supplies a description of Saffron Walden parish church, of which an illustration is given. (Office: 30 and 31, New Bridge-street, E.C.)

Babyhood. 6d. Office: 92 and 93, Fleet-street. This journal of nursery health, devoted to the diet, clothing, and care of children, maintains its highly useful character. The chief articles are on eye-strain, and manifestations of malaria. One lady gives "Hints for the Fretful Baby," and another, a Doctor of Medicine, contributes "Studies in Infant Psychology." The Mothers' Parliament is a practical and interesting feature.

The Preacher's Magazine. Those for whom it is specially intended cannot but find this a very useful periodical. A sermon by Rev. W. Cuff gives "The Picture of a True Christian"; and Rev. Mark Guy Pearse continues the "Life of Elijah," dwelling upon Jehu and Jezebel. Professor G. G. Findlay's paper on "The Study of the Bible" is very suggestive. The homiletical notes are a helpful department. (4d. C. H. Kelly.)

The Review of Reviews has this month reached the circulation of 90,000 copies, a sure proof of its wide-spreading and increasing popularity. We do not need to endorse all the views and opinions of its talented conductor in order to recognise the value of his periodical as a source of information on the passing topics of the time. Mr. Stead contributes an able character sketch of Lord Wolseley, while his summary of "the progress of the world" reflects the conclusions of his editorial mind.

The Homiletic Review. (1s.) Funk & Wagnalls. Professor Willis J. Beecher writes on "The Possible Federation of the Evangelical Protestant Churches"; Professor J. O. Murray on "The Study of the Classics by Ministers"; and Rev. W. H. Luckenbach on "The Decadence of Country Churches." There are many other thoughtful articles, also exegetical and expository notes. Dr. Talbot W. Chambers writes on Ps. lxviii., and Dr. Tryon Edwards on Eccles. xii. This is a very valuable monthly.

The Theological Monthly. (1s.) Rev. J. J. Lias continues "Wellhausen on the Pentateuch." The unreliable character of much that passes under the name of criticism is abundantly proved. Persons to whom the so-called "scientific method" has commended itself as plausible will find it here exposed and shown to be wanting in the characteristics of a safe and sound instrument of historical investigation. Dr. Weymouth contributes another learned article on the rendering into English of the Greek aorist and perfect. The details yield much information as to correct interpretation of the New Testament. (Nisbet & Co.)

The serial publications of the British and Foreign Bible Society are always well worth reading. The Reporter for this month contains "A Plea for the Bible Society," by the Bishop of Derry; "The Story of a Year's Bible Work in China," by C. Reinhardt; and "A Tour among the Villages of Morocco," by H. E. Mackintosh; as well as an account of Bible work in German East Africa, by Dr. R. N. Cust. The pages are admirably illustrated, as also are those of The Gleaner, the special object of which is to instruct the minds and enlist the hearts of the young in the work. (A halfpenny each. The Bible House, 146, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.)

The Free Church Monthly is one of the best and most instructive of all the Church organs. For fresh and varied information—home and foreign—as well as for helpful articles of a didactic order it would be hard to beat. (1d. T. Nelson & Sons.)

The London City Mission Magazine gives a long "In Memoriam" notice of the the late Mr. R. C. L. Bevan, "the oldest member of the Committee of the Mission, and the most liberal contributor to its funds." Work among Asiatics and Africans in London is admirably described.

The British Friend (6d.) has features of wide interest. An article on Edward Burrough mentions the remarkable fact that Bunyan, who wrote against the Quakers, owed his release from prison to the activity of the Friends in the cause of freedom of conscience. Religious questions and public morality are discussed in a generous spirit, and always from the standpoint of high principle. (Glasgow: J. G. Smeal, Crosshill-street.)

The Friend (6d.) gives prominence to the Madagascar question. It says: "The warm interest which British Christians have felt for so many years in the best welfare of the Malagasy tribes is still living and strong, and there are circumstances connected with the Anglo-French agreement which seem to imply that, ignorantly or thoughtlessly, a cruel blow has been given them by our Government." (E. Hicks, Jun., 14, Bishopsgate-street Without.)

The Christian Irishman should be read by all who have at heart the enlightenment of Roman Catholics in the simple Gospel. This month Rev. Thomas Connellan writes on "A Zeal for God, but not according to Knowledge." The various articles show a sound evangelical sense, a good acquaintance with history as bearing upon Popery, and a spirit calculated to attract and win Roman Catholic readers. (1d. Dublin: Mecredy & Kyle, 49, Middle Abbey-street.)

The Young Men's Christian Magazine is the organ of the Y.M.C.A.'s and Fellowship Unions of Scotland. This issue opens with a paper on "Christian Individuality," by W. Johnstone, B.L. Rev. W. M. Rankin, B.D., Bridgeton, writes on "Marcus Aurelius: an Incentive to Young Men." There is a graceful tribute to the high character of the late Mr. David Paton, of Alloa, an ardent supporter of Y.M.C.A. work. (1d. Glasgow: Christian Institute, 70, Bothwell-street.)

The City of London Association News is the representative journal of the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street. Its pages bear evidence of careful editing, the news being well digested, and the articles written to definite purpose. "What to do with our Boys" discusses a subject of pressing importance in cities and large towns. Junior sections of the Y.M.C.A. are advocated, and promise is made of a second article, setting forth a practical scheme. A new volume is begun with this number. Association members everywhere will find this monthly worth their attention. (1d. Office: 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

The Century has several articles of unusual interest. The great Yosemite region of the Far West is brilliantly described and splendidly illustrated. Among the more solid papers is one on "the social problem of Church unity"—the first of a special series on pressing social questions. The author has, we think, a clear-headed grasp of the social situation, with all its perils and possible pitfalls; but we are not convinced that his great panacea—one united Church of the United States—would necessarily solve the exigent problems of the time. Any earnest and serious attempt to grapple with these problems ought, however, to have a fair hearing, and we doubt not this will be accorded to Professor Shields, who here expounds his views. (1s. 4d. T. Fisher Unwin.)

The Expositor (1s. Hodder & Stoughton) has varied attractions. Professor Andrew Harper, B.D., of Ormond College, Melbourne, writes on his intimate friend, the late Professor Elmslie; and Mr. Arthur W. Hutton, M.A., contributes reminiscences of Cardinal Newman, of whom he says: "He has more than any one other man influenced my own life and career." Professor T. K. Cheyne presents a very suggestive exposition of Ps. lxviii.; Professor A. B. Bruce continues his articles on the Epistle to the Hebrews; and Principal Dykes writes grandly on "The Light of the World.' Professor Joseph Agar Beet examines the teaching of the Synoptic Gospels on the future punishment of sin; the facts are carefully adduced, and the argument dispassionately conducted. The finality of God's judgment sentence stands out very plainly in these studies.

The Young Men's Review (1d. Exeter Hall, W.C.) is filled with instructive matter, original and selected. Young men are invited to avail themselves of the agencies of the Y.M.C.A. during the winter months, which will soon be upon us. There are articles on "Hobbies" and "Thoroughness," and items of news from various parts.

The Gospel Magazine is a good number. The aged editor, Dr. Doudney, contributes articles and notes, spiritual in substance and vigorous in style. Mr. George Cowell writes on "The Feeble Folk and their Nests" (Prov. xxx. 26). The other contents are of a like type—evangelical and Protestant, encouraging to saints and enlightening to sinners. (6d. W. H. & L. Collingridge.)

Our Boys' Magazine. (1d.) Dr. Harford Battersby's "Some African Boys," is continued. Haileybury is "the great school" described this month. Edited by University men, this is a capital magazine for thoughtful boys.—Our Own Magazine (1d.) is full of stories and incidents such as young people will be the better for reading. We wish it an ever-increasing circulation. (13*a, Warwick-lane.*)

The Expository Times becomes stronger month by month. This issue has many valuable items, as well as articles worth preserving for reference. Rev. D. D. Forsyth, M.A., discusses "Preaching and Poetry"; and Rev. Dr. A. B. Grosart presents a study on "Christos and Ho Christos in the Septuagint." "Requests and Replies" is a feature which private students will do well to note. (3d. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark.)

Toilers of the Deep affords some idea of the importance of the work of The Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. The Mission superintendent (Mr. W. Grenfell) writes on the Smacksmen and Self-help; a mission surgeon (Mr. James Godding) describes Hospital Work on the North Sea in July; and Ada R. Habershon gives North Sea Pictures. Every page enforces the need for the Mission, and gives proof of the blessed character of its ministry. (3d. Office: Bridge House, 181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.)

The Church of Scotland Home and Foreign Mission Record. Here is much that is well worth reading. "Israel in Arabia," by Rev. J. Dobie, B.D., is specially interesting. The writer says: "I left Yemen with the impression that probably on no portion of the earth's surface does so favourable a field for Jewish missionary enterprise present itself as here. The son of Israel in Arabia Felix is not the sly, cunning, underhand, hard-hearted creature that we too frequently find him elsewhere, but ingenuous, frank, and very sympathetic, laboriously industrious, devoted to his family and his faith, and yet withal longing for some of that light and knowledge which, he freely admits, has made the Christian nations great and prosperous." (1d. Edinburgh: R. & R. Clark, 42, Hanover-street.)

All the World (3d.) is remarkably interesting There are illustrated articles on the work of the Salvation Army in many lands. "Mahlah" tells "A Tale of the Dark Continent"; Captain E. Sandeman writes: "Twenty-four Hours of Slumdom"; Colonel Pollard contributes "What I Saw in Ceylon"; and S. F. Smith concludes the serial, "A High School Boy, and what became of Him." The pages are attractive and readable throughout. The Deliverer (1d.), which is a record of Salvation Army rescue work, emphasises a great need, and describes a blessed department of service. Mrs. Bramwell Booth states that a policeman has written to her rejoicing in having been the means of helping forty fallen women to a life of virtue. (S.A. Printing Works, 98 and 100, Clerkenwell-road, E.C.)

The King's Own opens with an article showing (as opposed to the position of the editor of "Lux Mundi") that the life and work of the Church of Christ are bound up with the Inspired Book. The most useful of the many instructive articles is "Nimrod: His Times and Work," a statement of facts leading up to a conclusive argument for the antiquity, truthfulness, and inspiration of the early chapters of the Old Testament. The results of recent exploration on the site of ancient Assyria and Babylon are turned to excellent account in this article. Mrs. Reichardt writes "A Cry from the Harem," Rev. H. Heber Evans "The Bee as Mathematician," and the editor, Rev. John Urquhart, opens a series on "The First Resurrection." We are glad to learn that this magazine has made many friends. Principal Moule is to contribute to the new volume, beginning in November, a series of papers on "Intercourse with God." (6d. Shaw & Co.)

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 14.—Psalm CXXVIII.

THIS Psalm has no authorship or date assigned to it. It is anonymous, as are so many of the sweetest hymns of the Church. But it needs no introduction; and it goes on ringing through the world, refreshing weary hearts as the streamlets which run among the hills. The burden is the blessedness of true godliness in the entire range of human life.

1, 4. Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord.—How continuously throughout the Old Testament do we find blessedness associated with godliness! (Deut. vii. 12-14, xxviii. 2-14; Job i. 10; Ps. xxxiii. 12, cxii. 1-3, cxv. 13-15). Note the words, every one, which hand on the blessing to all, whether Jews or Gentiles, that comply with these conditions. The fear of the Lord is born of love, which dares not grieve. It is the inner temper of the devout soul which always reveals itself in the consistent and obedient walk. We walk in his ways when we walk in the Spirit (Gal. v. 16, 25).

2. Shalt eat the labour of thine hands.—A gracious promise. Lev. xxvi. 16 and Deut. xxviii. 33 present the dark reverse which is the portion of the ungodly. It shall be well with thee.—How often do we meet with this promise, either direct or implied, in the Book of Deuteronomy (iv. 40, v. 16, vi. 3, 18, xii. 25, 28, xix. 13, xxii. 7); and it is once repeated in the New Testament (Eph. vi. 3). Faith can grasp this promise, even when outward appearances seem adverse to its fulfilment (2 Kings iv. 26). It shall be well amid calamity and sorrow, in the deepest, and best, and most permanent sense. Isa. lxv. 22, 23 is the "latter-day" fulfilment of this promise.

3. "In the innermost parts of thine house" (R.V.).—Reminding us of the beautiful courtyard or quadrangle of an Oriental house, in which the fountain plays, and around which the vine trails gracefully. Thy children like olive plants.—The petition of Ps. cxliv. 12 is for such a blessing as this. And it has its response. "I am like a green olive tree" (Ps. lii.; see also Jer. xi. 16; Hos. xiv. 6). Jesus grew up as a "tender plant" (Isa. liii. 2).

5. Jerusalem, as the centre of religious worship, where the temple was, seemed to be the focus for the religious life and thought of the nation (Ps. xx. 2). And its prosperity was intimately associated with that of the people (Ps. cxxii. 2-6). The spiritual and temporal act and inter-act.

6. Thy children's children.—The promise of Ps. ciii. 17 accords with this verse (see also Prov. xvii. 6). Note the word to restored Israel in Ezek. xxxvii. 25; in those days aged men and women shall look with complacency on the boys and girls of a third or fourth generation playing in the streets (Zech. viii. 4, 5). Happy are those who, even now, can put their finger on the promise in Isa. lix. 21, and claim it as their own!

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 15.—Psalm CXXIX.

Another of the nameless pilgrim-songs. The singer looks back on the many and severe oppressions from which Israel had suffered, but from which the Lord had delivered his people (1-4); and therefore faith concludes that, however proudly the enemy may bear himself, God will certainly destroy him in utter ruin (5-8).

1. The youth of Israel was spent in Egypt (Hos. ii. 15, xi. 1; Jer. ii. 6). As we look back to our youth, then so full of promise, how many are the afflictions through which some of us have passed! We little expected them; we thought that we must escape: but we have had our full measure.

2. But how sweet to remember that every affliction has had its deliverance. There has always been a "yet." We will not therefore dwell on the afflictions, but on the revelation which each has given of the strong and tender care of God. Each has been a dark lantern—in which, when opened, we discovered that his light was burning.

3. As the plough tears up the earth, so does the scourge tear up the back. How true was this of Him in whom the ideal Israel was fitly personified, our blessed Lord (Isa. l. 6).

4. The Lord is righteous.—Twelve times throughout the Bible this truth is declared in the same words; besides being continually stated in other forms. It is comforting to know that our God is "righteous in all his ways" (Ps. cxlv. 17; see also Heb. vi. 10). Some think that the Psalmist refers to the plough-cords. The enemies would continue their ploughing; but God suddenly cuts the cords, and looses the cattle, and the plough stands still.

5. The imperatives here may be read as predictions: "They shall be."

6. The metaphor of "grass" is borrowed from Isa. xxxvii. 27. There is but little soil on the flat roofs of oriental houses; and grass, which may have taken root there, having no depth of earth, is soon scorched. All the greatness of the world's empires is as grass (Isa. xl. 6, 7).

8. We have here the customary salutation with which passers-by greeted the reapers. But such a benediction would never be spoken over the withered grass of the house-tops; so the wicked shall pass away with no silvery note of love or blessing sounding over their decease.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16.—Psalm CXXX.

A choice Psalm. There are times in our experience when nothing suits us as these words. When like Jonah we are cast into the deep, and all God's billows and waves are passing over us; when like Peter we lose our foothold, and begin to sink—then, indeed, we may cry: "De profundis clamavi." The name of "Lord" (either as "Jehovah," "Jah," or "Adonai") occurs as many times as there are verses. The soul, when in trouble, loves to repeat to itself again and again that precious name in which all help and comfort are enshrined.

1. Great soul-trouble and sorrow are often compared to deep and tumultuous waters (Ps. xlii. 7, lxxxviii. 7). There are times when no imagery so well sets forth our experiences as this: "All thy waves and thy billows have gone over me." But there is no depth so profound that the soul cannot cry therefrom. If you cannot pray, cry.

2. Can a mother so forget her child as not to hear its moan in pain? She may, but God cannot so forget his own.

3. If God should simply notice our sins, and not our tears or faith—or, above all, the atonement of Calvary—we should be without hope.

4. Forgiveness does not lead to lax living, but to a godly fear. The forgiven soul dreads to grieve the Forgiver. Mercy is antiseptic to depravity.

5, 6. We are too apt to wait for circumstances, people, things; and to meet with disappointment, because they are apart from Himself. But those who wait for God cannot be ashamed. There may be no Theophany; but, as they wait, a new strength and comfort steal into their hearts. Oh, to have the eagerness of the watcher for the dawn, as we wait for God! And should not we all cherish this expectancy for the breaking of that eternal morning, when the day shall dawn on which night never falls?

7. In God there is something more than forgiveness—there is deliverance. He does not remember our sins; or He redeems us from their tyranny and consequences. He does this plenteously, "with good measure, pressed down, and running over"; overtopping with a deluge of goodness the loftiest Himalayas of our sins.

8. He SHALL! It is as certain as his existence, as inevitable as his own glorious nature. If He has made, He can and will redeem.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17.—Psalm CXXXI.

This Psalm is ascribed to David; and it bears in its small compass distinct traces of its origin. But it was evidently composed before the dark clouds which overcast the close of his reign had gathered. It must have been composed during that "morning without clouds," in which he ascended the throne of a united people. It is a cry for the child-heart; and it becomes us to offer it "in all times of our wealth," when pride and self-will lie in wait against us (see 2 Chron. xxxii. 25).

1. The home and seat of pride are in the heart; but how often it betrays itself in the eyes! (Ps. xviii. 27). Exercise may be rendered, to walk to and fro. Though David had a promise of universal dominion, yet he took no step to secure it for himself. He resisted every temptation to snatch for himself that which was nevertheless divinely assured. There are many things which are great and high, both in revelation and in daily providence. We are not forbidden to use our reason. But after our best attempts, we must feel that God's thoughts and ways are higher than ours. He could not be God, were it not so. Our true attitude then is one of childlike, loving trust, waiting to be taught and led. And to such a spirit, God's Spirit of revelation will draw near, making clear mysteries which had baffled reason, and left human genius faint and weary in its quest (Isa. xl. 30, 31; Matt. xi. 25).

2. The weaned child is no longer filled with tumultuous passion and frenzy for its mother's breast; it is content to do without its wonted sustenance, because it has been led to another source of supply. So, when God turns us from some long-cherished comfort, let us be sure that it is not to starve us, but to give us something more suited to the maturing conditions of our life. And let us not be cross and impatient, but rather let us quiet ourselves; and, if that seem impossible, beseech that his Spirit may instil his quiet (1 Pet. iii. 4).

3. The cure for inquietude is to be found in a hope which begins as a struggling ray, but expands into the "for ever" of eternity.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18.—Psalm CXXXII.

This Psalm is evidently intended as a dedication song, composed for the completed temple. The earlier verses tell of David's purpose (1-7); then follows an earnest prayer (8-10); and at the conclusion we have the Divine response (11-18).

1. When any design approaches completion, we should not forget those who were concerned in its first conception, or gathered the materials—God never forgets them, and we should not (1 Cor. iii. 8). The names of the Apostles are not omitted from the stone (Rev. xxi. 14).

2. David's anxiety is recorded in 2 Sam. vii. 2.

3. We ought always to put the interests of God's house before our own. That was a grand character that Naomi gave of Boaz (Ruth iii. 18).

5. How wonderful that God is known as the God of Jacob. But surely no man stood in greater need of a mighty God than Jacob.

6. Ephratah perhaps stands for Ephraim, and refers to the residence of the Ark in Shiloh. The field of the wood is Kirjath-jearim, where, in darkness and solitude, the Ark was deposited after its return from the land of the Philistines (1 Sam. vii. 1; 2 Sam. vi. 3, 4).

8, 9. These verses are taken almost literally from Solomon's dedication prayer (2 Chron. vi. 41). The Ark was an image and pledge of God's presence with his people. The staves of the Ark were drawn out when it was deposited in the most Holy Place, to indicate that its journeyings were complete. O, weary, tired builders, think of the strength of the true Ark of the Covenant, which is Jesus Christ. In Jesus, ascended and glorified, God rests.

9. Every believer is a priest, and should wear this robe of righteousness (Rev. iii. 4); every saint is more than a conqueror, and should shout for joy (Rom. viii. 37; Phil. iv. 4).

10. This reminds us of 1 Kings viii. 25. God's anointed king asks that he may be remembered, as the far-off interest of David's prayers and tears.

13, 14. These verses are the Divine answer to the petition of ver. 8.

16. The answer to ver. 9.

17. This is the vindication of the promise quoted in ver. 11. God never forgot his pristine promise to David. He speaks of it centuries afterwards (Isa. lv. 3). Its partial realisation was in the maintenance of a line of kings on the throne of Judah (1 Kings xi. 36). But its full accomplishment is in our Lord, that lamp of God's grace shining in a dark world (John viii. 12; see also Ezek. xxix. 21).

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 19.—Psalm CXXXIII.

This Psalm celebrates the love of God's people. The word "Behold," with which it opens, indicates, possibly, that some lovely manifestation of such unity was taking place under the Psalmist's eyes; perhaps in connection with a great religious festival. It was probably written by David to celebrate the glad reunion of the nation after its long disunion during the times of the Judges and the opening years of his own reign. This Psalm is a fitting anticipation of our Lord's intercessory prayer (John xvii.).

1. Brethren of Christ must be brothers of each other (Mark iii. 35). It is not enough, however, to be one; we should take all opportunities of manifesting our unity to the world—dwell together. Unity does not mean uniformity, but oneness of heart and feeling and aim (1 Cor. xii. 4-6).

2. The precious ointment.—This oil was specially compounded (Exod. xxx. 22-25). "Precious," not only because of its intrinsic nature, but more because of its typical character as symbolising the Holy Spirit (1 John ii. 27). With that blessed chrism our Lord was anointed at his Baptism (Luke iii. 21, 22, iv. 18), and perhaps more copiously in his Ascension (Acts ii. 33). And the results of that anointing have descended to ourselves, the weakest and furthest, who are but as the skirts of his robes. Believer, be sure and avail yourself of the copiousness and wealth of our High Priest's enduement (John iii. 34).

3. The dew which fell on Mount Hermon is cited as being more lovely and holy than common dew. It is therefore employed as a further metaphor of the anointing oil, which had been referred to. And the Psalmist says that the love which was represented by the oil—which, in turn, was symbolised by the dews of Hermon—fell on Mount Zion as dews on parched herbage, whenever the Lord's people met there in the exhibition of brotherly love. Love in the Spirit is the dew of this world of men; a symbol and channel of the eternal love and blessing of God.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 20.—Psalm CXXXIV.

This is the last of the pilgrim-psalms. It is supposed to be addressed to the priests of the sanctuary—who were prepared to offer the evening sacrifice—by some pilgrim-bands which had just arrived from their distant journey, and had presented themselves in the temple. We gather from 1 Chron. ix. 33 that the temple was provided with a night-watch of choristers, who perpetuated the worship of God through the silent hours. And surely God has still such a relay of servants, who come on duty and serve him through the long dark hours of night. The sufferer from whose eyes sleep has departed; the watcher by the sick-bed; the nurse. All these maintain God's blessed worship, when many of his active workers are recruiting from their toils. "He gives his angels charge of them who sleep; but He Himself watches with those who wake."

1. "Behold!" Evidently the matter is pressing, and arises from the immediate circumstances of the moment. How eager are pious souls that God should be loved and adored. Night is no reason for hushing praise. God's song-birds will sing even in curtained cages. It is in the dark that the nightingale fills the woods with torrents of liquid music.

2. The LIFTED HAND is the gesture of prayer (Ps. xxviii. 2). It is not unimportant to study the appropriate expression of prayer, as well as its matter.

3. This is the answer of the priests, as they meet the assembled pilgrims, and return their salutations. We can never send up to God our adoration, but that it comes back to us again, as moisture drawn by sunshine from the earth returns to it again in showers.

FAMINE IN THE EASTERN SOUDAN. — The fund raised by the Aborigines Protection Society for relief of the famine outside Suakin now amounts to about £850, and to continue the distribution of food and hospital assistance now in operation at least £50 a week is required until the famine is over. In a letter received by the last mail by Mr. Fox-Bourne, honorary secretary, Captain Pain, the acting governor at Suakin, says: "I feed about 1200 to 1500 people daily. Dr. Harper renders most valuable assistance, his work being carried on separately from that of the Government. His hospital is much sought after."

SAILORS' WELCOME HOME (Ratcliff-highway, London, E.).—The fo'c's'le was crowded at the muster of the Christian Lifeboat Crew on Tuesday last week. Miss Child referred to an offer by a manager of a leading theatre to give a performance for the benefit of the Home, which she refused, suggesting, however, instead, that the theatre should be lent for a Sunday afternoon or evening, when she undertook to fill it with an audience to listen to testimonies given by a band of converted seamen. No answer has been received yet, and much prayer was asked that the Lord would open the way for such an opportunity of telling out the story of God's love and grace in Christ Jesus. Brief addresses and hearty testimonies followed by Mrs. Constantine from Smyrna, Miss Brabazon, Pastor Palmer, pastor of the Swedish Church, Mr. Jay, several captains, and other seafaring members. Much prayer was offered for several outgoing missionaries—Swedish, Scotch, and German—as well as for many others of the crew who are already in the home or foreign field.

JESUS ENTERING JERUSALEM.—LUKE xix. 37-48.

GOLDEN TEXT: Verse 38.

THIS incident takes place on the first day of our Lord's passion week. It was the tenth of Nisan, the day on which the Passover Lamb was chosen (Exod. xii. 2). The thought of this was present to Jesus. He knew that He was journeying to death. This is the only occasion on which Jesus rode. The disciples must have been surprised, not only at the manner in which the ass was obtained (29-34), but at the fact that our Lord should need it. Having walked so far, why should He ride when so near the completion of his journey? The fact that the prophecy of Zech. ix. 9 was being fulfilled (Matt. xxi.) explains it, and the disciples afterwards understood it (John xii. 16). He was entering Jerusalem as King, yet his majesty is combined with meekness. Cæsar's representatives in that city had no need to be jealous of royalty thus manifested. But this was Jerusalem's opportunity. All concealment is laid aside, and Jesus declares Himself.

THE ENTHUSIASM OF THE PEOPLE (37-40).—The multitude included Lazarus (John xii. 18), Bartimeus, and no doubt many others who had been healed by Jesus. Others were there who had no real attachment to Him, but were quite ready to welcome the coming of the kingdom as they understood it. There were enemies too, who regarded this enthusiasm with fear and anger (39). The enthusiasm burst forth "at the descent of the Mount of Olives" (37). "From this elevated point, 300 feet above the terrace of the temple, which is itself raised about 140 feet above the level of the valley of the Kedron, an extensive view was had of the city and the whole plain which it commands, especially of the temple, which rose opposite, immediately above the valley."—Godet. Such a sight, to a multitude accompanying the long-promised Messiah, might well fill them with exultation. "For all the mighty works they had seen."—They had something to praise God for. His works were witnesses to Him; and there were in the crowd numerous proofs of his power. "Blessed be the King," &c. (38).—Their song is described somewhat differently in the other Gospels. It is taken from Ps. cxviii. 26, and echoes part of the angels' song (ii. 14). There was more meaning in the words than they themselves understood. In spite of our Lord's warning parable (11), they did expect "the kingdom immediately to appear." Popular enthusiasm is not to be trusted. The Pharisees' objection (39) was possibly "accompanied with an irritated and anxious look towards the citadel of Antonia, the residence of the Roman garrison."—Godet. "The stones would cry out" (40). See Hab. ii. 11. Possibly this refers to the solemn testimony the stones would bear when laid in ruins (44).

THE GRIEF OF JESUS (41-44).—"Wept over it" (41). The word suggests not merely tears, as in John xi. 35, but loud sobbings and lamentations. What a strange interruption to their songs! The excitement does not carry Him away. As He could not be terrified by men's opposition, neither could He be elated with their praise. His indifference to their songs is majestic and kingly. Why does He weep? Terrible experiences are awaiting Him: the garden agony, the arrest, the judgment hall, the scourging, the death—is it this that grieves Him? No, He thinks not of Himself, but of the people of Jerusalem. (1) Their sin (42).—They "knew not," that is—they did not recognise and use their day of visitation (44). They had had abundant opportunity to know, but they would not. This is the guilt of thousands to-day. Nothing is easier than for men to neglect opportunities, but nothing is more guilty before God. (2) Their doom.—They lose their opportunity (42). Things they would not know are now hid from them. Their "day" is closing, and judgment is coming. This description of the destruction of Jerusalem (43-44) is wonderfully accurate. It is as though the whole event appeared before the eyes of Jesus. A trench (43)="a palisade of stakes filled in with branches and earth, and generally strengthened by a ditch, behind which the besiegers strengthened themselves. Such a rampart was really constructed by Titus."—Godet. Such an accurate description of a future event is evidence of our Lord's Divinity.

JESUS CLEANSING THE TEMPLE (45-48).—This did not take place on the first day of his entry (see Mark), but when He returned from Bethany the following day. He had cleansed the temple before (John ii. 13-16), but it was again being profaned. The incident illustrates his cleansing of his people, who are his temple (1 Cor. iii. 16). Note: (1) The condition in which He finds them.—Like the temple, they are possessed by other things, and, instead of being for the glory of God, they seek only their own. They are as "dens of thieves," for they rob God of his due. What does he find in your heart? (2) It is his presence that cleanses.—You have not to cleanse yourself in order to obtain Him. Only be willing for Him to enter; He will drive out the evil. To let in the light is the way to get out the darkness. (3) Having cleansed the temple He uses it.—"He taught daily" (47), and healed also (Matt. xxi. 14). There was power in his teaching, so that enemies became more vigilant to destroy, and hearers more attentive to hear (47, 48). It is only the life He has cleansed, and in which He dwells, that He uses for his service.

The lessons of this narrative are many:—

(1) The Word of God cannot be broken.—This is clear from the prophecies fulfilled in the entry into Jerusalem; and from the accurate fulfilment of the predicted destruction of the city. Every part of it is equally true.

(2) Many seem to receive Jesus who really reject Him.—Popular enthusiasm carries them away, and they sing "Crown Him," while their hearts are not yielded to Him. If He is to be your King, He must reign.

(3) The sin and doom of men grieve the Saviour.—What has He seen in you? Pride, vanity, frivolity, disobedience, discontent, deceit? Beside all these, rejection of his mercy? He sees to what it must lead, and grieves. Should not you grieve too?

"MINISTERS AT THE PLAY."—In an article on this subject, The New York Witness says that while the drama "might be so conducted as to be not only unobjectionable, but positively useful, all history shows that theatrical exhibitions cannot be maintained for any length of time in accordance with that standard. The theatre has always and everywhere shown a tendency to degenerate, and has invariably become associated with evil influences. And that inherent tendency to evil seems a sufficient reason for the avoidance of the theatre by all who are anxious to be co-workers with Christ in rescuing men and women from the dominion of sin."

PONDOLAND. — Mr. W. Christison (from Harley House) writes from Mehlomnyama, Port Shepstone, Natal:—"Since coming to this new station (less than a year ago), though somewhat further from the Pondo border, I have been thrown more directly into communication with that country. A large part of the tribe of Zulus in this location have lately sought a home in the Pondo country; but, as many friends have been left behind, there is constant communication between them. Of those who have left this district a few made profession of a knowledge of Christ, and these, I am hoping may be a faint light in the darkness. To reach these Zulus and Pondos still further is our desire, but through lack of means we are straitened in our work, and much that might be done has to remain undone. Being partly dependent on voluntary offerings, I ask practical, prayerful interest in our work."

LORD HALSBURY, Lord Chancellor of England, presided at the annual meeting of the Newquay (Cornwall) Association of the C.M.S., on Monday last week, and in the course of an address remarked that when he was a younger man it was said that there were two dark places on the earth—China and Africa—which could not be assailed; but China, instead of refusing help, had now a regular Ambassador to the Court of St. James, and Africa had been much in men's thoughts of late. People forgot at what cost and sacrifice of human suffering and noble lives missionary enterprises were carried on. Although in some of the darkest places of the earth one might sometimes find noble determinations to gain knowledge of the truth, was it true that the great mass of the world was attracted by the greatest of all truths? However, opportunities were increasing for mitigating evil, but when one contrasted efforts for worldly conquest with efforts for propagating the Gospel of God, men must feel humiliated. Half a million was spent upon one ironclad, but, on the other hand, wide fields of ignorance and folly were left with no one to help or save. Let them get rid of the easy, slumbering conscience. They might thank God that there were signs of the rising light; yet until the Gospel was preached in all lands the glorious end would not come.

Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E.

ONE RECENT CASE WILL BE GIVEN IN THIS JOURNAL EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

DISEASED LUNGS—CASE of Mr. CHAMBERS, of STAMFORD, Linc.

I received the first statement of this case on the 9th of October last.

The patient's name is George Chambers, living at 23, Austin-street, Stamford. His age is 23. Consumption had been fatal to his father, mother, and sister.

The commencement of his ailments was the so frequent forerunner of lung disease—a "cold"—contracted 15 months before this, followed by much wheezing and shortness of breath. Then cough came on—now violent, with occasionally very severe pains. Then weakness and loss of flesh. The doctor had pronounced him to be suffering from active pulmonary disease.

I corresponded with the patient until May. In December, when much better, he left off the medicine too soon, which he had reason to regret, but resuming it he regained what he had thus lost, and was able to write me, on the 14th of May last, as follows:—

"With much pleasure I write to testify to the wonderful benefit derived from your treatment. My symptoms have entirely disappeared. I feel stronger than for a long time past. I tender you my sincerest thanks, and trust you may be long spared to benefit suffering humanity."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Guy's Tonic

FOR

Indigestion & Nervousness.

IT is prepared from the choicest vegetable ingredients, and is the very thing required when the general health is much affected. The highest medical authorities state "that for all weak and languid feelings caused by indigestion, sluggish liver, and nervousness, a tonic is the only remedy;" and "that it is a complete waste of time and money to take anything else, for in this age of debility, complaints are of a weakening character, and therefore all food should be restorative, all medicines should be tonic." Guy's Tonic sharpens the appetite, strengthens the stomach, assists the liver, and invigorates the entire nervous system.

Guy's Tonic is for sale by all Chemists at 2s. 9d. per bottle. Insist upon having Guy's Tonic. No substitute whatever should be accepted. If you cannot obtain it promptly, remit the amount (2s. 9d.) to Guy's Tonic Co., 4, Ludgate Circus, London, and it will be sent by return, post paid.

THE SECOND EDITION OF

Tried by Fire:

EXPOSITIONS of the FIRST EPISTLE of PETER.

BY REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,

Author of "Abraham;" "Elijah;" "Israel," &c., &c.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"This is an exposition on the First Epistle of St. Peter. Since the commentary of Archbishop Leighton has almost monopolized the field of spiritual exposition, few have attempted to tread precisely the same ground behind that heavenly-minded expounder in his treatment of the Epistle. His commentary had one defect from which Mr. Meyer's exposition is free, and of which the ordinary reader is intolerant at the present day, viz., diffusiveness of style and quantity of matter. Indeed, we doubt whether any work has appeared since the time of Leighton on the same subject, which equals the one before us. The Chapters are brief. The Author's body of Divinity, in its proportions as in its parts, is true to the divine life in the soul, and to its portraiture in this the Petrine Epistle.

"The text is expounded with grammatical precision; and a graceful use of exegesis is made to bring out some underlying thought. The style of the book is exquisite English, dignifying the themes; and flowing in such a manner that often while the reader is allured into the luxuries of deep spiritual experience, he suddenly discovers that the author is paraphrasing sentences of the Epistle into the language of the heart and life. His estimation of character is fair, and neatly balanced. His illustrations are rich in the emphasis which they give to particular truths. He thinks and writes accurately, and imparts his ideas with the maturity of reflection belonging to a ripe experience which the deep teaching of the Epistle evokes.

"The Author raises the standard of holiness high upon the pedestal of the Gospel. Nor can it be lowered without grave consequences, in an age when soundness in the faith is made a substitute for sanctification of life. In one place, in fact, we had suspected a leaning towards perfectionism, but this feeling was dispelled when we read his remarks towards the end on 'The body of sin.'

"That these meditations were originally sermons delivered through the period of a busy ministry; that they were afterwards published as a series of expositions in our contemporary, 'THE CHRISTIAN'; and that they are now embodied in a handsome volume—explains why they have the directness of a sermon; the freshness of a magazine; and the depth and width of an exposition. It exactly answers to our idea of what a good exposition ought to be."

THE ROCK, August 15, 1890.

SEVENTEENTH THOUSAND

CHOICE SAYINGS.

A Collection of over 800 Striking and Profitable Comments on Great Truths. By ROBERT C. CHAPMAN. Tinted covers, 9d.; Cloth limp, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, gilt edges, 2s.; Morocco, gilt edges, 3s. 0d.

"Here we have gold-dust: 'and the gold of that land is good.' We hardly know a man more noteworthy for abounding grace and deep piety than ROBERT C. CHAPMAN. This name has never been sounded abroad, but those who know him value him beyond expression. Some of these brief 'SAYINGS' contain whole sermons. Personally we expect to gather many discourses while studying this little book. A dew from heaven rests upon Mr. CHAPMAN'S expositions."—Sword and Trowel.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the Right Rev. W. SAUMAREZ SMITH, the new Bishop of Sydney and Primate of Australasia.

France is rapidly becoming a slave to tobacco, and it is estimated that at the present time the revenue derived from the tax upon tobacco during the past twelve months represents no less a sum than 6s. 6d. for every man, woman, and child of the population. No wonder that poverty abounds in a land whose people hand over to the State £16,000,000 per annum as a fine upon indulgence in a narcotic; and it is not surprising, in view of such figures, to witness the gradual and steady growth of the drink bill in France.

In answer to a temperance deputation, the Mayor of Leeds has recently stated that, whereas in 1853 there were in Leeds 373 public-houses, in 1890, although the population has more than doubled in the interval, there are only 355. This is a healthful state of things compared with that of other towns and cities we could name, but it by no means follows that there is not ample room in Leeds for a further reduction, seeing that each of the public-houses is to a greater or lesser degree the centre of a stream of poverty and sin.

A new and disgraceful development in the direction of gambling was revealed a few days ago in the course of the trial, under the direction of the Treasury, of a person charged with keeping a betting-house. It transpired that the prisoner was in the habit of sending betting circulars to the boys in public schools, the circular being in the form of an invitation to the lads to invest money in racing, and to leave it to the prisoner to make the most for them. We are thankful to see that the magistrate looked upon the offence of addressing such youths as a singularly grave one, and dealt with it accordingly; and we trust that all school masters will take steps in future to prevent such circulars reaching their pupils. In fact, there are grave reasons for the closest supervision being exercised in regard to all communications addressed to the boys in our schools, and the master who has the welfare of his scholars most at heart will be the most stringent in reference to a watchfulness on their correspondence.

At the Social Science Congress at Leeds a few days ago the startling statement was made by Dr. Rhodes that there are to-day in England a sufficiently large number of paupers to form a procession four deep of over one hundred miles in length, their cost in poor law relief last year being no less than £8,440,821, or 6s. per head of the entire population. These figures are so startling that they justify us in doubting whether we are not doing too much in the direction of repressing and too little in the way of preventing pauperism. The question is an exceedingly difficult one, but it may be taken as an axiom that if the wages are less than 14s. per week, sooner or later the parish will have to supplement them. There are broad principles upon which a healthy and Christian reform might be based, and we have no doubt whatever that any change based upon the teachings of Christ in regard to the neighbour could not but be economical to the State.

General Booth is about to issue a book entitled "In Darkest England, and the Way Out," developing a great scheme for the amelioration of the condition of what are known as the "lapsed masses." The Salvation Army intends to put the scheme into operation, and from a recent newspaper "interview" we learn that it is threefold. To use the General's words: "In the cities we shall have industrial refuges and houses for the immediate reception of people; from those refuges and homes they will, after a little time, be feeded off to rural settlements, to agricultural villages and communities, which we hope to settle in the country; and from these again to settlements in the colonies." In a word, the endeavour will be to seek the reformation and then the salvation of those who have "gone wrong." This is praiseworthy beyond question, and, in hoping success will crown the work, we pray that abundant spiritual blessings may follow in the wake of temporal benefaction.

The revolution last week in the Swiss canton of Ticino leaves behind it a lesson which should impress thoughtful people. It was a strike against intolerance, oppression, and injustice suffered by the intellectual and moral manhood of the canton at the hands of reactionary Ultramontane rulers. Trial by jury had been abolished against the wishes of the majority of the people, and extravagant concessions had been made to the Romish priesthood. The culminating point of this misrule was reached a few months ago, when it was discovered that the cashier of the canton had lost over one million and a half of the people's money in wanton speculation, the Government at the same time making strenuous efforts to screen him. Revolution was, under the circumstances, to be expected. It is to be hoped that the lesson of the insurrection will not be lost upon States in which Romish influence is showing itself in Government circles.

A "Free Church Minister" writes to The British Weekly:—

> Our loss of spiritual power is, I am convinced, the inevitable result of the decrease of earnest evangelical preaching. It is true that we do not have so many men of commanding ability and influence, and of great pulpit power as formerly, but in addition to that, and much more widespread in its effects, we do not have the full, clear, solemn preaching of the Gospel in every corner of the land that we had then.

The great need in present-day preaching is plainly indicated here. We can dispense with "commanding ability and influence," but not for a moment with the Gospel, which alone is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

A correspondent of The British Weekly deplores the absence of the explicitly evangelical element from many of the pulpits of the Wesleyan Methodists at the present time. His letter was called forth by a kindly notice of a sermon by Mr. Champness, from which "appeals to the unsaved, calls to the fountain, instruction in the redeeming sacrifice," were, however, declared to be missing. We sincerely trust that things are not so bad among the Wesleyans as the correspondent referred to seems to fear. It would be grievous indeed for the ministers of this large and influential body to preach a merely humanitarian Gospel—to spend their strength in counsels and consolations simply for the life which now is.

The "Pastoral" just issued by the Wesleyan Methodist Conference emphasises a painful fact as to the steadfastness of the members of the Connexion. It speaks of no less than 131,754 persons who, during the last five years, have "ceased to meet," i.e., as we gather, have fallen away from recognised Christian fellowship in their churches. If this be so, there is wisdom in the exhortation that "the supreme aim of their members should be the cultivation of the life of the Spirit, and that all affections and all habits which in this respect are hindrances should be sacrificed." There is hope for the churches so long as this is made the urgent cry.

It is greatly to be regretted that some of the Lord's professed servants should contemn his Word by setting forth in his name the doctrines of Rome. Preaching on Sunday in St. Paul's Cathedral, Canon Scott Holland asked for the prayers of the worshippers on behalf of the late Canon Liddon. He said:—

> Pray we for him—for his refreshment, for his illumination, for his eternal peace.

This is a serious reflection upon the Great Shepherd. The eternal state of the righteous is, in all Scripture references, shown to be one of holy peace; therefore, petitions that they may have rest are but vain babblings, the use of which is a preparation for full-blown Romish faith and practice.

Owing to a dispute as to the ownership of a plot of ground of which the Franciscans had taken possession, Turkish troops have expelled the members of that order from Jerusalem. The "Grotto of Gethsemane" has, therefore, lost its showmen, and, it may be, the Romish Church one of its strange sources of revenue. It would not be a disadvantage if other monks also could be turned out of the Holy City, and few visitors to Jerusalem would deplore their absence if the Grand Vizier were to order their expulsion.

There was special interest and excitement during the meeting of the British Association by a paper on what science says as to the end of the world. The reader of the paper, Mr. E. G. Ravenstein, was held to be unusually capable of forming an estimate of the figures discussed; and the geographical, statistical, and economic science sections united to listen to it. It was argued that in A.D. 2072 the globe would be unable to maintain more than the number of inhabitants which would then be found upon it. The speculations on which such an alarming prospect is based may prove altogether fallacious. They may, however, teach men that their descendants will not find all things continuing as they now are. The Christian man is not troubled as to whether such theories be right or wrong, but rather aims at maintaining a readiness for the King's coming on the earth.

It is singular, as we learn from the current Review of Reviews, that Lord Wolseley, not only shares General Gordon's belief in the latent possibilities of the Chinese, but holds that they are the Coming Power, and that when their able and capable men are no longer beheaded, and a great General has arisen, they will, with their capabilities of endurance, sweep over Russia and India, and engage in war the English-speaking races. The Spectator of the 13th says:—

The English, the Americans, and the Australians will have to rally for a desperate conflict, probably in Western Asia, which will be a veritable battle of Armageddon. Such prophecies are, of course, of small practical use; but we agree that a very little might set the Chinese moving, and that her millions, once let loose, could no more be stopped than a stream of lava.

The practical use of such prophecies is to do our present duty, and obey the command of the world's Redeemer before his ascension, and any well-meant forewarning may be useful which awakens this generation from its tendency to an Epicurean slumber, and leads men to think that a day of the Lord will come.

"The Titles of the Psalms" may to some suggest a rather profitless discussion. Professor W. H. Green, of Princeton, in the latest issue of our American contemporary, The Old and New Testament Student, shows the subject to involve important evidential considerations. Those who regard Israel's religion as merely a human development are wont to deny the Davidic origin of those compositions which have for over two thousand years passed for "Psalms of David." Such critics are compelled to repudiate most, if not all, the titles. Of these titles, however, Dr. Green, a distinguished Hebraist, demonstrates the great antiquity, showing that, if not penned by the writers of the Psalms to which they are prefixed, they were certainly supplied by someone cognisant with the facts as to authorship. When the Septuagint translation was made (about 250 B.C.) these titles were so old that the meaning of the musical terms associated with them had been completely lost. Dr. Green declares the result of "a careful and unbiassed examination" by maintaining that the titles "are in the genera entirely trustworthy, that they deserve our confidence as in the main a reliable tradition respecting the authors of the Psalms, and the occasions upon which they were prepared."

The British Association.

By Rev. WILLIAM GUEST, F.G.S.

The recent meetings of the British Association in Leeds have gone far to confirm the surmises which have been held during the last few years, that the popularity of the annual visits of the British Association to chief towns of the kingdom would not continue what it had been, and that with many interest would increasingly centre around its discussions on economic and industrial questions. In 1858, when the Association met for the first time in Leeds, and when the population was only a little more than half of that which it is now, the number of tickets sold in connection with the meeting was 1698; whereas up to the close of the second day this year the number was no more than 1674. One reason for this decline of popularity may be thus stated: from the year 1860, when Darwin's "Origin of Species" began to be read and talked about, and when, at first sight, it appeared altogether hostile to the traditional beliefs of men with respect to the operations of the Divine Being, a sensational interest sprang up around scientific discussions. During the next ten years, in their eagerness to support the new philosophy, a few scientists forsook the inductive methods of true science, translated mere hypotheses into conclusions, and ostentatiously flaunted these conclusions as a death-blow to the religion of Englishmen. Religious questions possess happily a supreme interest among us. During those years the visit to a town of the British Association for the Advancement of Science awakened—in the fear of its effects—serious apprehensions among such as knew too well the consequences of lowering the authority of the Bible among the people; and at the same time aroused a desire among persons little given to scientific studies to hear what the savants of the new school had to say.

All this is a thing of the past, except, alas, in the results which abide. At the late meeting Sir Frederick Abel in his Presidential address made no attempt, as The Times remarked, to lay down new principles, and avoided those bold excursions into the region of the unknown by which some of his predecessors enthralled the attention of their audiences. The applications of modern science in their bearing upon the convenience, safety, and happiness of man formed the substance of that opening address. And the same practical application of knowledge marked the work of the different sections throughout the proceedings. Among other subjects may be mentioned national education, health, pauperism, factory legislation, theories of agriculture, colonisation, uses of capital, trade-problems of competition and combination, and even the bearing of geographical research on Christian civilisation. The conspicuous attitude of the meeting in discussions both on economic and natural science was the demand for facts. Professor John Perry spoke of the mistakes of millions of years in their calculations which geologists had made; Dr. John Evans, the President of the Anthropological Section, warned its members against speculations on the early origin of the human race except on the clearest evidence, and against assuming that the record of the past was complete. Full well do I remember a totally different tone that once prevailed in this Section. It was confidently affirmed that man existed in the early tertiary times; his descent from the ape was taken for granted, while the dominance (throughout ages whose length is now denied by astronomers and mathematicians) of merely mechanical forces was presupposed by even scientific authorities. Doubtless many protested against this materialism and dogmatism. The voice of these now prevails, and the universe of the Spirit is much more recognised.

A special feature of the Leeds meeting was the presence of ladies whose knowledge and grasp of scientific subjects startled older members, and some of whom appeared amply qualified to argue forcefully on the bearing of mental evolution on Darwinian doctrine. On the Sunday afternoon of the 7th there was a devotional meeting of the Association in the hall of the Y.M.C.A. with a large attendance of members and associates. Upon thoughtful persons the entire result must have been great admiration of the patience with which scientific phenomena are being studied; the conviction that accuracy rather than the formulating of theories is now the preponderating aim; and that in God's benevolent plan nature's secrets are being unlocked in preparation for man's future, whereby his dominion will be more complete over the handiwork of the Almighty.

MR. H. G. PICTON, who has met with much success as an Anti-Infidel lecturer in England and the Colonies, is at present in this country, and open to undertake engagements on behalf of the evidences of Christianity. Mr. Picton has worked in association with the Christian Evidence Society and the Y.M.C.A. He holds highest testimonials from ministerial and legal dignitaries, and is a specially able speaker. He may be addressed at 262, Camberwell-road, S.E.

CAMP MEETINGS AT PONTYPOOL.—The annual camp meetings in connection with the Undenominational Christian Mission, Pontymoile (superintended by Mr. T. M. Wintle), were held on Sunday and Monday last week, in a large marquee erected in the Market-place, Pontypool. The meetings were largely attended, and were felt to be very profitable times by those present. Among the speakers were Mr. C. Dauncey (Pontypool), Mr. James Jones (Wolverhampton), Mr. J. R. Hall (Newport), Mr. R. C. Morgan (London), Revs. W. Edwards, H. B. Robinson, and Owen Tidman.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN (Mrs. Mountford) has returned from her visit to America, and intends to remain in England for some months, delivering her lectures on Palestine life. She has now an entirely new lecture, entitled "Ecce Homo!" which is to be delivered for the first time in this country on Monday evening next, at 8 p.m., in the Public Hall, Croydon, Mr. Arnold Pye-Smith presiding. In the course of this lecture she will make critical observations on the Oberammagau Passion Play, and, besides being accompanied by her husband, will have eighteen assistants attired in new costumes from Jerusalem. This will be her last series of lectures before finally leaving England to settle in India, so we would recommend any who have not yet heard her to embrace the opportunity of doing so. Communications for Mrs. Mountford (who retains in public her maiden name, by which she is so well known) should be addressed to the care of Sunday School Union, 56, Old Bailey, London, E.C.

PARIS.—The Baptist Church in Paris is enjoying great blessing following their long-continued efforts, both at extension and raising the tone of the spiritual life of its members.—By virtue of the new military law in France the students in the ecclesiastical seminaries will be called to take their place as recruits in the army upon reaching the required age, a service from which they have hitherto been exempted.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST.—An illustration of this spirit is reported of an old attendant of the McAll Mission in Corsica. The old man met on the road one of the many mendicant friars with which the island abounds, and was greeted by the representative of the Church: "As far as I have seen you I have had the desire to make you feel this rope about your body". (referring to his girdle). "Thank you," was the reply, "from the first moment of sighting you I have prayed for you." The monk passed on abashed.

THE THREE GARDENS.

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN WHERE THEY LAID HIM.

VIII.—What Christ's Resurrection Tells.

THE resurrection of Jesus, as introductory to his glorified Saviour-life, holds a central place in New Testament doctrine. Wherever the Apostles went, they announced, as a fact which they knew, that the crucified Jesus rose from the dead; and they preached that through faith in Him we have forgiveness of sins and inheritance among them that are sanctified. The fact is everywhere taken for granted by them, is used for instruction and motive, and, indeed, is interwoven into the very texture of their teaching. It is no "open question" with them; it is not the imaginative clothing of a spiritual truth; it is no mere chef d'œuvre of idealism and love; no passionate and glorious delusion to which the forlorn disciples clung for consolation amid the infinite miseries of life; it is a fact in the same sense in which the crucifixion was a fact, and one which vouches for and certifies all the claims made by Jesus. Christianity perils its very existence upon it. "With great power" gave the Apostles witness to it, as a fact that lay within their personal knowledge, that accorded with the ancient Scriptures, and that carried in it a Divine announcement and assurance of mercy to sinners. They do not set themselves to prove its possibility; they assert it as a fact that lay within their knowledge. They never hesitate nor falter in their testimony, and even the fear of death cannot seal their lips. Wherever they go, and whomsoever they address, the soul of their message is "Jesus and the resurrection"; and their Gospel is as much the Gospel of the resurrection as it is the Gospel of the incarnation and the cross.* Indeed, these are not separable and independent events, but go together and form a unity.

It is the same in their Epistles. Obviously, even at first glance, the fact is one of commanding import. It is God's reply to the world's deed in crucifying his Son. It is the key to much that was mysterious both in word and institution under the former dispensation. It is the great miracle or sign of the New Covenant. It is the necessary sequence of the life and sufferings of the Redeemer, apart from which they are unintelligible. All previous Divine action leads up to it, and it becomes the seed of all future history. With this one fact the Christian system, as a whole, stands or falls, as the New Testament writers affirm, and as is clearly perceived by the assailants of the Gospel to-day, who are bending their utmost energies to disprove or throw it into doubt. Their other assaults are labour lost till this stronghold is taken. It is not enough to attack miracle after miracle in detail. "The resurrection of Jesus," as Strauss clearly saw, "forms the central point of the centre, the very heart of Christianity."†

Accepting the fact that "now is Christ risen from the dead," consequences follow whose reach cannot be calculated. The whole revelation of God presented in the Gospel, touching his character, his relation and attitude toward us, his righteousness and grace, his living action in the universe, is attested by the fact. The mysteries of being are not indeed solved; for finite minds perhaps no solution is possible; but the whole domain of human thought and life is illumined.

Examine the great problems of the ages in the light of this fact. WHO IS JESUS CHRIST? This is the foremost question of to-day, and there is none greater. We do not ask it about Buddha or Mahomet. It touches the right of empire over all human souls. The answer to it bears vitally on our whole beliefs, hopes, and moral conduct. The Man of sorrows, so lowly and meek, so patient, so strong, so gentle, so magnanimous, so pitiful and gracious, who spoke in such a regal tone, who showed forth so simply and wonderfully the love and truth of the eternal Father, whom his followers represent as the refuge and hope of sinful men, who has so captivated hearts in every age that thousands have laid down their lives for the love they bore Him, and thousands more would have done the same if He had bidden them, and who rules to-day a grander empire by love than the world ever saw—who is He? Is He only one of ourselves, who has risen to loftier heights and attained to wider outlook? Is He only one of the noble army of martyrs—perhaps the foremost—his title to dominion lying in the sublimity of his self-sacrifice? Or is He higher still? He said that He came down from heaven; that He had glory with the Father before the world was; that He would hereafter sit on the right hand of power, and come in the clouds of heaven. Are his claims sustained? His rising from the dead is the answer. He is "declared," marked out, defined to be the SON OF GOD by the resurrection of the dead. It is impossible to admit the fact of the resurrection, of which the personal rising of Jesus is the first-fruits and type, without thereby admitting all his vast claims.

Again, He shed his blood for the remission of sins; He suffered for sins, the Just One for the unjust that He might bring us to God; He is set forth a propitiation—a propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but the whole world: may I trust and not be afraid? May I, a sinner, perhaps a chief sinner, approach the throne, and find mercy? The resurrection of Jesus is again the answer. He was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification—in no "mocking forensic sense," but in the profoundest sense the word conveys. His death was due to our sins; his resurrection to God's justifying act,* who "calleth those things that are not as though they were." In bringing Him back from the dead, God manifested Himself to be "the God of peace." He "raised Him from the dead and gave Him glory, that our faith and hope might be in God"; and, though that God is so high and I so low—though He is so pure and I so defiled—I may draw near into the very secret of his presence, and meet the tenderness and love of his eye, and breathe out my Abba, Father.

When the Lord opened the understanding of the disciples to understand the Scriptures, He showed them how it behoved Him to suffer and to rise from the dead the third day, and "that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." This is the warrant for Gospel preaching. It is not merely to be admitted, but to be resolutely maintained that the Apostolic message of a free forgiveness and open access for the believing soul through the blood of Jesus into the very sanctuary and presence of God, is as valid to-day as if it were proclaimed directly by Apostolic lips; and that the humblest preacher in a conventicle, with the Bible before him, or the Christian mother among her children, or the nurse by the dying man's bedside, may repeat it as freely, with as strong assurance, and with as real Divine efficacy, as any consecrated priest.

Again, what is the life of believing men on earth meant to be? The very idea of it is this: "RISEN WITH CHRIST." This is life eternal, the life that is in the risen Son of God. It is no mere hope of the future, gleaming beyond the mists of time and the valley of death-shadow, like a star seen through the rift of a cloud, or the harbour-light seen across the foaming billows; but, (though as yet hidden in its real glory) a present possession and joy. There lies a grave between us and the old life. Crucified and risen with Christ, we are but lingering for a little while amidst the scenes and occupations of earth in solemn and glad anticipation of the glory that is to be revealed. The idea of life is thus unspeakably noble, corresponding not only to the greatness of our endowments and potentialities, but also to what we see in Christ; "because as He is, so are we in this world."

What is the power wherein such a life is to be sustained? That same power which the Father manifested in Christ "when He raised Him from the dead and set Him at his own right hand in the heavenly places." Our deliverance from the bondage of sin, our renewal of heart and will, our transformation of character, our sonship in the family of God, our gratitude, our love, our reverence, our celestial aspirations, our new obedience, our security against falling, our hope of being at last presented faultless before the presence of the glory of our Saviour-God—in short our whole new life as Christian men—all is due to the working

* Compare Acts ii. 22-36, iii. 13-19, iv. 10-12, v. 30-32, x. 36-43, xiii. 26-41, xvii. 31, xxii. 6-10, xxiv. 21, xxvi. 8, 22, 23.

† The admitted and indubitable facts to be accounted for are these: Jesus was crucified; was buried; lay in the grave till the morning of the third day, when his body disappeared—an "insignificant material fact," according to Renan. His former companions say that they saw Him alive afterwards; they stake their lives on the truth of their affirmation; and a society which continues to the present day has sprung out of their testimony. These facts are beyond invalidation. They have been accounted for in various ways: (1) The disciples stole the body, and then gave out that He was risen. This theory has now no advocate. It is not merely untenable, but admits too much. (2) He was not really dead, but in a state of lethargy, from which, recovering, He crept forth and showed Himself to his disciples, afterwards dying of his wounds. This theory would require a complete reconstruction of the moral character of Jesus. As Godet says, "Strauss has once for all executed justice on this hypothesis." (3) The disciples were visionaries, imposed upon by their excited imaginations. This theory does not account for the empty tomb. (4) The whole story is a forgery or mythical development of later times. How then account for the language of the universally admitted earlier Epistles of Paul, or for the existence of the Christian Church? (5) Lastly, the testimony of the disciples is true, that after his death on the cross, Jesus appeared to them, risen from the dead. One can sympathise with the French savant, "I am not credulous enough to be an unbeliever."

* The word "for our justification" is equivocal. He was raised "on account of" our justification. A friend becomes surety for me in some transaction of importance. I fail to meet my obligation, and he is cast into prison for my debt. He discharges my debt; and I am freed. The legal act which frees me, opens the prison doors for him. This is no parallel to the case in hand, but may help to show the meaning of the words, "delivered on account of our offences; raised again on account of our justification."

of that same omnipotent, death-conquering power within our breast, that was manifested in the bringing back from death of the great Shepherd of the flock.

Once more, What is God's purpose concerning his redeemed? What does He intend for them? We have not only a personal interest in this question, but also a very tender interest in connection with dear ones who sleep in Jesus. We remember all that they were to us, and all the love that was between us. They blessed our homes. To our memory their face wears a deathless bloom; their head is crowned with amaranth. Their spiritual nature was just blossoming out into the promise of a Divine beauty; vistas of illimitable progression were opening before them; they breathed, and thought, and hoped as immortals.

Already from the seat of God,
A ray upon their garments shone.

We who stood in the inner circle of love, and saw them in the unguarded hours, when the hidden life is unconsciously revealed, knew how real it all was; we could look, as it were, through crystal windows into their soul. In that life we thought we saw a Divine guarantee of immortality. God "wrought" them, fashioned them, new-made them "for this self-same thing." Our heart protested against the thought that they could cease to be. To admit such a thonght, we said, would be treachery to love, would be to suppose life a lie in which God is an accomplice. Suddenly, by a frost, a fever, a breath of poisoned air, or by an accident which no one could have foreseen, all was cut short, and the "fair companionship" was broken. Some of them passed more slowly from us. We saw them wearing away; we stepped out and in beside them—we in the dimness, to them the Unseen becoming luminous, and standing out in all its great proportions and solemn majesty. We marked the wasting form, the pallor of the countenance, the eye so calm and clear, so purged of every earthly passion, looking into ours so lovingly, yet as if mighty realms already lay between us; we felt the last pressure of their hand, and caught the faintly whispered farewell, and then gazed into the face of our dead in its awful stillness.

What is God's purpose concerning the holy dead? His full revelation is given in Jesus, to whose image they are destined to be conformed. It is not the "immortality of the soul" that is shown forth. Not as the heathen poet sang of one whom friends lamented—how he looked down, arrayed in white, from the unfamiliar threshold of the skies, and saw the clouds and stars beneath his feet. That is not the kind of picture given in the Gospel. But, "as Jesus died and rose again, even so them also who sleep in Jesus shall God bring with Him." He is no mere "unit" to whom God has granted special grace. As Leader of his ransomed, his resurrection is promise, pledge, type of theirs. "Every one in his own order; Christ the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." For his word stands sure, "Because I live, ye shall live also," not one lost or left behind in the sunless realms of the grave; but all brought to their eternal heritage of glory. For the life kindled in their bosom was the life of God, and that cannot perish. What grandeur is thus imparted to our brief and lowly sojourn on earth! "Your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory."

MR. CAIRNS IN MANCHESTER.

You have seen the advertisement all over England, Ireland, and Scotland, on the railways, "Crossley's 'Otto Gas' Engines." These engines are made in large works at Openshaw, a district inhabited entirely by working men, chiefly of the mechanic and engineer class. They are a very non-church-going part of our population, and difficult to reach. The brothers Crossley, after making a very careful examination into the state of the churches in the neighbourhood, determined to see what they could do. They built a very spacious and handsome dining-hall for their men, fitting it up with complete kitchen arrangements at the one end, which is shut off by movable shutter, and a very handsome platform at the other. The seats are ingeniously arranged so as to form very commodious dining-tables at one time and comfortable pews at another. Thus the whole can in a few moments be turned from an elaborate dining-room into a handsome church. The place was at once a thorough success, being filled Sunday after Sunday with from 800 to 1200 people, in marked contrast to the empty churches of the district.

So much encouraged were the Messrs. Crossley by the success of this mission, that Mr. F. W. Crossley erected another hall in an adjoining neighbourhood at a considerable cost, which he "runs" himself; while his brother, Mr. W. J. Crossley, superintends the Crossley Hall. I believe Mr. W. J. Crossley was highly delighted with his mission under Mr. Geo. R. Cairns, of America, and testified to the real good done at Crossley Hall, and the blessing he had himself received.

Mr. Cairns's next mission was at Heyrod-street Institute. This also is a most interesting place. It is the largest volunteer mission enterprise in Manchester. It was originally an old Chartist Hall, and was taken by some gentlemen for a Ragged School. It has been an unclouded success from the beginning, but latterly under the energetic management of Mr. William O'Hanlan it has been advancing by bounds. There are nearly 2000 children in the ragged school, from which has sprung a most elaborate list of enterprises. Nearly everything that was made to grow on Lord Shaftesbury's Ragged School tree is to be found in this wonderful place. Hearing from Mr. W. Crossley of the glorious work at Crossley Hall, Mr. O'Hanlan invited Mr. Cairns to have a fortnight with his people, hoping for a like blessing. Nor was he disappointed. The Holy Spirit descended in great power, and every night saw large numbers of inquirers seeking salvation. They had to send to other places for workers, there were so many to be spoken to.

One of our deaconesses takes charge of the mothers' meeting at this Institute. She gave me a list of, I think, 160 persons whom she believed to be truly converted, and I sent superintendents to visit everyone of them some months after the mission closed, and they reported that they could not find one that they did not believe to be a thoroughly genuine case. I think this is a very important testimony to the depth of the work, as our superintendents are well accustomed to report, and there opinion is of real value.

Hearing from his two friends, Mr. Crossley and Mr. O'Hanlan, of the wonderful work of grace, Mr. John Thomson invited Mr. Cairns for a week's mission at Wilmot-street Institute. This also is an interesting place, without being as large a volunteer enterprise as Heyrod-street, or as unique as Crossley Hall; it has its special features, among which the most marked is the mothers' meeting. It has upwards of 700 members, and I myself have seen 480 present. Mrs. Thomson, who conducts it, has 24 volunteer visitors, who hunt up the absentees. I have been told that she never calls a roll, but marks it from memory! Here Mr. Cairns did a remarkable work. Upwards of 200 persons entered the inquiry-room in one week. I have not had the same opportunity of testing their genuineness that I had at Heyrod-street, but from the very enthusiastic way in which Mr. Thomson speaks of Mr. Cairns's visit I have no doubt that they have turned out satisfactory.

A BOMBAY OPIUM DEN.

Mr. Maurice Gregory, one of the editors of The Banner of Asia, Bombay, writes in a letter recently received in London:—

"I took an up-country missionary to see some of the Bombay licensed opium dens last night. One of these places was up a filthy narrow gully, about four feet broad, which wound round and about in the most crooked manner. It is kept by a Chinaman. My missionary companion hesitated at first about going to such a cut-throat-looking place, but I assured him that it was quite safe. Here a striking incident occurred. Outside was a Mohammedan young man and his old mother. The young man is a confirmed slave to opium. His mother said his age was only twenty-one, but he looked at least fifty—shrunken and bent, and a mere skeleton. He does no work, but his father gives him four annas (about 6d.) a day for opium, else he would die. All he can now eat daily is a small teacupful of food.

"Robert Thompson, a young man employed on The Bombay Guardian, who also accompanied us, very earnestly explained to the old mother that it was wicked Europeans, who were not Christians, who licensed such dens, and that there were real Christians, followers of Jesus Christ, who were trying to put a stop to this legalised wickedness. She listened intently, and then lifting her out-spread hands above her head, like an inspired prophetess, she said; 'Man indeed cannot do it. Only an almighty God can stop this awful thing.'

"Many men who were once wealthy were in that horrible den. Robert Thompson in his search ventured into the Chinaman's private apartments, and called us to look. The Chinaman had turned his wife out, and fitted up his own sleeping-place for the accommodation of a wealthy Hindu, all covered with jewellery. The Hindu had chosen this out-of-the-way den up a dark, and filthy, and winding lane, and then he was not satisfied that he was sufficiently hidden, but had hired this cell from the Chinaman. He looked considerably astounded and ashamed to see our party come into his hiding-place."

Thus are our Indian fellow subjects debauched, impoverished, and ruined, under official sanction, and thus spreads in our Indian possessions, to the scandal of the Christian name, what has been truthfully designated as "the great plague of Asia."

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN EVANGELICAL TRACT SOCIETY is a useful agency, worked on a mutual basis. All who desire to serve Christ in tract distribution are invited to become members. The work is sustained by freewill offerings, tracts being supplied to distributors according to their need, which is an advantage to those who can buy but few, and an accommodation to such as are able to pay for more than they can judiciously distribute. A monthly letter is sent to members, giving items of interest concerning the work and requests for praise and prayer. The report for last year states that more than 200 Christians, at home and abroad, are associated in the work. The tracts, English and foreign, are selected for their purely Gospel character and directness of appeal, and it is hoped that they will soon find many more earnest distributors. A series of Bible reprints in Arabic is now in preparation, and another in Esthonian is awaiting completion. The Society deserves cordial support, and we shall be glad to hear of the extension of its operations. The superintendent is Mr. Samuel E. Roberts, 26, Paternoster-row, E.C.

SCOTTISH CONFERENCES.

The autumn conference season has begun in Scotland in the happiest of outward circumstances. An "Indian summer" has visited us, and floods of welcome sunshine have poured down, day after day, from a cloudless sky. Everywhere the farmers are busy reaping and garnering the golden grain, and soon the song of harvest home will be heard throughout these northern regions. We would not insinuate that conference goers are "fair-weather Christians," but certainly the delightful elemental surroundings have ministered to the comfort and cheerfulness of the friends who have assembled from different and distant places to take counsel concerning the things of the kingdom of God.

THE PERTH CONFERENCE.

This long-established gathering may be said to be the mother of our modern conferences of Christian workers. It has now many daughters, some of them, perhaps, more enterprising than itself, but it retains a warm place in the hearts of the older Christians throughout Scotland. On Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of last week, it was held for the twenty-eighth time. There were present some venerable friends who have rarely missed attending its meetings for over a quarter of a century; while young and ardent men and women were also there in goodly numbers, ready to take the places, and sustain the work, of those who must ere long be called to their heavenly rest. The unfortunate arrangement which had fixed the same days for the Y.M.C.A. Conference at Aberdeen and the Convention at Carlisle hindered the presence at Perth of some valued speakers, and it would be very desirable that a clashing of dates should, if possible, be avoided in future years.

One of the unfailing characteristics of the Perth meetings has been a steady adherence to the old and tried lines of evangelical doctrine. This year the general topic of consideration was in its different aspects and manifestations. On the first day this Love was viewed in relation to "the Gift of the Son." In some opening words Lord Kinnaird touched on two points—the believer's "acceptance in the Beloved" (Eph. i. 6), and the practical effect of this Divine grace in the early life, as set forth in Titus iii. 11, 12. The question was pressed—Have we put ourselves in Christ's hands to be redeemed from all iniquity? Are we willing to be among God's peculiar people, zealous of good works? If we want an exhibition of zeal, go to the Stock Exchange on some "settling day." There we shall witness more intensity of zeal in a few hours than in all the churches during a twelvemonth.

PROFESSOR LAIDLAW, of the New College, Edinburgh, gave the Gospel in one verse—John iii. 16. Looking on the up-turned, eager faces of the audience, it was easy to see that the glorious old Gospel has lost none of its wondrous power, and that "the old, old story is ever new." The speaker did justice to the teaching of the old theologians. This Love of the Father was known to them, but in the later revivals has been set forth in a fuller, clearer light. The details of the picture are the same, though the point of view may be different. All details take their right place and proportion when God's love is magnified.

How is this love to be really known? The Professor found a telling illustration in the case of a disobedient and rebellious son, who has left his father's house and gone to a strange country. The father is a kind and just man; does not abandon him, and sends him an allowance, never ceasing all the time to invite him to return home. At last these appeals have their effect; the son's heart is broken, and he is on the point of starting for home when a friend comes in. "I don't think, my dear fellow, that you have so sinned against your father. You have around you tokens of his love in these pleasant rooms, with all their comforts." "Nothing of the sort," says the son; "if you want to know about my father's love, read his letter. He has paid my debts, and taken all my responsibility on him. He has risked his life for me. There is love!"

The greatness of this love we can only estimate if we consider what a world had to be redeemed—a world guilty, obnoxious to God's holiness. The Apostle prays that we might "know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge"—its breadth, and length, and depth, and height. Begin with its depth. "While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." The farthest depth of our sin, that is the depth of God's love. Then as to the height. We estimate the love a man has to us by the sacrifice he is ready to make. "God so loved that He gave." Mind the tense: there was a moment in the counsels of God when He gave. "God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself." Once for all He gave his son. God so loved. The whole truth of Christ's absolute divinity lies in that "So." It is not that He chose Jesus Christ as the flower of the human race, and so loved the rest that He sacrificed Him for them. No; He gave up his only begotten son. When we watch Jesus climbing the altar slope to Calvary, we say, "Behold the height of sacrifice." There needed no Christ, no Calvary to make God love the world; He so loved that He gave.

What of the breadth? You will find it in the "Whosoever." God loved the whole human race without distinction. (Some of the old theologians had thought it needful to add the "elect" world. This was not the meaning; but they had wished to make it clear that in the work of our salvation God has the first and the last word. If man had the last word, no one could be saved.) Then its length. This love is as long as from eternity to eternity. And, as the poet says—

> For, oh! eternity's too short
> To utter all thy praise.

THE HON. AND REV. TALBOT RICE

spoke of the grace of the Father as shown in the gift of the Spirit. We cannot look at truth, he said, as we would look at pictures in a gallery. We must learn how to manifest these truths so that other men may believe them. We expect to be like our Father some day, but men will never believe in God's grace till we represent Him to them. They will believe in God's giving up his Son for them when they see Christian parents giving up their children for the mission field or the slums of the great city. Others will be influenced by what we do rather than by what we say. God's desire is to give us grace so abundant that it will overflow. Look at the abundance of nature. This love of the Father flowed out; it was not forced out. Out of us should flow rivers of living water. The Apostles said, "We cannot but speak." Christians now seem to leave out the "but," and to read it, "We cannot speak." Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. God gives us this gift of the Spirit in spite of all our failure and unworthiness.

Sometimes we exaggerate in our speaking; Jesus never does. If He speaks of "rivers of living waters," who can express all that is implied in this promise of the Holy Ghost. How much of it do we want, and why do we want it? We shall not get it if we want it merely for selfish purposes, or simply to make us happy. It must be desired that we may do the will of our Father in heaven. It is to make these doctrines grand realities that we have the gift of his Spirit.

This gift is not for some privileged persons; it is for all who believe in Jesus. It is not for a Church nor a system; it is for individuals. If we do not consciously enjoy the presence and power of the Spirit, whose fault is it? Not the fault of our loving Father, certainly. It is our own want of trust in Jesus. And all this fulness is the result of God's grace—it is a gift; it is not earned by our work, or merit, or self-surrender.

An address was given on Tuesday evening by

of Highgate, London. Keeping closely to the programme, he brought out with wonderful clearness the grace of the Father as manifested in his delight in the work of the Son. The Father's love for the Son is an eternal love, but we have now to consider that grace as manifested towards Him while He was accomplishing his redemptive work for us. From the time when at Jordan the voice of the Father declared his delight in the Son, up to the moment when He placed Him at his right hand far above all principality and powers, the Father's delight in his work was continuously manifested. On the cross, even at the very moment when He cried, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" He was "a sweet-smelling savour"; presenting to his Father a life of perfect obedience, even to death. Never before had God seen in man anything perfectly agreeable to Him as the Holy God? All along the life on earth the Father was present. Anointed with the Holy Ghost and with power, Jesus went about doing good, healing all oppressed by the devil, because God was with Him. Did anyone recognise Jesus as Messiah? It was because God had revealed Him to that soul. Did Peter acknowledge Him as the Christ of God? It was because the Father in heaven had revealed this to him. Were his words full of grace and truth? The Father gave Him commandment what He should speak. Did Jesus perform miracles? "The Father that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works."

Then when the work of expiation was accomplished, and Jesus had been laid in the grave, the Father showed his satisfaction in the accomplished redemption, in that He raised Him from the dead to die no more. Never had He done this to any other. Forty days after, He entered for us into the heavenly temple, and was there established for us a great High Priest. Further, the grace of the Father comes out in this: He was taken from us that the Comforter might come with all his manifold gifts and powers. How that grace will yet be manifested when, as in the vision of Daniel—He shall come back in the glory of the Father after having received the kingdom. He is yet to be glorified in the very place where He has been rejected and despised. Then we also shall appear with Him in glory. Surely when God's energies seem to be directed in glorifying his Son, ours should be directed to the same end. Shall not we unite with all our hearts in the Apostle's anthem—"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ"; and in the prayer—"Lord, work in me all thy blessed will"?

WEDNESDAY.

Lord Polwarth presided this morning, and called attention to our duty as workers with God. He thought Christian workers depended too much on organisation, forgetting that God is the great Worker. As He was the Creator in the natural world, He is the mighty Worker in the new creation.

Then we had the joy of seeing and hearing the venerable, much-loved Dr. Andrew Bonar. Many, unfortunately, could not hear his words, but the look of radiant peace on his face was a testimony to the fidelity of God, who said, "Even to hoar hairs will I carry you." Dr. Bonar's address went over some of the ground traversed the night before by Mr. Stephens, though the subject that he took was the grace of the Father shown now in the part He takes in our salvation, while Mr. Stephens had shown the part He took in the work of Christ when He was personally on the earth. Dr. Bonar spoke of the old recollections awakened by reading in the programme of the Conference the subjects proposed for meditation; one of his first printed productions had been a tract on the love of the Father. This doctrine was the means of the wonderful revival in Perth and its neighbourhood fifty years ago. We want no new theology any more than we want a new sun in the firmament; we want brighter and warmer rays from the old sun to irradiate our hearts. Those who have read Mr. Stanley's journeys in "Darkest Africa," will perhaps agree that one of the most interesting parts of the book is that which has reference to the sources of the Nile. There has been for ages a mighty range of snow-clad mountains 18,000 feet in height from which continually pour down the streams which form the Nile. Why was it so little known? Even Stanley himself had been in its neighbourhood without seeing it. It is because the greater part of the year it is wrapped in mist, not above fifty days of the year does it stand out clear. But, when it does, what a magnificent spectacle! So has it been with this doctrine of the grace of the Father. Its existence has been known, but very little has been said about it in books of theology.

What do we find the grace of the Father is doing for us now? In conversion, for instance. "Every good gift cometh down from the Father of Lights." "Of his own will begat He us." Paul says, "It pleased the Father to reveal his Son in me." It is as if the Father were perpetually drawing back from hearts the veil that hinders them seeing the Son. In justification it is God that justifieth. In adoption it is the Father who sends the Spirit of his Son into our hearts. Having done this, He is always listening for the cry of his children. In sanctification: the great agent in our sanctification is the Holy Ghost, "whom," Christ says, "the Father will send in my name." In our prayers, Father, Son, and Spirit are interested. It is the Father who is to send Jesus Christ who will bring with Him those who sleep in Jesus. When the day of glory comes, it is the Father who is to wipe away tears. His love is wonderful, even now; "not a sparrow falls without our Father." Even the hairs of our head are all numbered. Jesus said it, and He ought to know. It is just like Him; of whom Moses says, "He kept them as the apple of his eyes." This is the whole truth about the Father. It gladdened and satisfied us fifty years ago. It gladdens and satisfies us still.

PRINCIPAL MOULE,

of Ridley Hall, Cambridge, told how glad he was to be present at the Perth Conference. It was the first time he had had the privilege of seeing Dr. Bonar, but his name had been a household word to him from childhood. All his life he had reverenced him as the author of that precious Life of Mr. Murray M'Cheyne. He had the volume still on the shelves that were his mother's; and every time he opened it he found help and precious teaching. What it was for him to meet for the first time the revered author he could not tell.

Mr. Moule read two short passages, "Endued with power from on high," and "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me"; also Col. ii. 2: "To the acknowlegment of the mystery of God which is Christ" (Mr. Moule prefers this rendering). Why is it called the mystery or secret of God? Because you cannot take the love of the Father without the Son with whom it is always connected. The Colossians were strongly tempted to look beyond Christ for the secrets, they wanted to face the facts of their times. It was so at Colosse; it is so at Perth; it is so everywhere. Paul says Christ is the secret of God, treasured in the depth of the Father's wisdom, of the Father's love.

The Father's love is no figure of speech; but you must come to Jesus to know this. The speaker illustrated how dear Christ is to the heart of God by speaking of the pain he himself felt when a stranger had grieved his gentle little girl by speaking harshly to her. The thing was so trifling that another might have smiled at it, but the father's heart could only feel indignant at the insult to his child. How must the Father feel towards those who despise and reject His only begotten Son!

Have you realised that in Jesus Christ we have the long veiled but now disclosed secret? It needed the personal living Father to reveal the personal Son by the personal Spirit. We are here as those who think much of Jesus Christ; we have looked anew in his face, and we have found the secret. No real aftersight disarranges any former sight of Him. We have found the secret of Jesus before the judgment seat, we have found that the righteousness and the blood are not figures of speech. Jesus Christ is the antithesis of all the evil under which self groans. In Him are peace, victory, purity, patience, immortality. Let us love the Father and trust the Father by the Son.

Mr. Moule gave a little bit of personal experience, telling how, long after his conversion, a new richness of experience came upon him in the quiet service of a Christmas Day as he read the words: "The only begotten Son who is in the bosom of the Father." Thoughts of the Father's love to the Son and of the safety of the weakest believer who has touched the hem of his garment flooded his soul.

Then we are to be witnesses. Not only messengers. A messenger brings a letter of the contents of which he knows nothing. A witness must tell what he has seen and heard. Our testimony to this secret must be first hand. If we are inconsistent in our life, we shall be witnesses on the wrong side. Christ says: "Witnesses to Me"; as to a great reality. Seek for obedience to the apostolic command: "Be ye filled with the Spirit." The Father's gift, the Holy Spirit, revealing to us Christ, will make us true witnesses. Christ is the secret; we are to do our utmost to make Him known.

THURSDAY.

The final division of the Conference subject was considered this morning—The results of the grace of God the Father in the present and the future. Lord Polwarth dipped a little into the meaning of those wonderful words in Eph. i., "The exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead." Here we are brought within sight of the ideal life—that of Jesus Christ Himself. For Him there were no surprises, because He was in close and constant fellowship with the Father. If we draw continually, by the hand of faith, from the same source of full supply, our life shall be fruitful and blessed.

REV. DR. ROBSON,

of Inverness, was the chief speaker on the theme of the day. This grace of God, he said, is no mere sentiment; it is an active spiritual force which works potently in the believer's life. Directing further attention to the passage quoted by the chairman, he observed that we see in the enthronement of the Saviour the outcome of this Divine grace that has occupied our thoughts. He traced three steps in this exaltation of Christ—the resurrection, when the Spirit returned to its now deathless shrine; the ascension from earth in the presence of his faithful band of followers; and his session in the place of power and dignity at the Father's right hand, far above all the angelic hosts that act as officers in the court of heaven. There we see the once humiliated Man of sorrows, with the crown on his brow and the sceptre in his hand. Though Christ was inherently Divine, yet he held his Godhead in subjection to the power of the Father, and therefore this grand climax to his redeeming work was the outcome of the sovereign grace of God. In all this we have a bright typical prophecy of what is to be wrought in the true believer by the same free grace. The resurrection, the ascension, and the assumption of kingly power are all for us, as much as the incarnation and the atoning death upon the cross. Now He is Head over all things to his Church. But it is through our own union with Him in his death that we enter into the subsequent exaltation and glory. Even now we possess and ought to show forth a risen life, but it will not have its full fruition till we have received the body of our transfiguration. Seated in the heavenly places now with our enthroned Lord, we shall one day realise the actual experience of being with Him on his throne, and taking our part in the regal functions which He performs. Oh to fathom the transcendent meaning of all this coming as well as present privilege and glory that are the fruit of the grace of God the Father. A closing word of affectionate appeal to any who were as yet outside the operative power of this saving and sanctifying and exalting grace gave a fitting point to the speaker's meditation of this wondrous theme.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER

and also for praise are not omitted at Perth. Those presented on Thursday were very pregnant with meaning as to the reality of God's goodness in hearing and heeding the humble prayers of his children. With heartfelt thanksgivings were mingled petitions for the conversion of dear relatives, for grace to meet home trials, and for blessing on many workers in the great field. One touching request was that some information might be forthcoming about a daughter who, for years, had been away from the ken of her parents, somewhere in New Zealand. Another touching circumstance was mentioned. At every Conference since 1886 prayer has been asked for blessing on several sons in America. News has just come that these prayers have been partly answered in the conversion of one who desires to give himself to active Christian service. In presenting the requests, Dr. Bannerman gave voice to many grateful feelings in returning special thanksgiving to God for the glorious harvest weather.

REV. NEVILE SHERBROOKE

followed with a ten minutes' talk which was truly remarkable in the wealth of its comforting suggestion and practical helpfulness. In the line of the day's teaching as to future glory for the believer, the speaker cited Rev. xxi., xxii., which tells of the New Jerusalem, that it shall have no temple, or sun, or moon, or night. God is training us here and now for eternity. Away with the thought that we may serve the devil all our time on earth, and at the last, after passing the gate of death, may become the servants of Christ. This passage tells of two precious things that are needed for our earthly service, but will be absent in the glory land. "I saw no temple therein." Temples on the earth are standing witnesses for God in an ungodly world; they provide an aid to the Christian life, and they are instruments for conveying the blessing of salvation to others. Yonder God will need no such witness; we shall need no such helps in the life of the soul, and there will be no ingathering of souls. This last fact has its very solemn bearing on our work of to-day. We have no Scriptural warrant for the idea that probation will be prolonged beyond death; therefore our time for reaping a soul-harvest is now. Then, while we thank God for the aid that comes through earthly temple-worship, we must not be dependent on it even here, else how shall we do when that is withdrawn?

The second present blessing that will find no place in the heavenly city is artificial light. No night there, and therefore no sun or moon. We thank God for the reflected lights of earth, though they are only temporary. Let us seek to show a clear and steady light in our homes, and in our business life. We need to be delivered from the little things that intervene to cloud our shining for the Master—the peevish tempers, the inconsideration for others, the self-seeking, that mar the brightness of our testimony. These conferences are helpful in revealing and removing such hindrances. Have any of us experienced the sorrowful eclipse of earthly light in the loss of dear loved ones—those who were true reflectors of the life of Christ? Then we will seek to get nearer to the Master Himself, the great source of spiritual light.

We are told again that no gate should be shut there. This speaks to us of the duty and need of present watchfulness, lest at eargate, eyegate, or heartgate, anything come in to spoil our life and rob us of our witness. Let us beware of books that would shake or weaken our faith. God will test our faith, and it is not for us to do anything voluntarily that will put it to the strain. Mr. Sherbrooke's words were excellent, as giving counsel and warning as well as ministering consolation to hearts like his own that have been riven by sorrow and bereavement.

In a few closing sentences Rev. J. FORDYCE spoke of the spirit of trustfulness and hope that the meditations of the Conference were fitted to impart. If God has given to us his very best thing in the gift of his Son, He will not withhold from us any good thing that we need—joy, consecration, brotherly love, a prayerful spirit, an assurance of coming glory.

THE AFTERNOON MEETINGS of the first two days were devoted, as the custom is, to reports of active effort of various kinds. On the Tuesday, there was an animated and interesting conversation on work among the young. On Wednesday, Rev. J. Fordyce and others testified to the need of providing spiritual privileges for "our kith and kin in India." At the same meeting, Commissioner Booth-Tucker, of the Salvation Army, spoke, in his own enthusiastic fashion, of evangelistic endeavour for the natives of India; and Musa Bhai graphically related his experience.

The third afternoon is set apart for the united Communion service; it proved this year to be a time of much soul refreshment to the large company that sat down for the memorial feast of love, and partook of the symbols of the Saviour's death and redemptive work. An address by Dr. Paton Gloag on the surpassing character of the love of Christ preceded the Communion, which was very suitably followed by some weighty words by Rev. Mr. Collinson on the need of manifested union among believers belonging to different sections of the one Church. These occasions, he said, furnish a blessed opportunity of such manifestations, and everybody present must have felt the force of his words.

are always the outstanding feature of the evening gatherings. Then there is the largest attendance, and the audiences are more promiscuous. The Gospel addresses this year were given, among others, by Col. Oldham, Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, and Mr. George Clarke. The addresses by Mr. Macgregor, a young Free Church pastor from Aberdeen, were truly remarkable in the qualities of freshness, unction, and winning power. As we listened to this young preacher's talk on the last evening from the well-worn text, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock," we could not but thank God that in the younger generation of ministers there are some at any rate who have laid heart and mind and tongue wholly on the altar for the salvation of their fellow men. The Free East Church of the Granite City is happy in having such a pastor set over them in the Lord. The only thing that one feels inclined to say by way of criticism with respect to the evening meetings is that the number of addresses might, perhaps advantageously, be curtailed. This would leave more opportunity for the process of drawing the net. On the Sunday evening following the Conference, however, a special effort is always made to clinch home the impressions of the previous days to gather up the fruits; this has been found an excellent plan, and we commend it to the thought of the conveners of other Conferences. After last year's Conference at Perth, a special mission was held by Mr. J. Scroggie, the fruits of which, we were told, are appearing unto this day. For some years past Rev. Dr. Bannerman, of Perth, has been conjoint secretary of the Conference, with our venerated friend, Mr. Mudie, of Montrose. Central Scotland has good cause to thank these and other earnest-minded brethen for their combined labours in arranging the meetings, and for the Christian hospitality extended to the visitors from other parts of the country.

YOUNG MEN IN COUNCIL.

The usual autumnal gathering of Scottish Y.M.C.A.'s and Fellowship Unions took place last week, Aberdeen being this year the meeting-place. The arrangements were made by the local Association, of which Mr. Charles Sherriffs is the very competent and highly esteemed secretary. Close upon two hundred delegates came from all the points of the compass, and the meetings were held in the most favourable weather. Even the cold and wind-swept Granite City softened into radiance and warmth under the influences of a generous wealth of sunshine. The programme was universally admitted to be one of more than usual adaptation to the outstanding needs of the time and the discussions were carried on with a spirit that indicates the presence of no small vitality among the Christian young men of Scotland.

A preliminary sermon on the Sabbath by Dr. Marshall Lang, of Glasgow, on the historical and Divine personality of Christ as the founder and the centre of the evangelical faith, was a most admirable introduction to the engagements of the subsequent days.

THE OPENING MEETING

on Tuesday evening in the Music Hall was a memorable gathering. The fame of Rev. John McNeill, of London, and Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, drew together a vast concourse of the citizens of "Bon-Accord," and the great building was crowded to overflowing. The presence on the platform of many leading ministers and public men of the city showed that the Y.M.C A. in those parts has managed to reach the ear and gain the sympathy of the community. Lord Provost STEWART (who is a son-in-law of the venerable Principal Brown) presided and introduced the interesting business of the evening with some very acceptable and fitting remarks. Alluding to the catholicity of spirit that attaches to the Y.M.C.A., he said, within its borders no one is asked whether he is of Paul or of Apollos, but only whether he was of Christ. His Lordship gave a cordial welcome to the strangers and wished for all a time of much profit and soul refreshment.

THE EVANGELICAL FAITH AND CULTURE

was the topic assigned to Rev. JOHN SMITH, of Edinburgh, and he dealt with it in quite a masterly fashion. He began by claiming that questions of intellectual doubt can never be properly discussed or solved unless there is a desire on the part of Christian advocates to understand and to show due sympathy with the doubters. We were much struck with the correspondence between the position taken up on this point by Mr. Smith, and some of the reasonings he urged, and those put forward recently in Dr. Harrison's address to Church of England missioners at Harrow, reported in our columns. The inquiry (said Mr. Smith) is a very pressing one—how so many men and women who are themselves the product of a Christian civilisation have taken up an attitude of negative exception if not of active antagonism to the Evangelical. The immediate loss is a keen one to that faith itself, but the loss to these doubters and disbelievers and to the world at large is greater still. But there must be no unreasoning timidity as to the ultimate results. We can find much to justify the belief that in the not distant future,

> That in me which thinks and that which feels > Shall everlastingly be reconciled;
> And that which questioneth with that which kneels.

One grand distinction of the evangelical faith is that it teaches and emphasises the supremacy of the moral and the spiritual—the moral glory of God and his claims on man, the enormity of sin, the necessity of atonement, the eternal issues of conduct. Such a system must challenge the thought of every generation, and, of course, there is an added difficulty in the imperfect, onesided, and even spurious life realisations of the faith on the part of its confessors. We must insist on it that between the evangelical faith and culture there is no fundamental antagonism. Misconceptions are keeping men of culture aloof, and these misconceptions need to be removed. One of the most recent of these misconceptions is that the Christian faith is narrow and one-sided, and that the Christian conception of life is too limited for the conditions of the present time. Of course these questionings must have some validity, or they would not survive; but they bear not so much against the faith of Jesus Christ as the current realisations of that ideal. The spirit of Jesus Christ has never been incarnated as it will one day be incarnated in ordinary human life. It is a profound mistake, however, to think that the Christian faith is in any degree antiquated or out of date. In proof of the statement that it is not, we can point to poets, scientists, statesmen, and other illustrious men, living and dead, who with the greatest mental culture have united the simplest Christian faith. To a truly remarkable extent the great doers and thinkers of the age have drawn their inspiration from Christ. And round these colossi there is a host of shining ones in every walk of life, and on every plane of intellectual power, who, by thought and service and suffering, have proved that Christianity is

AS WIDE AS HUMANITY ITSELF.

Mr. Smith next dealt with another misconception on the part of "culture"—the calm assumption that every assertion of the supernatural is a delusive imagination. This assumption, he declared, amounted to nothing less than an intellectual tyranny. In the case of many, while the supernatural cannot be altogether ignored, it is emasculated so that atonement, renewal, and life in the Holy Ghost are eliminated. But such men have drawn their conclusions on insufficient grounds. This attitude of culture does not take account of every side of our complex human nature. It is untrue to fundamental fact. Let it project itself into the sphere of the moral with the same loyalty to truth that has characterised it in other spheres, and it will, despite itself, seek for an authoritative utterance from Him in whom, as Author of all, obligation centres in the last resort. An aroused conscience will not be satisfied with an emasculated Christianity, but will desire just those features that are most prominent in the evangelical faith—the demand of righteousness, the exposure of sin, the need of atonement, and all that follows therefrom.

Another unhappy misconception is embodied in the modern idea of humanitarianism, as opposed to evangelicalism. Here again we must make appeal to our cultured friends from professed Christians to the Christianity of Christ Himself. The very governing conceptions of the faith, in its early history, included the realms of society and politics. Even, to-day, the mightiest humanitarian force is the Christian faith. Where do we find our humanitarians, pure and simple, raising the sunken wrecks of our social life, and the waste and refuse of our civilisation to virtue and usefulness again! In the slums we shall find ten Salvationists for one Social Democrat, and a hundred burning Christians for one to whom this world is all, since there is no beyond. Even within the sphere of the political, the Spirit of Christ is acting as a mighty force in the public life of the nation. In closing his able and frequently applauded address, Mr. Smith said there was evidence enough to satisfy and to guide every man who had a willing heart. Men thought they were testing Christianity; but, in reality, it is Christ who is trying and testing them to the core of their being, and the true wisdom is that which yields to his Divine and irrefutable claims.

had a somewhat difficult task in following such a closely and powerfully reasoned argument; but he speedily put himself en rapport with his audience by a few genial pleasantries, and by the remark that he would leave Mr. Smith to carry the culture for both, and would attempt a humbler flight. Then he launched out into an eloquent and convincing exposition of the need and worth of the evangelical faith, in the life of to-day. He claimed to be a modern man, and to be abreast with all that is good in this century. Many theories and speculations are said to be "in the air," and for his part he preferred to keep them there. He magnified the "splendid dogmatism" of the Christian faith that comes to a young man, as it did to himself, in the greatest crisis of his life, and speaks the word of saving power.

This faith, then, spoke to him in sharp and overmastering terms, which to this day he loved, keen and cutting though they were, for his conscience responded to them. This evangelic faith gives a man a grand start in life, and is to him a bed-rock on which to stand. In illustration of this point, Mr. McNeill took up and briefly expounded the healing of the man with the withered hand, and how, through obedience to the splendid dogmatism of the command to stretch it forth, it was restored to vigour and power. In illustrating the power of the evangelical faith to restrain the irreverent analytical curiosity of the age, he made capital use of the story of Moses at the burning bush. He pictured Moses as saying, "I will now turn aside and see why." In this critical spirit people come to the Bible, or to the creation of God, and think they will "see why." If they would speculate about the bush not being consumed, let them take care they did not burn their fingers. Before Moses could get to the bush, he heard a voice: "I will give you better work to do; take off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place where thou standest is holy ground." So the evangelic faith makes men observe their proper distance and relation to God, and take a position where they could understand his glory and power without being consumed. Some people came to the human body, and found in it only brain, nerve, protoplasm; they saw not the divine flame that shone out through these. The evangelic faith saves us from this blindness that is so characteristic of the bold, irreverent inquiry of to-day. Then the faith not only gave him life for his own soul, but enabled him to assist in saving others. It is a lie deep as hell to say that evangelic Christians pay attention only to such intangible things as grace, salvation, faith, and pay no attention to the degraded society around them. This faith introduces a man to a great company of others like minded, who are going down to the bottom of society and becoming the saviours of their fellow men. This faith is at the root and centre of all true social and national reform, and every day is proving it more and more. Those false and spurious gospels that are not rooted in the cross of Christ and faith in Him are being discovered to be nothing but pinch-beck reprobate silver, which proclaims itself to be counterfeit. He trusted the Y.M.C.A. of our land would increasingly experience the need and worth of this grand evangelical faith, not only in their personal salvation, but in rescuing the perishing ones around.

This opening meeting of the Conference gave a high tone to all the proceedings, and, as the addresses of the two chief speakers of the evening were well reported in the local press, the influence and stimulus of their words will be felt through a wide circle in the North of Scotland.

MORAL AND SOCIAL DANGERS.

A very interesting discussion on this subject in its relation to our young men came off in the Christian Institute on Wednesday forenoon. It was introduced by an able and suggestive paper read by Mr. CHARLES J. GUTHRIE, a son of the far-famed Scottish divine, and a well-known advocate at the Edinburgh Bar. In appearance, Mr. Guthrie bears a very striking resemblance to his illustrious father, and it is pleasant to find the son following the footsteps of such an honoured sire. Admitting the existence of special moral and social dangers to young men in the full flow of our modern life, Mr. Guthrie asked whether we were to regard the triumph of these evils as inevitable. Is purity of life to be impossible to all but those of riper years? A thousand times No! Remember the French proverb, which young men might well take as a watchword in things temporal and spiritual: "It is difficult; it is done. It is impossible; I will attempt it." Away with the soul-destroying doctrine that every young man must "sow his wild oats." Here there must be no compromise and no surrender. We will insist on a moral obligation to purity of life as resting equally on both sexes.

The best counteractive to these moral and social dangers is to leave them no time to operate. Let the leisure hours be filled with that change of occupation which will at once interest the mind, recreate the body, and preserve the heart. Those who are so occupied will have no time or appetite for questionable amusements, or even for an excess of innocent recreations. Let every young man have a hobby—half-a-dozen of them rather than none. They may be scientific, antiquarian, artistic, musical, literary. Then there is much philanthropic work to be done; such as temperance effort, so much needed. Drink is so closely bound up with other forms of evil that abstinence from it will save a young man from many a snare. Best of all, let there be direct religious work in connection with the churches, in the Sabbath-school, and in other ways. Thus the young man will not only preserve himself from the evils that press around him, but will take a worthy and noble part in the true work of the world.

THE DISCUSSION

that followed was very lively and interesting. It related mainly to the dangers that come to young men through the drink curse, and the gambling propensities of modern society. There were some very earnest protests from delegates against the wide-spread mania for betting, and it was broadly hinted that this evil is not dissociated with athletic sports, such as football. Some of the speakers condemned in extreme language all secular agencies in connection with Y.M.C.A. work, while others defended their cautious use as a means of drawing the young away from the public-house and the billiard saloon. One speaker inveighed strongly against the habit of making a business of pleasure, so that the very occupations of life are tainted with this unwholesome craving. It appeared from the statements made that gambling with cards is not infrequent in railway trains in Scotland, and an earnest desire was expressed that this source of temptation should be removed. On the positive side of the discussion valuable counsel was given to young men to fortify themselves by Bible study and by simplicity of life. Mr. OATTS, of Glasgow, uttered a few faithful words on the work of the White Cross Society, and Lord KINNAIRD wisely closed the conversation by claiming freedom for young men, especially in our great cities, to conserve their physical health by proper recreation, which can be done and ought to be done apart from the taint of gambling or betting. He added that when the higher and spiritual elements of life are properly cultivated, such secondary matters will find their legitimate place.

The chairman of the hour, Mr. SINCLAIR, of Partick, told how on entering the marriage relation he had laid down the life axiom never to engage in anything or to go to any place where he would be ashamed to have the co-operation or companionship of his wife. He commended that idea as one full of safeguards to the young man.

CONSECRATED YOUTH.

A very earnest and practical address on the power of a consecrated life, as illustrated by the career of Daniel, was given at noon by Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR, of the Free East Church, Aberdeen. He regarded consecration as a deliberate decision and crisis in the spiritual experience that gives a direction and impulse to the life. It involves the surrender of everything that would hinder; and this surrender must be thorough and whole hearted. Of course it implies an utter renunciation of all known sin and separation from all that is "of the world," as opposed to that which is of Christ. It implies also an enlistment in the service of Christ, and a full submission to his will in all things. These points were well illustrated by some references to the career of the prophet, statesman, captive, Daniel. Then it was shown how such a consecration of heart and life gives one power with God in prayer, and power with men in active service on their behalf. It gives rest and joy of soul and endurance in faithful testimony. Single-mindedness and unflinching courage are qualities that go with true consecration.

The remainder of this devotional hour was given to humiliation of soul before God, and earnest, trusting prayer that He would accept the renewed dedication of his servants. A few pathetic words of sympathy and cheer fell from the lips of the aged Principal Brown, who dismissed the hushed assembly with the benediction.

A BUSINESS MEETING, in the afternoon, afforded the opportunity for some interesting and hopeful reports of Y.M.C.A. work up and down the country. Mr. R. Henderson Smith, the travelling secretary for Scotland, and Mr. C. Rogers, the Association evangelist, also made interesting statements as to their respective departments of service for young men. The special Week of Prayer was fixed for November 2—9.

A MISSIONARY MEETING

in the Free West Church, in the evening, largely attended, gave a very happy conclusion to the public gatherings of the Convention. Lord Kinnaird, who presided, said he believed it was the first meeting of the kind in connection with the Scottish Y.M.C.A., and he looked on it as a very hopeful omen for the future usefulness of the Association. He told of various branches that were sustaining special missionary effort in the foreign field, and hoped that this occasion would lend a great stimulus to that important work.

In a practical and well-considered address on the scope and claims of missions on young men, Mr. ANDERSON, of Ardrossan, showed the universal application of our Lord's command to evangelise "every creature" in the world. While the missionary may use all auxiliary efforts that are likely to prove of service, his supreme duty is to declare the Gospel of Christ in all its fulness. The great and crying need of the heathen fields was urged as a strong incentive to missionary devotion. It was also pointed out that slackness in foreign missionary zeal inevitably brings leanness of soul and paralysis of effort at home. Then the special claims of this service upon young men were faithfully pressed home, and an appeal made for consecration on behalf of the perishing heathen.

This statement of the question from the abstract point of view was admirably strengthened and illustrated by the two closing addresses from actual missionaries—Rev. T. T. Matthews, of Madagascar, and Dr. Kerr-Cross, of Nyassaland. The former fiercely condemned what he considered the false idea of thinking to evangelise the heathen by mere humanitarian methods. He protested still more strongly against the gospel of gin that professedly Christian nations are carrying to the natives in heathen lands. A protest also came from Mr. Matthews as to the French protectorate arrangement in Madagascar, though he expressed great confidence in the stability of mission work in the island. Some very striking figures were given as to the truly wonderful strides that missionary effort has made among the Malagasy within recent years, and the impression left by the speaker's words was to the effect that this island of the African sea will yet be a bright jewel in the crown of the Saviour of mankind.

Dr. KERR-CROSS presented in a most fascinating way some life pictures illustrating his five years' work as a medical missionary among the natives of the Nyassa region.

His account was also of the most encouraging character, both as to results achieved and future prospects.

THE SOCIAL ELEMENT

was by no means forgotten in connection with this gathering of young men. The delegates from a distance were kindly entertained in Aberdeen households, and everybody was loud in praise of northern hospitality. A public luncheon on Wednesday at the expense of Mr. Murray Garden, an Aberdeen advocate, gave the opportunity for social fellowship and the exchange of hearty Christian greetings. On Wednesday afternoon ex-Provost Henderson gracefully entertained the members of the Conference, and also a number of ladies connected with the Y.W.C.A., at his pleasant residence, Devanha House, and an exceedingly pleasant time was passed. On the Thursday morning, the delegates were entertained to breakfast, and the same day they visited Inchmarlo, up the lovely valley of the Dee, by invitation of the proprietor, Mr. Davidson, an earnest Christian gentleman. We should say that altogether the memories of this Aberdeen Convention will be many and happy and helpful.

YOUNG WOMEN'S CONFERENCE, ABERDEEN.

Some Conference meetings took place in Aberdeen on Tuesday week in connection with the Young Women's Christian Association. The interest was shown by large attendances, chiefly of ladies. Mr. DAVIDSON, of Inchmarlo, presided, and at the morning gathering gave his own personal experience in the matter of salvation. He gave some words of warning against loose views as to the Bible doctrine of eternal punishment and the Fatherhood of God.

Among those who spoke during the day were Rev. J. Smith, Dufftown; Mr. W. T. Paton, London; Sir R. Phayre, Mr. J. Anderson, Aberdeen; and Mr. Seagram, London. The addresses included such practical topics as "Service," and were found to be stimulating and strengthening to those engaged in Christian work among our young women.

THE "WELCOME HOME" at the Royal Naval Station of Simon's Town, South Africa, is one outcome of present-day efforts to reach men in the army and navy. In order, however, to ensure the permanent stability and greater success of the institution, it is necessary to provide more suitable premises with ampler accommodation, large numbers of men being turned away at times for want of room. Towards the sum needed to do this, £225 has already been subscribed, but this is not a tithe of the amount required to complete the scheme. Explanatory circulars, giving full references, will gladly be sent by the treasurer, Rev. Ellis J. Williams, Glanmorfa, Barmouth, Merionethshire.

For the Young.

"I NEVER SAW IT LIKE THAT BEFORE."

BY WILLIAM LUFF.

A YOUNG man I know, who is now pastor of several village churches, was one day holding services for the young in London. He took for his subject, "Believing," and a wonderful subject it is. I have just looked it up myself, and have come to the conclusion that nothing can be of greater importance, and the following texts have led me to this conclusion.

"He that cometh to God must believe that He is" (Heb. xi. 6).

"This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent" (John vi. 29).

"This is his commandment, that we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ" (1 John iii. 23).

"Ye believe in God, believe also in Me" (John xiv. 1).

"By Him all that believe are justified from all things" (Acts xiii. 39).

"We believe that through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved" (Acts xv. 11).

"Unto you therefore which believe He is precious" (1 Peter ii. 7).

"These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God" (1 John v. 13).

After the meeting was over, my friend spoke to a young girl about fourteen years old, and asked, "Do you believe in Jesus?"

"Oh! yes, sir, I do."

Her answer was true; but not true in the sense in which our evangelist meant.

Did she believe Jesus was her Saviour? No.

Did she believe that He saved her? No.

Did she believe that she was saved? No.

That he was not misjudging her was proved by her answer to his second question.

"Then, you are really saved through Jesus?"

"Oh! no, sir, I couldn't say that."

Just how many stop half way: they say that they believe; but they do not believe they are saved by their believing.

"Lend me your Bible," said my friend, and, turning to John iii. 36, read:—"He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life."

"You are there told by Christ Himself that every one who believeth hath everlasting life."

She looked at the words, God the Holy Spirit gave her eyes to see that such was there meaning.

"Well, I never saw that verse like that before," she exclaimed. No, she had seen it; but never saw it like that before.

It is wonderful how different texts look when we see them through the glass of faith. Let us try two or three.

"Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree" (1 Peter ii. 24). While we look at the sentence without a personal interest in it we do not notice much beauty; but when faith reads "my" into it, we say: "I never saw that verse like that before."

"He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities, the chatisement of our peace was upon Him, and with his stripes we are healed" (Isa. liii. 5). To an ordinary reader the words are very familiar; but when faith reads "with his stripes I am healed," we exclaim, "Well, I never saw that verse like that before."

"So many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name" (John i. 12). Without the glass of faith that is far-off and general, with the glass of faith it becomes so near that it is personal, and the new-born son of God cries, "I believe, and therefore am a son."

Full of her new vision, our lassie went home and told her mother, finishing her story with, "Mother, I never saw that verse like that before."

That mother wrote to my friend, telling him that on that evening she was coming to the meeting herself; but, as her daughter was nearing her fifteenth birthday, and she was anxious she should not pass it unsaved, she thought she would send her, and stop at home herself and pray.

"I could see directly she came home that the prayer was answered," she wrote.

The last my friend heard of that young girl was that she had joined herself to God's people, and was daily seeing in her Lord and in his Word beauties she had never seen before. Have you seen your salvation in the verse so blessed to her. Look!

"He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him" (John iii. 36).

CONSIDER THE LILIES.

Said the corn to the lilies,
"Press not near my feet;
You are only lilies,
Neither corn nor wheat:
Does one earn a living
Just by being sweet?"

Naught answered the lilies,
Neither yea nor nay,
Only they grew sweeter
All the livelong day;
And at last the Teacher
Chanced to come that way.

Whilst his tired disciples
Rested at his feet,
And the proud corn rustled,
Bidding them to eat,
"Children," said the Teacher
"The life is more than meat.

"Consider now the lilies,
How beautiful they grow!
Never king had such glory,
Yet no toil they know."
Oh, happy were the lilies
That He loved them so!

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Sept. 21, John xviii. 1—14; Mon., Sept. 22, John xviii. 15—27; Tues., Sept. 23, John xviii. 28—40; Wed., Sept. 24, John xix. 1—15; Thurs., Sept. 25, John xix. 16—30; Fri., Sept. 26, John xix. 31—42; Sat., Sept. 27, John xx. 1—18.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. T. L. Sayer, St. George's Presbyterian Church, Brondesbury, Sept. 21 to Oct. 3. Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Exhibition Hall, Belfast, Oct. 3—5. Mr. H. Hutchinson, St. Benedict's, Everton, near Liverpool, Sept. 27 to Oct. 5.

The meetings for seaside reports will take place at Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, W., on Monday, Oct. 13, afternoon and evening.

A STEAMER FOR THE VICTORIA NYANZA.—Messrs. A. and J. Inglis, Paint-house, Glasgow, are constructing a small steamer for the British East Africa Company for the navigation of the Victoria Nyanza. The vessel is in an advanced stage, and when completed will be forwarded viâ Mombasa.

MR. SPURGEON ON BURIAL REFORM.—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, writing to Rev. F. Lawrence, hon. sec. of the Church of England Burial, Funeral, and Mourning Association, says:—"I hardly think it can be needful to say that the expending of money on mere show at funerals is absurd, unthrifty, and even cruel. I hope the common sense of the people will soon destroy customs which oppress the widow and fatherless by demanding of them an expenditure which they cannot afford. Something has been done in the right direction, but I fear your society for funeral reform has yet to battle with prejudices which are hard to overcome; and when these are conquered, there will speedily spring up another host of extravagances. I wish you good success in a reform so evidently demanded."

Types of Russian Stundists.

A FEW years ago Yakov Gordin, an able and accomplished Russian journalist, contributed some interesting studies of Stundists to a well-known Petersburg newspaper. He had visited the Stundist villages, studied the character of the inhabitants, the details of their lives, the circumstances that led to their conversion, and so vigorously written were his sketches, so life-like, so true to nature, so closely resembling what I myself know of these believers, that I think it better to reproduce some of Gordin's types than portray others myself.

IVAN TCHAIKA.

Ivan Tchaika had always been a pious peasant. No one in the village prayed so earnestly; no one bought such costly icons; no one went so often on pilgrimage to Kieff. To hear him talk, one knew that in him burnt a sort of spiritual fire which could not be extinguished. All the time he felt that there was some void in his nature, some unsatisfactoriness; he felt that he was not completely able to fulfil his Christian duty, that his Heavenly Father was not satisfied with him. His strivings for peace were all in vain. Neither splendid church services, nor lowly genuflections, nor solitary prayer, nor the aid of holy relics, gave him the wished-for comfort.

A certain Ystim Dolgolenko had married Ivan's sister. Alas! at this time Ivan heard that Ystim and his wife Olena had burnt their icons, and had ceased to attend the church. Ivan, an "orthodox" Christian, was sadly troubled with this news, and he went to his relatives to endeavour to place them on the true path. But instead of converting Ystim, Ystim converted him, and Ivan became a Stundist. At first the sundering of old connections caused him terrible sufferings. The inner warfare, the doubts that harrowed his soul, the knockings of conscience, gave him no quiet. He had terrible dreams at night, of saints who exhorted him, of demons who tormented him. Terrible pictures arose before him of tortures which he had heard were inflicted on those who were untrue to the faith. Sleepless nights and troubling doubts that he had done right made Tchaika almost unrecognisable. His face grew pale and thoughtful, his eyes became deeper and hid an unusual fire, he sought solitude and became strange in his ways.

A week or two afterwards his only son died. His wife tried to show him that this terrible blow was proof how wrathful the saints were that he had changed his religion. But the sorrow-stricken father hastened to Ystim, and Ystim, by reading and explaining consolatory passages of the holy Scriptures, quieted him and healed him of his wound. To all Ivan's questions and doubtings, Ystim found suitable answer or direction. In time Tchaika became strengthened and grounded in the faith. From his inward warfare he came out a victor.

Now Ivan has learned to read and write since his conversion, and when you call upon him he is surely reading the Gospels, large portions of which he has learned by heart. One day, wishing to have a chat with him, I said, "Well, Ivan, at first you were rather frightened at the change?" and I smiled.

Ivan, measuring me quietly with a majestic look, answered, "Ah, sir, why do you smile at us? It was indeed a frightful wrench to turn from the Church, from the popes, from fasts, from the saints, the icons, and the holy days—but still, I drew away from them. And you, sir, would it not be hard for you to turn at once from your habits, from your various ways?"

"But why be so strange with me? Why do you call me 'sir'?"

"Ah!" he replied, "you are a learned man, you know many sciences, how can you be our brother? We are people in the dark."

"Quite so," I answered, "and we wish to enlighten you, to love you, we wish that you might not estrange yourself from us."

Said Ivan, "Listen, and I will tell you something straight out. Until you come to us with a living faith, with Christian love, until you come to us with the Gospel in your hands and the words of the Saviour on your lips, we cannot accept you, we cannot love you, and your words and good intentions we cannot believe."

Then he took from his pocket a little book, and I heard him singing from it the following song:—

Come into my garden, there is much work:
There are few labourers, and the fruit is abundant;
The harvest is ready to be garnered,
The corn to be divided from the straw.
It is time for the ingathering.

'Tis time likewise to plough the fields,
To sow them for another harvest.
Come who will, I shall joy over all;
Come, partake, the vineyard is ready.
To the work! To the work!

YSTIM DOLGOLENKO.

Ystim Dolgolenko was a peasant, tall in height, broad-shouldered, brown-eyed, intelligent-looking, with strong, thick nose, enormous moustaches, and speaking through his nose. Ystim was the village poet, punster, and funny man, its satirist and musician. He would sing you couplets about the pope* and the pope's wife, about the archdeacon and the nun, and so on. He was the greatest scamp, drunkard, and brawler in the village, the best wrestler, the strongest mower, the cleverest workman. But at bottom his character was soft, and his heart sound. He was open and straightforward and always truthful. He had considerable humour, and a tongue that cut like a razor. To play practical jokes on the village elder, on the pope or other village authority, to circulate at their expense an anecdote or nickname, so that they might incur ridicule throughout the neighbourhood—this was Ystim's favourite pleasure.

He was a confirmed gambler, and more than once beggared himself at cards. When he had money he treated everyone who wished to drink, and fed everyone who wished to eat. He would have given his last copeck to a needy person, and never refused assistance to anyone who came to him. Notwithstanding his sharp tongue, everyone in the village loved him. In their cottages the villagers would tell one another of his pranks, repeat his puns, and sing his songs. Notwithstanding his gigantic strength, he was often taken advantage of; but this never annoyed him; he never remembered an ill-turn done him.

Still it went badly with him, from bad to worse. The Hebrew publican in the village was the only gainer. Poor Ystim drank his cow, his horse, his cottage, his crops; he mortgaged his land even, and he himself and his wife went to the German colony in the neighbourhood to seek work. His German neighbours knew him as a splendid workman, and his wife, whom he often beat now, as an excellent housekeeper, and, therefore, they gave them good work and assigned them a high rate of wages. Two years Ystim served, never drinking, restraining himself in all, and then returned to his village with money in his pockets. He bought a cottage, and evidently his intention was to live soberly and quietly. But the old associations were too strong to resist, and he relapsed into his old drunken ways.

Close to Ystim's new house there lived a religious man, whom the villagers used to call an "evangelical." It would be difficult to count all the anecdotes, couplets, nicknames, and buffooneries circulated by Ystim at the expense of this Stundist neighbour of his. Once Ystim, returning late at night from the drink-shop, with an unfinished bottle of brandy in his hands, and a large stock of vapour in his head, noticed that there was a light in his neighbour's window. In two seconds he had opened the door, and entering the cottage, found it filled with men and women. They had been singing hymns, but on the arrival of such a guest they were all silent. Ystim, at the top of his voice, sang a snatch of one of his drinking songs, and accompanied his song with dancing.

An "evangelical" present, a woman still young, with pale face and large, shining eyes, looked steadily at Ystim. She drew upon herself the eyes of all present; her lips moved, and then her body began to tremble as in an ague. Ystim looked at her and grew sober. The woman threw herself on her knees; all the congregation did likewise. "O merciful God," she said; "O Jesus, our Saviour, until now Thou hast been our helper; without thy help we would have been weak, and as shepherdless sheep, as orphans without father and mother. Behold, O Lord, how we are scattered about on the earth; see how we are sinful and vicious before Thee. O Lord, support us, and give us of thy strength. Make it possible for us to fulfil thy holy laws; lead us, our Saviour, in the narrow path. Open our eyes, that we may see among what shadows we wander. Soften our hearts, that we may love those near to us. Be merciful to all sinners here before Thee, and do not punish them as law-breakers, for we are all so weak and helpless, unless Thou strengthen us." Many, especially of the sisters, wept. Ystim was pale, and his heart melted within him. Then the whole meeting sang this song:—

Come, friend, to Jesus,
Just as you are with all your sins;
He will cleanse the soul.
Do not fear; why be affrighted?

Ystim was a changed man. He wished to cry, whether from pain or pleasure he knew not. A strange, new, unexpected feeling possessed him. His warm heart beat powerfully. The feelings of love and remorse filled his whole being. Just then another visitor entered the meeting, one of the evangelicals this time. He greeted all the brethren, and, approaching Ystim, he said to him, in kind, warm tones: "Well, little brother, how are you? May peace be with you." Then he took big Ystim in his arms and kissed him. This was too much for Ystim, for his tears were coming like hail. He threw himself on his knees before the whole assembly: "Oh, my dear brothers, my little sisters, forgive me...I didn't know...I thought..."

Ystim Dolgolenko is now one of the most pious and respected of the Stundists. He leads a temperate and reasonable life. He has taught himself to read and write, and is counted one of the most talented of the Stundist preachers. A few hymns he has set to music, and at the meetings no one sings so well, and no one prays so often or so earnestly as Ystim. His wife is blooming and fresh again, and he and she live together like doves.

SEDGLEY TEMPERANCE HOME MISSION.—Large open-air services have been held in Sedgley and surrounding villages during June, July, and August. Addresses have been given by Alderman F. A. Homer, J.P., the founder of the Mission; Mr. and Mrs. Woolley, the singing evangelists, and other friends. Crowds of people heard the Gospel, and great blessing has attended the word.

MISS PAPILLON'S SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, SANDGATE.—Mr. H. Hull, missionary, writes to say that, a day or two before the 16th Lancers started for India (September 3), he distributed the New Testaments which friends had kindly supplied. "The expressions of gratitude were innumerable; and three men professed serious concern about their eternal welfare. One of the wives confessed Christ a week before embarkation. When the train steamed out, many of the men declared they would keep the Testaments till their return. Of the poor wives left behind, some were married off the strength of the regiment, and therefore not provided for by the Government." One, aged 22, with two children, was specially distressed; and, encouraged by some friends, Mr. Hull is endeavouring to get her into a wash-house, where the may earn her living until her husband's return, two years hence.

PASTEUR GUILLAUME LECOAT,

Of the Breton Evangelical Mission.

THE subject of our sketch this week is in many respects a very interesting person. A convert from Romanism, he unfolds to Roman Catholics the Gospel of salvation through Christ alone. A native of Brittany, he carries on important operations among his own people, having been enabled to help in the development of a Mission which, a good while ago, was blessed of God to his own spiritual enlightenment. He has made good proof of a lengthened ministry in a sphere calling for unremitting labour.

Guillaume Lecoat was born at Tremel, Côtes-du-Nord, in 1845, and at the age of ten received his first communion in the Romish Church. His parents were poor, and his bringing up was by no means calculated to stimulate him to a life of religious independence and mental energy. Dressed in catskins and wearing a hat which had done duty in a previous generation, he went as a small and timid child to a school which was superintended by priests, by whom, as is the case to-day, the interesting little province was quite overrun. He early attracted the attention of the curate, who encouraged him to think that one day he would enter the charmed circle of the priesthood. These influences surrounded young Lecoat until he reached the age of fifteen, when a Breton evangelist, named Guillon, visited his home, and explained the Word of God to his mother and other inquiring women.

Taught to be suspicious of the Protestants, the youth instinctively kept out of the way of the evangelist, but curiosity led him to listen behind the door to the conversation that passed. Hearing talk of the Bible he cherished an ardent desire to possess a copy, and had the great joy of receiving a French copy from the hands of the devoted evangelist. He at once commenced a course of daily reading. The priest got to know what had taken place, and, in order to remove the inquiring youth from evangelical influences, decided to send him as soon as possible to the Seminary.

As a preliminary step, Lecoat, who had learned French, paid periodical visits to the priest's house for lessons in Latin. Already, however, he had come to see some of the errors of Rome. He had amongst other things learned that Christ requires sinners to be "born again"; moreover, a brief examination of a manual of confession had given him a disgust of the discipline of the Romish Church. While grateful to the priest, M. Le Gall, for his affection and interest, the youth intimated his unwillingness to enter upon a collegiate course. As the priest died shortly afterwards, Lecoat felt himself more free than might otherwise have been the case to act upon his strengthening convictions.

In 1860, along with his mother, M. Lecoat was admitted by Rev. G. Jenkins to the membership of the Baptist church at Morlaix. For two years he walked the entire distance to and from Morlaix, twenty-seven miles, every Saturday, and sometimes more frequently, to take lessons kindly given by Mr. William Monod and M. Bouhon. Afterwards, through the generosity of some friends in Wales to whom the case was commended by Mr. Jenkins, a professor at the college of Morlaix assisted him in educational improvement. Subsequently, through the initiative of Mr. Monod, he entered the Normal School at Courbevoie. A season of illness was followed by good health, and hard work and steady application brought its reward on examination day, when Lecoat found himself first in a school of 232. Then came bad health, exhausting disease, and a hovering between life and death for forty days. It looked as though Lecoat had no sphere of usefulness to fill in the world. Having passed through two hospitals, the patient was, in 1866, sent to his native Brittany, as it was said, "to die among his friends."

But God was disposing in a way that surprised everyone who watched the case. There was work for the young man to do, so he did not die. When he arrived at Tremel he was so altered in appearance that his friends did not recognise him. The best doctors of Paris had given him up, but the great Physician came to his aid. Gradually something like old vigour returned. Having no intention of remaining in Brittany, Lecoat took steps to secure a position as schoolmaster in Paris; but Mr. Jenkins bespoke his temporary help in evangelisation in his native province. After a time he resolved once and for all to leave for Paris on May 8, 1867, but the night before the day of starting he was seized with an attack of cholera.

Taking this to be God's intimation that he was to stay in Brittany, he decided to devote his life to Gospel work among his countrymen. He communicated his determination to Mr. Jenkins, on whose recommendation the Baptist Missionary Society at once accepted him as one of their agents.

On the death of Mr. Jenkins, in 1873, the Breton mission field was divided into three parts; the son of Mr. Jenkins superintended Morlaix and neighbourhood towards Brest; M. Bouhon had St. Brieuc; and M. Lecoat was put in charge of Tremel and district. This state of things continued until 1886, when the Baptist Missionary Society, desiring to extend their important undertakings in Asia and Africa, withdrew from work in Brittany, except at Morlaix. A new organisation was therefore founded, called the Breton Evangelical Mission, for the purpose of carrying on the work at Tremel, which sphere was specially interesting, as its director was a native, and himself a convert of the Mission. The Baptist Missionary Society showed its sympathy with the new movement by allowing the newly constructed Mission the use of its buildings at Tremel and Pont Menou.

The country is steeped in Romanism: priests and nuns are everywhere, and hold the ignorant people in fear for time and eternity. Needless to say that the agents of Rome do their utmost to keep Gospel light and liberty at a distance.

In reality the religion of Breton-speaking Brittany, with a population of 2,500,000, is a mixture of Romanism and Druidism. Fixing her crucifixes and images on the venerated menhirs and using the dolmens for her altars, Rome has led the people to transfer their idolatry from the one to the other, and, what with the abounding superstition, it may be questioned whether there is any part of Europe so covered in darkness and sunk in error. M. Lecoat and his wife (who is English on her father's side, an excellent linguist, and a valiant fellow-worker) have fought many a battle for freedom, and to-day the Mission is known far and wide as an established institution. Year by year souls are being added to the Church of Christ, through the various agencies employed. The Gospel is preached at stated towns and villages, there are several schools, a hospital, and an orphanage. To-day the whole country is opening, and from all sides requests are being made for instruction in evangelical truth.

Besides discharging the duties of pastor and evangelist, M. Lecoat does much to interest others in Brittany and its people. He has represented the latter at congresses of learned societies, and has from time to time made known their wants in Government circles. In consideration of this he enjoys special privileges, which enable him to preach in places where others would have to be silent. He has written and translated many tracts; but, best of all, he has given his people a translation of the Bible in their own tongue; this has recently been published by the Trinitarian Bible Society.

Of late several new friends have come to the aid of the Mission, after seeing it in working during summer visits to Brittany. Those who cannot visit this interesting province in person may know something of its life by reading Pasteur Lecoat's little monthly paper Le Tremelois. Up to the present the committee has been able with great difficulty to keep the work going. M. and Madame Lecoat visit England in the month of May each year to make known what the Lord has permitted and empowered them to do. They were recently here, and addressed several meetings. Dr. E. B. Underhill is chairman of the committee, the hon. sec. being Rev. Dr. Bullinger, Bremgarten, Woking, Surrey.

ACHILL ISLAND Y.W.C.A.—Religious work in Ireland is not confined to districts where Protestants are numerous and to large and populous centres, but is also being carried on in remote and out-of-the-way places like Achill Island, where a branch of the Y.W.C.A., recently started, has now fifty-eight members. These take a great interest in missionary work at home and abroad, and have already forwarded to Dublin a large amount of needlework, which they make up at their monthly meetings, in aid of missions in China.

IMPERIAL MISSION HALL, HANLEY.—In the midst of a teeming population this hall ought to be an important centre of spiritual life and vigour. The various agencies have recently been reorganised by Messrs. Middleton and Hogben, not without great difficulty, however, as those who are best acquainted with the value of the Mission are least able to forward its operations by financial aid. Since the opening of the building in March last 200 persons have signed the temperance pledge, and some have testified to the converting power of the Gospel of the Grace of God. An effort is now being made to extinguish the debt (£3500) on the hall, and it is hoped that the appeal will not be made in vain, so that this spacious building—one of the largest mission halls in the provinces—may not revert to music hall and circus purposes. The treasurer of the Mission is Mr. Ambrose Wood, architect, Regent-road, Hanley.

Carlisle Convention.

LONG before the closing meeting was the power of the Spirit felt, and from the first gathering (which we reported last week) to the end, the interest deepened as the Convention went on.

Mr. Robert Wilson presided at all the meetings, reading a suitable portion of Scripture, generally accompanied by a few expository remarks.

The service of praise was led by the Secretary, Mr. C. I. Clapperton, who worked hard in conjunction with Rev. W. Sheppard, of St. John's Church, the local convener, in making all the arrangements. What this involves only those can realise who have tried it.

A healthy token was the good attendance at the early morning meetings. At these gatherings the addresses were both helpful and instructive, and this was the more important inasmuch as many were present who were debarred by business duties from attending later in the day.

PRINCIPAL ADDRESSES.

The first speaker on Tuesday was Rev. ALEX. CRAWFURD, of Glasgow, who took as his theme —"The glory of that Light" (Acts xxii. 11). The centre of that light, which was "above the brightness of the sun," was the risen Christ, who Himself "is Light." All who "would see Jesus" must look for Him where He is—seated in the glory, and whence He will speak to those who, like Saul, are stricken down and constrained to cry, "Who art Thou, Lord? What wilt Thou have me to do?" If we "walk in the light as He is in the light," we shall seek those things which are pleasing in His sight; not like Hezekiah, who asked for long life on earth (which resulted in pride of heart, and the birth of a wicked son); but such a gift as is described in Psalm xxi. 4. "He asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever."

That life is in the glory of his presence—"Thou wilt show me the path of life; in thy presence is fulness of joy, and at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore" (Psalm xvi. 11). When we come to find that it is Christ who is speaking, we should, like Saul, realise how hard it is to "kick against the pricks"; and the more fully we follow the light here the more we shall enjoy the glory of that light in His presence hereafter.

Rev. E. W. MOORE followed with some thoughts on the qualities and the functions of the dew, as illustrating what is embraced by the gracious promise of God given in Hosea xiv. 5, 6. Israel was like a scorched and sterile wilderness instead of being like "the garden of the Lord." The prophet had been commanded to utter severe and stern denunciations, but underlying all was God's great heart of love, as is illustrated here. The stems upon which the speaker clustered his thoughts were as follows:—

The dew falls (1) Sovereignly, as of old it fell on the fleece or on the ground according to the will of God. So is the working of the Holy Spirit. What need for watchfulness, therefore, lest it should be missed. (2) Silently, but none the less certainly. Imperceptible as is the act of its falling, yet its presence and effects are unmistakable. God in nature has made provision that before the falling rain the

to receive the heaven-sent shower. This the gardener cannot do, who, waterpot in hand, besprinkles his plants. Conventions and other aids to spiritual growth may, as it were, furnish a refreshing shower, but only the Holy Spirit can open the hearts to receive the blessing in its fulness. (3) Copiously. See the description given in 2 Sam. xvii. 11, 12, where it fell with what might be termed overwhelming force; in such abundance that modern travellers have in the morning found their tents literally drenched with the dew. God is willing so to bestow his blessing that it should, so to speak, carry everything before it, and it is for his children to decide individually how far they will yield to Him for this purpose. Then, again, the dew exerts (4) a mollifying influence—a picture of the working of the Holy Spirit with hard and rebellious hearts. (5) It adorns the objects upon which it falls, causing them to shine like diamonds in the sunshine. So, too, may the life of the Christian be made beautiful now, shining in a dark world here, and hereafter "as the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars for ever and ever." (6) It induces rapid growth ("as the lily"). Many persons have been believers in the Lord Jesus Christ for many years, but have perchance grown but little. Sailors do not measure distance by the length of time they have been at sea; circumstances may arise to hinder progress. Yet the healthy growth spoken of by the prophet is not of a "mushroom" nature; it has (7) stability, with "roots as Lebanon." Naturalists tell us that many trees spread forth their branches in exact proportion to the extent of their roots beneath the ground. What better could we have than this! (Eph. iii. 17, iv. 15; 2 Pet. iii. 18). In proportion as we strike our roots by communion with God in private, so shall we present to the world a tree bearing fruit well-pleasing unto Him. As we grow downwards so shall we grow upwards, and be able to withstand both storm and wind (Col. i. 23).

IDEAL OF CHRISTIAN GROWTH

Time prevented Mr. Moore from proceeding to expound the further effects of the dew, as shown in the following verses; but it was felt that what he had said provided food for private reflection, which, if lived out, should have a marked effect in the lives of his audience.

In the evening Rev. S. A. SELWYN, of Hatcham, gave a practical and telling address upon the lament of Job (xxix. 2)—"Oh, that I were as in months past!" Very aptly coupling this with Mr. Moore's words upon "healthy growth," he pictured the occupants of a hospital ward, having life, but with certain faculties undeveloped, paralysed, or diseased. So do we find some Christians, with their spiritual sight or hearing impaired, or walking lamely, with imperfect and uncertain gait. Such perhaps may be impelled to exclaim, "Oh, that I were as in months past, when I heard the voice of God, discerned his will, and walked in his way!"

SPIRITUAL INFIRMITY.

(1) Its signs:—Lost assurance; irritability; a seared conscience; zeal for service chilled. On these points Mr. Selwyn spoke some very searching words, especially showing how a deadened conscience would affect the entire life. The ship's thermometer falls long before the iceberg appears in view; but if it be damaged, the danger may be discovered only when too late. So is it with the sensitiveness of the conscience; once impaired, its usefulness is gone.

(2) Its causes: First and foremost, "Defect in Bible study and prayer." Here Mr. Selwyn emphasized strongly the thoughts of the morning meeting concerning the relation of the upward growth to that beneath the ground. Again, "Bad food," such as mere emotional religion; Christ without the cross (ignoring the atonement; the very reason why the Jews sought to kill Jesus was that he "made Himself equal with God"). "Worldliness"—and here Mr. Selwyn very solemnly urged Christians present not to cast away their peace by conforming to the world. If you do, he said, you will not get it back again just when you want it. God will punish you first.

Lastly, "Idols," whether the idol be love for a thing, or even hatred for a person—anything, in short, that we are unwilling to give up.

(3) The Remedy for all this is found in John xx. 19, where JESUS spake the word of peace to his disciples.

Some practical thoughts upon "The floor, the fan, and the fire" (Matt. iii. 11, 12) then came from Mr. MOORE, who showed that only wheat can stand the process of winnowing; that wheat has weight (illustrating the solid peace of the true believer) and value (Cf. Ps. xlix. 3; lxxii. 14; 1 Pet. i. 19). Referring to Mr. Selwyn's words concerning worldliness, the speaker said that people's tastes indicate what they are, and quoted the case of a churchwarden who defended theatre-going to Rev. Rowland Hill on the ground that he "only went now and then for a treat." The great preacher replied, "We know what bird it is that FEEDS ON CARRION FOR A TREAT!"

Speaking of the "fan" (or "scoop"), used to throw the grain into the wind that the chaff might be blown away, Mr. Moore showed that affliction was often so used by God that the soul might be brought under the influences of the Holy Spirit for purification. Then, in order that the "fire" might fall (as in 1 Kings xviii. 38), the following essentials must be observed:—(1) Idols abandoned (v. 30); (2) Altar of the Lord repaired; (3) Sacrifices offered (a, Acceptance of Christ's atonement; b, Rom. xii. 1); (4) Prayer. Then, as with Elijah, the presence of the fire will be unmistakable.

On Wednesday the principal speaker was Rev. W. S. STANDEN, who described the several operations of the Spirit recorded in the Epistle to the Galatians. From iii. 2, 3, 5, he urged all Christian workers to observe a distinction between ministering in the flesh (our working for God) and in the spirit (God Himself working in and through us). In iii. 14 Paul shows that the promise of Abraham was of the Spirit. Abraham in the Spirit could afford to part with Ishmael (a product of the flesh) though at first he cried, "Oh, that Ishmael might live before Thee." Isaac was a work of the Spirit, and when Abraham showed himself willing to lay even that on the altar, God interposed and blessed him. An instance was given of a wealthy Christian who glorified God with his money, saying he had "God in everything." A time came when, like Job, he lost all; then he rejoiced that he had "everything in God." IV. 6—if we have the Spirit of God's Son in us, are we living in it? V. 5—the more we are like Christ the more we may be misunderstood and disliked here, but not hereafter. V. 16—attempted combination between the Spirit and the flesh must result in trouble and constant warfare. V. 18—if the Spirit has his way with us the law will not be required to restrain us from evil temper, &c. V. 22—not natural affection, gentleness, &c., but "My love" (John xv. 10), "My peace" (John xiv. 27), "My joy" (John xv. 11), &c. VI. 8—applies to Christians as well as to unconverted. "Seekest thou great things for thyself?" or for thy children? "Seek them not." Seek divine things, not great things.

Mr. SELWYN followed with an exposition of John xv. 14, dealing with the word abide in the form of an acrostic. The true believer is Alive—signifying a healthy and fruitful life. Beautiful—Christlike, not angular in character; let the Potter mould the clay as He will. Increasing, in the knowledge of Christ, Dependent, needing guidance; not choosing our own way and wanting God to recognise it. Mr. Selwyn humorously illustrated his point by a story of an who, not knowing which way to take, threw up her stick, intending to follow the direction in which the knob pointed. But having a preconceived idea in favour of one particular road, she tried her experiment again and again, until the stick pointed in the direction she desired. In this connection he also worked out the promise of Phil. iv. 19, as if it were a "blank cheque";—the firm, "My God"; the promise, "shall supply"; the amount, "all your need"; the capital to draw upon, "according to his riches"; signature, "Christ Jesus." Everlasting—the characteristic of God's "everlasting love," and all his other gifts.

In time for the evening meeting, Rev. GELSON GREGSON arrived, and gave the first address. On this occasion, as on the following day, he laid great stress upon the need of a definite "baptism of the Spirit." such as the disciples received at Pentecost. He lamented that the power of the Spirit is largely lacking in present day ministry, and maintained that nothing but the power of Pentecost could achieve Pentecostal results. In some of his particular positions, however, he did not seem to us to be supported by the general tenor of Scripture; now and again, too, he combated the views upon this subject given by Rev. H. Webb-Peploe at Keswick, which were set forth in full in these columns some weeks ago.

Other addresses were given by Mr. Standen, Mr. Moore, and Dr. T. H. White, which lack of space prevents our reproducing.

In addition to these general meetings very useful words of exposition, counsel, and exhortation were given at the early morning and afternoon gatherings. Indeed these were sometimes all the more valuable because, not being followed by a second address, the message left, perhaps, a clearer impression upon the hearer. Mr. Selwyn recognised this possibility when, on following up Mr. Standen's address on Galatians he thought it would have been well if he and his hearers could have at once retired to meditate upon what they had already heard.

One feature of the conference was very noticeable—viz., that on several occasions speakers enlarged upon some thought that had been previously emphasised by one of their brethren, and thus many a nail, so to speak, was fastened in a sure place by reiterated blows.

The concluding meeting, conducted, after an address from Mr. Gregson, by Dr. White, was a very solemn one, an unusually large proportion of the audience remaining for the after-meeting which followed, when many persons testified their desire to devote themselves wholly to God.

On Friday morning a testimony meeting was held, and in the evening the Lord's Supper was observed in St. John's Church, of which Rev. W. Sheppard is the Vicar.

MR. E. HURDITCH, of the Evangelistic Mission, has concluded a successful tent mission, lasting nearly three months, on the moors, Cardiff. Night after night meetings have been held, and the power of the Lord has been manifest. Considerable numbers have assembled to hear the word of life. At the closing meeting a goodly number rose in response to the invitation to those who had received blessing to stand up. Prayer is asked for blessing on Mr. Hurditch's work at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, during this month.

INTERNATIONAL TEMPERANCE CONGRESS.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

THE proceedings at the International Temperance Congress at Christiania indicate progress in a good cause throughout the Continent of Europe. It is said that Norway has been more successful than any other country in the fight against intemperance, and the members of the Congress have with great interest studied the means of combating alcoholism, that have proved the most effectual in Norway.

The president of the Congress, the director-general of the Norwegian Corps of Physicians, Dr. Dahl, remarked in his opening address that, so far as Norway is concerned, the battle has been fought on Christian principles. Moral reforms, apart from religion, are practically unknown in Norway, and temperance workers have found it necessary to go forward in God's name, asking for his blessing on their labours.

The members of the Congress have been told that the Gothenburg system has worked very beneficially. The consumption of strong drink in Norway at present is only one-sixth of what it used to be. But the truth is that although the Gothenburg system and the legislative reform that have from time to time been carried have been doing some good, the evil has for the most part been overcome by the labours of God-fearing men and women.

The English members of the Congress seem to be agreed that the Gothenburg system would be no blessing in England. Swedish and Norwegian temperance friends differ in opinion about the advantages of the system. A prohibition party is growing up in both countries holding decided objections to all half-measures.

Rev. J. Grant Mills gave an interesting account of the operations of the united committee for the protection of native races from demoralisation by the liquor traffic. Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, of the W.C.T.U., stated that during her travels, extending over six years, in almost every country in the world she had found that the progress of Christianity everywhere is greatly hindered by the infernal traffic in strong drink. It is a miracle that Christian missions make any progress at all, seeing that Christian states allow this terrible evil to continue.

Canon Leigh read a paper on the conversion of brewery firms into limited liability companies. Among other things, he said, What are called vested interests have ever stood in the way of true reform from the days of the Apostle St. Paul, when he was opposed by the artificers of the silver shrines for the goddess Diana at Ephesus down to the present day. It is the love of money that is at the root of a vast amount of evil caused by the liquor traffic. We have heard much of the demoralisation of the African races by the importation of European fire water into their midst. But let us remember, that there is also going on at home a demoralisation of our own race, which is terrible to contemplate."

MR. MATTHEW BURNETT, whilst in England, may be communicated with to the care of Mr. W. Rowntree, Westwood, Scarborough.

EVENING CLASSES FOR YOUNG WOMEN.—The Educational Committee of the London Young Women's Christian Association are again issuing a very attractive prospectus of evening classes. Last autumn and winter nearly 2000 young women availed themselves of these classes, and numerous prizes and certificates were awarded to those students who proved successful in the recent examinations. At about twenty institutes in all parts of London, classes are held for teaching dress-cutting, book-keeping, shorthand, type-writing, cookery, ambulance, Civil Service preparation, &c. Prizes and certificates are again offered. There are too good gymnasia and classes for gymnastic drill at other institutes. A prospectus will be sent free on application to the Secretary, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W.

Australian Notes.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

SECOND ADVENT.

THE truth of the Lord's premillennial advent is making considerable progress in these colonies. Travelling about in railway carriages and otherwise, visiting people of all ranks in society and of all sections of the Church, both in Victoria and New South Wales, the writer has found many who are sustained in these troublous times by the thought that "He whose right it is" to reign, will soon return. All do not agree in details or on the chronological side of the question, but it is cheering to meet so many holding the blessed hope. The Rev. Mr. Gillings, by his writings and by his lecturing tours throughout these lands, has contributed largely to this end.

PROPHECY.

Here and there are those who have studied Dr. and Mrs. Guinness's excellent works, and who are strongly Protestant in their understanding of prophetic truth. In such matters the Baptists seem prominent; but, even amongst our Wesleyan friends, these views of prophecy are beginning to obtain. At least one Sydney Wesleyan minister preaches Second Advent and prophetic truth.

Rather a peculiar affair in connection with this question has recently occurred in Melbourne. A Methodist local preacher has been warned by the superintendent of his circuit against teaching Second Advent truth, which he characterises as "pernicious and unscriptural doctrine." It is expected this action will bring the question before the church, and lead more Wesleyans to search for themselves, and see whether this truth is taught in the Scriptures or no.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

Mr. Richard Coad, a good specimen of a hale Cornishman and of the good old Methodist preacher, has been in Melbourne recently advocating the claims of Gospel Temperance. Crowded audiences listened to his lectures spellbound—no, that dosen't describe it, for his quaint humour elicited such rounds of applause and provoked so much hearty laughter as doubtless did many a poor soul good.

Five hundred pledges were taken in the ten days' mission, the ladies working nobly. He is now in Ballarat, but is to return to our suburbs in about a week to carry on several local missions before he goes to Adelaide. His cheery manner and thoroughly English voice put one somewhat in mind of our warm-hearted friend, Mr. Gawin Kirkham.

OPEN-AIR WORK.

In the streets and parks of Sydney bands of open-air preachers are constantly met with, proclaiming the glad good news of salvation; and here and there in the country townships of New South Wales the same thing is to be observed. In Melbourne likewise, bands of devoted men and women carry on the work. The Salvation Army is hard at work everywhere throughout our colonies, and of course open air preaching is thus largely on the increase.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

About six weeks ago the first public meeting held in Melbourne, in connection with this "greatest thing in the world" in the way of foreign missions, took place in Collins-street Baptist Church, when Rev. Alfred Bird, one of the hon. secretaries for the Victorian branch of the mission, presided, and Miss Mary Reed told out some of her experiences of the work in the Flowery Land. Since then a whisper has gone about that it is probable Rev. J. Hudson Taylor may pay us a visit. I should like to look on his bright, calm face once again, and listen to his earnest, loving words.

FAREWELL.

A few nights ago I had the pleasure of meeting with a number of Christian workers at the residence of a Christian lady, whereby mutual exhortation, testimony, the counsel of the Word, and by prayer a young man, named Burgess was commended to the Lord and to the word of his grace as he departed for Tasmania, whence, after some time spent in training with Pastor Soltau, he will proceed to the mission field in China. He has already proved himself, by God's grace, to be a most energetic worker in connection with the Y.M.C.A., an admirable leader in open-air work, and a successful winner of souls for theMaster. This augurs well for his future. He goes off in strong confidence in God, and believing for the conversion of a greathost in the million-peopled land of China. The Lord be with him, and grant him his request.

AN OLD FRIEND.

Many of the London young men will not have forgotten the hearty grip and the cheery words of Mr. William G. Marsh, who, when general secretary of the Melbourne Y.M.C.A., visited England about eleven years ago. Some time since he began regular evangelistic mission work in the Colonies under the auspices of the Episcopalian denomination. After some years of successful service he has accepted a charge, and is now settled down as a Church of England curate at Lara, a pleasant country district about twenty-four miles from Melbourne. He is frequently seen and heard at public gatherings in this city.

Y.M.C.A.

About a week ago the Association here held its annual meeting. Notwithstanding the torrents of rain that fell that evening, there was a goodly gathering, when suitable addresses were delivered. Mr. W. A. Southwell, who has been the general secretary for a number of years, is as enthusiastic and constant in his work as ever. A short time ago the foundation-stone of a large new building was laid in Bourke-street, which bids fair to become the centre of still greater usefulness. One of the grandest gatherings of young men it has been my privilege to see, was an ordinary Sunday evening meeting in the pleasant hall of the Y.M.C.A. in Sydney in March last, when our esteemed English visitor, Rev. J. C. Croxford, addressed the assembly. It was a real good time. The genial, bright, and hearty secretary, Mr. Walker, is indefatigable in his labours, and the work is carried on with great spirit.

THE SABBATH.

Seventh Day Adventism caused a stir in this colony about eighteen months ago, but it seems to have died a natural death. The Scriptures quoted in favour of the doctrine were such as generally confuted the theory advanced. Every few months public meetings are held in Melbourne with a view to influence public opinion and move Parliament to have the public libraries, museums, &c., opened on the Lord's Day. One such was held a few nights ago, when Rev. Dr. Charles Strong, at one time a popular Presbyterian minister here, spoke in favour of the movement. The Lord's Day Observance Association, however, is vigilant, and public opinion on the question seems against the desecration of the Sabbath. It has often been said The Daily Telegraph, one of the Melbourne morning newspapers, and a bulwark in defence of the right, has been one of the main conservators of the Day of Rest in Victoria.

Melbourne, July 19.

MR. T. SHULDHAM HENRY, whose name our readers have known as an evangelist for many years, is, we regret to say, obliged to take complete rest and change. He is now with his family in Switzerland. We are sure his many friends will pray for his restoration to health.

FROM BRITTANY.

ONE autumn day, along the road
That leads away from Andernee,
I walked across the marshes broad,
Beside the margin of the sea.

And when I reached the point where stands
A scattered hamlet, by the stream
That wanders through the Breton lands,
Fair as a brooklet in a dream,

A cairn stood there, close by the mere,
Whose stagnant waters, dank and cold,
Reflected, lonesome, year by year,
The moon's great yellow disc of gold.

For centuries the setting sun
Had cast across it rays of red,
Fading before the day was done,
As winds moaned weirdly o'er the dead.

And nature gave no signs of spring—
When sleeping seeds would burst and grow,
And life thrill in each rooted thing
Hidden beneath the melting snow;

And birds would from the southward sweep,
Impelled by that which made them fly
To great chalk cliffs that Sussex keep,
And sweet still vales 'neath English sky.

Beside the cairn a plot of ground
Gleamed in rich beauty, bright and glad,
Amid the desolation round
That seemed so wild, and lone, and sad.

The tiny field was all aglow
With flow'rets light as angel wings;
And, as my footsteps halted slow,
A shepherd whispered, "'Tis the King's."

So, resting 'neath the shadow cast
Around us by a wind-bent tree,
The sunny moments swiftly passed,
The peasant whispering quietly

A legend of the country side,
That, all unknown to him, to me
Suggested faith both deep and wide,
And visions of eternity.

"Far off in olden days," he said,
"Before the little church was made,
And long before the sleeping dead
Were laid to rest beneath its shade,

A mighty king who ruled the land,
Beloved alike by rich and poor,
Was buried 'neath the stones that stand
Upon the border of the moor.

And over him the cairn they piled,
And left him lonely there to sleep,
Disturbed not by the wailings wild
Of winds that from the ocean creep.

But as years passed tradition said
The buried king was clad in gold:
A jar of gold beneath his head,
Filled with his treasure rich and old.

So one still night four guilty men,
Tempted by lust of wealth astray,
Dug underneath the stones, and then,
All trembling, grasped the pot of clay.

But, when amid the rustling reeds
They sat to count the treasure vast,
The jar held naught but tiny seeds,
And these into the grass they cast.

Where, by-and-by, tall plants appeared,
That bloomed in red and royal blue,
Whose azure blossoms proudly reared
Their petals 'neath the falling dew.

The loveliness had been safe kept
Within the circle of the seeds,
And through the centuries had slept
To bloom amid the moorland weeds."

The peasant paused, and, from the field,
The flow'rets testified to me
Of trusting faith that peace doth yield,
And of the life that is to be.

For, gazing down the vanished years,
I saw a mourner in her pain
Bend o'er the little jar with tears,
And sigh, "The dead shall rise again."

BOW COMMON FACTORY GIRLS.

AFTER a suspension of a few weeks, to give our lady workers a little rest, we formally re-opened for our winter's work amongst the Bow Common factory girls on Wednesday of last week, by inviting about 150 to tea. And a very happy time was spent over the tea-table, to decorate which our Finchley friends had sent us a charming lot of flowers. The after-meeting was continued in our commodious mission-hall on the ground floor of the large institute in the Devon's-road. To a stranger many sights and sounds would be saddening in their rough exteriors, pallid and hardened faces, and rude rejoinders.

Of all audiences for a Gospel preacher to deal with, few are more manifestly unsympathetic than these match-factory girls. But we are no longer strangers to these lasses, and can note a great change for the better in their general behaviour to what they were five years ago, when we began our work amongst them. There were sitting amongst us on this occasion not a few whose changed lives tell plainly they are inquirers for better things, while some have taken their stand fully for the Lord, and are serving Him with gladness.

The institute has thus again started on its way, and will again by divine blessing prove a sunny spot in a dark place to many in an existence which to most of us would be insupportable. WM. CHORLEY.

OPENINGS IN BASUTOLAND.

REV. H. M. DYKE writes from Morija, Basutoland:—"Our work is greatly extending, and fresh openings are presenting themselves on every hand; but we are unable to take advantage of them, being so few Europeans. We constantly cry to the Master of the harvest-field for more helpers. Surely the answer will shortly come. Our training schools in this place are in full work. More than a hundred pupils—young men—are thus receiving a good education; in the one branch, of sixty-five, the teaching is chiefly in English. My son has now the greater part of the duties resting upon him, and they are far too heavy for him; we fear his health will suffer in consequence. My nephew, Dr. Casalis, who is really the director, has been laid upon a bed of suffering for the last two months, and he is still far from being recovered. His inability to take part in the studies of the young men is a serious drawback for us.

"It is but seldom we can receive tidings from our distant mission on the Zambezi. The last we heard, about two months ago, has given us very great anxiety. One of our brethren, M. Jeanmairet, was seriously ill from fever. Our other friends there, MM. Coillard and Jalla, with their families, were well. M. Goy and his wife, and a young French lady, were then nearing this field of labour. I just touch upon these items of news to draw your heart towards us that we may be borne by you before the throne of grace. Greatly do we need the sustaining arm of the Lord to enable us to carry on his work. He has done great things for us, and by these we are emboldened still to attempt what the world would call 'impossibilities' for a little Mission such as ours. By the prayers of God's own believing children these 'impossibilities' will be made possible."

REV. R. BALGARNIE'S special mission engagements are as follow:—Sept. 20 to Oct. 2, Newport, Mon. (Baptist); Oct. 4 to 10, Sale, Manchester; Oct. 11 to 17, Blackford-bridge, Bury; Oct. 18 to 24, Radcliffe, Manchester; Nov. 1 to 7, Worthing; Nov. 8 to 14, Upper Holloway (Baptist); Nov. 15 to 21, Ealing (Baptist); Nov. 22 to 28, Bishop Auckland (Presbyterian); Nov. 29 to Dec. 5, Ryton-on-Tyne.

MR. ROHRBACH'S WORK IN BERLIN.

MANY Christian friends who have followed with interest and sympathy the steady progress of this evangelical mission in Moabit, Charlottenburg, and Potsdam will be glad to learn that on Sunday, August 24, the new mission hall was opened at Charlottenburg. For the past five years regular Gospel services had been carried on there in a tent during summer time, and in hired rooms during the winter, by Mr. Rohrbach and his band of fellow workers. Encouraging success has attended the work, which has included Sunday-schools, Bible-classes, &c. The need of a suitable mission-hall has been keenly felt, and is now supplied.

Thanks to the lovingkindness of our Heavenly Father, and the kind help of Christian friends in England and Germany, a commodious hall has been built and dedicated to the Lord's service. The hall, with the adjoining rooms, holding about 700 people, was filled to its utmost capacity at the opening; many friends had come from Berlin, Moabit, Charlottenburg, and Potsdam. It was a grand occasion to praise the Lord for what He has done. Mr. Rohrbach gave a brief report of how the Lord had blessed the small beginnings of the work in Moabit, where a mission-hall was built some four years ago; how afterwards the work spread to Charlottenburg, the Lord giving his seal to the ministry of the Word. The builder of the hall, himself one of the first-fruits of the Moabit Mission, spoke suitably about that spiritual building made of living stones to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ; and several other brethren encouraged to faithful and persevering work for the Lord. The need is great. Charlottenburg, so beautifully situated near Berlin, has now about 70,000 inhabitants, and only two Protestant churches to accommodate about 2000 people. Everywhere one meets with utter indifference as regards spiritual realities. We pray that this mission-hall may become the birthplace of many souls. Communications regarding the work may be addressed to the superintendent of the Mission, Mr. Julius Rohrbach, Bremerstrasse, 58, Berlin N.W.

REV. JOHN McNEILL addressed a congregation of 3500 people in the Edinburgh Exhibition building on Sunday afternoon. The tickets of admission were all taken up early on the day of issue, a proof that the preacher's popularity has not waned in the Scottish capital. He preached a telling discourse from the healing of the impotent man, counselling the church members not to get downhearted because of seasons of spiritual coldness, but to wait and labour for times of revival. It would be worth while breaking his holiday parole if one spiritually impotent man or woman came to Christ for healing. At the beginning of the sermon he said he would not go back on the past, but he felt that God had opened for him in London a clear and unmistakeable ministry.

THE "KENTUCKY MOUNTAIN EVANGELIST," Rev. G. O. Barnes, has been addressing meetings in Scotland. His extraordinary teachings have attracted much attention, and as he combines an amount of evangelical truth with many erroneous views, he gets a hearing without much difficulty. We would not print some of his coarse statements and definitions, but may give an example of his doctrine:—In the case of a death by lightning, a coroner's jury returned a verdict of "Death by visitation of God." Mr. Barnes has another version—"By visitation of the devil." Satan also is responsible for the planting of the tree of good and evil. He did not fall with the angels, but drew them down. The meetings ended on Sunday, with a discourse on Genesis i. and ii. According to Mr. Barnes, God made man a spirit like Himself. Man fell, so man the spirit had to be put into a body and given a soul. Woman was then made from man's body, hence her tendency to sin. Mr. Barnes's efforts all tend to attaching people to himself as a leader, and therefore must be disintegrating and sectarian.

"NEVERTHELESS."

"Nevertheless I am continually with Thee: Thou hast holden me by my right hand."—Ps. lxxiii. 23.

"NEVERTHELESS!" Though the waves roll high,
The Lord is greater than all;
And when the burden's too great for me,
For his loving help I call.
Jehovah, the Lord, has promised to bless,
He will fulfil his "nevertheless."

"Nevertheless!" Though with feeble feet
I follow Him day by day;
And the hands may tremble that grasp his Word,
The Lord is my strength and stay.
For He, the Lord, has promised to bless,
He will fulfil his "nevertheless."

"Nevertheless!" When the earth grows drear,
To his loving hand I cling;
And though the voices of earth speak woe,
In my heart doth heaven's music ring;
Because the Lord has promised to bless,
He will fulfil his "nevertheless."

"Nevertheless!" With sheaves we come,
O Lord, to thy heavenly throne,
And, 'mid the ranks of the angel host,
One voice is heard alone:
"Thy Saviour, Lord, I promised to bless;
I have fulfilled my 'nevertheless.'"

SAILORS' HOME AT FOWEY.

THE Seamen's Christian Friend Society's new buildings at Fowey were opened in the presence of a large assemblage on Thursday, September 11. The building contains about twenty rooms, including most attractive and comfortable reading-rooms, mission-room, coffee bar, bedrooms, apartments for the resident missionary, &c. The walls of the rooms are covered with coloured Scriptural cartoons and texts, and in the reading-room there is a life-sized portrait of the worthy president, Mr. George Williams, of London. There is a large paved yard at the back of the premises, overlooking the picturesque harbour; at the end of the yard, and at the water's edge there is a flight of stone steps, so that sailors may come from their vessels, and land at the Sailors' Rest without having to go through the town. This yard, which can accommodate several hundred people, is intended to be used for open-air services during fine weather.

The opening proceedings were conducted on this ground, which the coastguards from Polruan had beautifully decorated with flags, and the chair was taken by Mr. H. W. Maynard. The temporal and spiritual advantages of Sailors' Homes and Rests were set forth and enforced in able and eloquent addresses by several friends. The vicar, Rev. H. N. Purcell, remarked that the need of such a place could not well be doubted when it was remembered that 9000 seamen entered the port last year, and the harbour was often filled with vessels. From a statement made by Rev. G. J. Hill (secretary), it appeared that the total cost of site, buildings, courtyard, furniture, and general expenses would be nearly £1500, towards which over £900 had been already received. Mrs. Stopford Sackville, of Point Neptune, declared the Rest and Home open. Mr. and Mrs. John Spence, late of Edinburgh, have charge of the work, and it is believed they will make it a great success.

The fourth annual meeting of the Cornish Coast Mission, with which the Home is associated, was held at the Mechanics' Institute in the evening, under the presidency of the vicar. The place was crowded with friends and supporters of the Mission. It was stated that about £170 had been received towards the building fund during the day, leaving about £400 to be raised to clear off the debt. It was announced that good and readable books were wanted for the library and a small American organ for the mission-room.

ANOTHER CALL FROM FRANCE.

WE thank God that He has really spoken to his people assembled at the recent conventions. Shall France profit thereby and at last receive more labourers? Let me repeat my appeal. We are still only a few isolated workers in this part of France, when hundreds could find work to do for the Lord, especially ladies of independent means.

The homes of the French working classes are still open to the female evangelist. The wives are sitting before their doors, and in various ways there is a ready access to them. These women never hear the Gospel; we are unable to induce them to come to our rooms. The priests' and the world's influence is too strong for that; but they are glad to listen to the joyful tidings when someone knows how to approach them without attracting outside attention. In quiet and unobtrusive ways much and lasting good can be done. It is to my mind the only way in which the evangelisation of France can be achieved. But we lack helpers.

In my last visit to England, I laid this before the several audiences the Lord gave me. A lady has promised me part of the salary of an efficient Bible-woman. I have £25, but £45 is required.

We have not yet improved upon our very inconvenient place of worship—two rooms, thrown in one, over a pork butcher's shop. We have changed our plans, and, instead of requiring £840, we hope to do now with £600. This change does not involve any reduction in the size of our proposed buildings; but, for our mission-room, class-room, and reading-room, we must content ourselves with absolutely plain buildings. I have now about £230 towards the total; if I could receive £150 more this winter, I should be able to begin the main building next spring.

Speaking of some of our difficulties, I would also name some that my fellow labourers have to encounter. I know several earnest evangelists to whom a tricycle or bicycle would be a great boon; perhaps someone sympathising with the work, and having one, may desire that it should be used for the Lord, and send it over to us through Bordeaux. Little is it known in England under what difficult circumstances these evangelists do their work. I mean now such as the agents of the Société Evangélique de France.

One has to hold his services in a room much too small, with a mud floor under the feet of his congregation. In one place a stove, in another a small harmonium has long been asked for. Nearly all beg to be allowed a little more money to visit the surrounding districts; one is allowed £4 a year, another £2! The Society has just enough to pay a small salary to each, and has almost every year to reduce the travelling expenses. The secretary is Pasteur Mouron, 76, Rue d'Assas, Paris.

MR. JAMES SPRUNT has conducted a special mission at the Workmen's Institute, Purton, near Swindon. The meetings were largely attended by the unconverted and by Christians of all denominations.

HOP-PICKERS' MISSION, ALTON, HANTS.—Six large marquees are erected and well filled, and there have been most encouraging results. Never in all the history of our work have we been more encouraged with impressions for good than this year, and especially at the Binsted tent under the care of Mr. Bird, town missionary of Brighton. It was most gratifying to see Gipsy men bringing their children at their backs to see and hear a lecture on the "Pilgrim's Progress." On Saturday, Mr. W. S. Caine was with us, and his family. They invited 350 hop-pickers' children to a tea. We would ask the prayers of the Lord's people that much spiritual fruit may follow our efforts, after seventeen years' tent work. S. CHINN.

CONFERENCE IN THURINGIA.

THE Conference for the Deepening of Spiritual Life (September 1-4) was, according to the opinion of all present, most remarkable. The subject was "The Work of the Holy Spirit," and every one of the meetings gave rich testimony of the presence of that Spirit. The members of the Conference, pastors and laymen, were gathered from various nationalities—German, English, Swiss, and Swedish; and from still more denominations—Free Church, Lutherans, Methodists, Baptists, Church of England, Moravians, Swedish National Church, Brethren: a beautiful alliance-spirit prevailing throughout.

On the last day, "the great day of the feast"—on which the closing subject was, as usual, "the Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ"—the sincerity of alliance principles was proved by the whole assembly uniting in an upper room, to partake of the Lord's Supper. We believe that Germany has never before witnessed a similar gathering; every denominational prejudice being laid aside, and all coming together as members of one Body, to remember their Lord's death "until He come." The impression made is best expressed in the words of one of the venerable fathers present:—"We seem to have returned to the days of the early Christians, when all differences were merged in the common bond of faith and love, and in the blessed hope of the Master's appearing." Our new publication the Allianzblatt will give a full account of the Conference.

CHRISTIAN BANK CLERKS.

A VERY interesting address was given to those members of the London Banks' Prayer Union who assembled in the Metal Exchange, Whittington-avenue, on Tuesday evening of last week, by Mr. J. Morris, of the Bombay Y.M.C.A. Committee, who is in England for rest and change. It was shown that, notwithstanding the great craze of to-day in the excessive worship of culture, Western civilisation fails to promote real unity in India, that nation of nations, more divided than Europe by social and religious prejudice, which is aggravated by exclusion of the Bible from the highly secular Government education. Even missionary education, having to compete with Government instruction, shows little or no results in bringing men to Christ. Great rulers have secured India for us, but her unification must be the work of Christian men, for whom there is a large field of usefulness in that country, especially for young business men of truly consistent Godly character.

It is encouraging to remember that the Hindoo is pious; but his religious instincts are misdirected. While European vices hinder the work of God, the influence of true character is powerful. A Hindoo, in a letter of introduction concerning Mr. Morris, wrote: "This man will not get angry with you, he is not proud, and you can trust him"; words which in England would probably cause the bearer to be regarded as a "softy," but which carry weight among Hindoos. To be forewarned is to be forearmed, and some closing words were spoken respecting the difficulties which surround the European life in India, such as new temptations, removal of home restraint, and the traditions of the upper but irreligious stratum of society. Prayer were asked for Bombay, where, among the 800,000 inhabitants, mostly heathen, it is hoped to found a prayer union for the city's bank clerks.

MISS ANNIE MACPHERSON, of the Home of Industry, expects to sail for Canada on Thursday, September 18. Her sojourn in Scotland has done much for her restoration to health, after a painful illness of many weeks.

PUBLIC MORALITY IN SWEDEN.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

STOCKHOLM was last week the scene of the annual series of International Conferences held by the British and European Federation for the abolition of all laws which countenance public profligacy. For many years there has been a Swedish Committee working for repeal as a branch of the Federation; it was originated twelve or thirteen years ago by Mrs. Josephine E. Butler, and now, both Sweden and Norway are as prominent in the abolitionist cause as the Latin races in the more southern countries of Europe. Holland has repealed the Police des Mœurs in many of her municipalities; Switzerland has done likewise, and, as a result of last year's series of Federation Conferences at Geneva, has been more than ever active and successful in sweeping away countenanced vice; Christiania has abolished the system, and after two years of trial without it the medical officers of health report a hygienic improvement as the ministers and pastors proclaim a moral one; even the military-ridden Germany and Russia are joining in the cry for repeal, and Sweden is growingly of the same opinion.

Last week's Conferences suffered by the compulsory absence through illness of both Mrs. Josephine Butler and the President of the Federation, M. de Laveleye, the political economist of Liège; but it was a powerful series of meetings notwithstanding, and had a manifest effect alike on the Stockholm press and general public opinion. The city had been prepared for the Conferences by some lectures given by Dr. Carl von Bergen, and also by the repeal of these laws having been moved for in the Riksdagens Forsta Hammare (House of Lords) by M. Tamm, the President of the Swedish Committee. Dr. Holk, of Denmark; Dr. Koch, of Switzerland; and Dr. Böhmert, Professor of Political Economy at Dresden, Director of the Statistical Bureau of Saxony, and joint editor with Professor Gneist of the Arbeiterfreund (Workman's Friend), published at Berlin, were among the distinguished foreigners who took part in the meetings.

Professor Stuart, M.P. (who presided), the editor of The Contemporary Review (Mr. Percy W. Bunting), and Dr. Nevius, Professor of Medicine at Liverpool, were among the contingent of English delegates, and each of them delivered speeches of great power from different points of view. Professor Stuart dealt with the political and general ground of objection to State regulation of profligacy; Mr. Bunting showed that the true spirit of all laws being in the interests of morality, laws which sanction and make terms with vice must be wrong; and Dr. Nevius in a speech remarkable for its research, lucidity, and absence of controversial matter, demonstrated by diagrams made from the figures in the Government Reports of the British Army and Navy that sickness among the soldiers was worse during the operation of the Contagious Diseases Acts of 1866—69, and that since their repeal in 1882 this form of malady had showed a marked decline.

It is impossible to speak too highly of the undercurrent of strong religious feeling and matured spirituality which showed itself among the Swedish visitors to these Conferences, and there is abundant indication that Sweden will shortly follow the lead of Norway, Holland, Switzerland, and Italy in taking the ground that laws which permit vice cannot be of scientific or social good.

MR. GEORGE KING, evangelist, has been going through the villages of Surrey. In several places the chapels were put at his disposal, and he preached the Gospel to attentive audiences.

MR. WILLIAM FORBES closed his services in the Wynd Church tent, Glasgow, on Friday last, and on Saturday he began an evangelistic mission in Hawick in the large Home Mission Hall.

JAPANESE IN GLASGOW.

MISS MCLEAN, author of "Echoes from Japan," writes to us from Glasgow:—The prayers of our readers are specially desired on behalf of a crew of 150 Japanese sailors now at Clydebank, Glasgow. They have come to fetch a newly built ironclad; they have been here four months, and may have to remain another two. God has, in a very remarkable manner, given me a "great door and effectual" among them. For more than a month I have been visiting them at their encampment, and on "leave" days they come to see me. We spend hours together reading and searching the Scriptures; the intense interest manifested in this exercise leaves no doubt on my mind that God is making dead souls to feel their need of a Saviour.

One of the officers is a true Christian, and he takes intense delight in joining me in prayer to God for a blessing upon the vessel. Our request is that captain, officers, and crew may be forthwith saved, and consecrated to the service of the Lord. We are asking great things, but not too great for God to grant. Japan needs such a precious crew of saved souls to shine for Jesus.

I am happy to say that some of God's children have ministered to these strangers "heartily as unto Him." Some who have shown kindness have said that they never felt their hearts more stirred or drawn out towards their brother man from the far East as when these gentle and scrupulously clean seafarers listened with reverence to Gospel addresses given on the occasion of visits to the beautiful grounds and homes of those who showed them kindness for Jesus' sake.

POLICE CONVALESCENT HOME.

DEAR SIR,—We have just returned from a short visit to Brighton, and while there went over the "Southern Police Convalescent Home." Among all the admirable work inaugurated and carried out by Miss Gurney for the best interests of our police, none seems more thoroughly deserving of hearty support than this Convalescent Home.

For long it had been felt desirable to try and start such an institution, where sick and weary members of our police forces might find rest, and regain strength for their arduous duties. This Home at West Brighton has only been opened for a few months. Men "on leave" for their annual holiday are received on payment of twelve shillings a week, while those "on sick leave" pay eight shillings a week. The house itself and all the arrangements are excellent, and the position is admirable, being near the railway station, near the sea, and close to a capitally worked mission-hall.

All is on a small scale at present, but as many as twelve men have been accommodated at one time; a few beds being set apart also for the orphans of policemen. Numbers of police officers, who are not themselves Christian men avail themselves of the benefits of the institution. All is definitely carried on for the Lord, so that such a Home cannot fail to be a blessing.

The work is superintended locally by a Christian lady who lives opposite, the house-keeping and domestic arrangements being looked after by a policeman's widow, residing on the premises. The small payments made by those who stay at the Institution are, of course, not sufficient to maintain the work, and I was grieved to find that, although the management was most economical, about £100 was urgently needed to meet current and immediate expenses.

Together with one or two police workers, who were visiting the Home at the time, we laid the matter before the Lord, and feel sure the great Treasurer will not forget to supply the need. Communications may be addressed to Miss C. Gurney, Police Institute, 1A, Adelphi-terrace, Strand, London, W.C.

GOSPELS OF WATER.*

THIS is the title of a very useful and well-written pamphlet, in which the author seeks to expose the dangerous tendencies, and the utter unscripturalness of Baptismal Regeneration. That there is need for such a pamphlet the following few facts will show:—

An aged and notoriously ungodly man died suddenly. "Oh, sir," said a shocked neighbour, who saw the vicar leaving the house of death, "was he conscious after the seizure? Had he a moment for repentance? Is there any hope for his soul?" "Not a moment," was the clergyman's cheerful reply, "but I have a very good hope of all my baptized parishioners"!

A man of rough character was dying. As no one knew whether he had been baptized, his youth having been passed with tramps, the curate baptized him when in a state of semi-consciousness—an hour before death. Neighbours could tell of a terrible life of sin, but none had heard a word of sorrow for it. Almost his last words were curses, when the agony of dissolution roused him for a time. Yet in the sermon on the next Sunday evening, he was pictured as "walking in white," "companion of apostles and martyrs," "saved at the eleventh hour" by the wonderful grace of baptism!

Lent had come round, and, on its first Sunday, a preacher took for his text "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." He began by saying, to avoid misrepresentation, that his remarks were based upon, and took for granted, the doctrine of the atonement. It was sad, indeed, in these days of Church teaching that anyone should do deeds needing to be repented of, and he trusted that his text did not apply to any member of his present congregation....He trusted that the majority of the baptized kept their baptismal robes unsullied, and Christ did "not come to call the righteous but sinners to repentance." Had we not his own authority for believing that, though there was the "one sinner" that ought to repent, there were "ninety and nine just persons who need no repentance"? (pp. 57, 58).

Other quotations could be given, but these are startling enough to show that the evil leaven is working, and that the rite of baptism, instead of being a "sign of an inward and spiritual grace" is treated rather as a substitute for it. The delusive "gospel of water" displaces "the Gospel of the grace of God." No infidel teaching, however revolting and blasphemous, could be more calculated to ruin the souls of men. An earnest word of warning is needed lest these "blind leaders of the blind" should never discover their error until both they and their dupes have fallen into the ditch.

The author of this pamphlet writes as one fully alive to this danger, and succeeds in showing that the dogma "that the manifold grace of God, which brings salvation and regenerates the soul previously dead in trespasses and sins, is bestowed in the rite of baptism, even as its chief appointed channel, has not the shadow of support from Scripture" (p. 9). In proof of this, almost every New Testament reference to the subject and its Old Testament types are examined; while faithful and fair consideration is given to infant baptism, the Church Catechism, the early form of the rite, and the connection between the sign and the spiritual reality it sets forth.

We commend to the earnest and prayerful attention of those who have too readily accepted and consented to teach the Church Catechism the author's exceedingly wise and thoughtful reference to it. The time when, and circumstances under which, it was given to the world suggest that "we need not treat it as having authority except so far as it is supported by Scripture." Without a doubt it is "the modern stronghold of the baptismal regeneration theory." Its teaching on this subject has called forth many, not only various, but antagonistic explanations. The teaching of the Council of Trent has been thus described:—"Every babe comes into the world under God's wrath and curse, a child of the devil, an heir of perdition, until a miracle takes place in Baptism; and one who is not even by right God's child miraculously becomes such by the utterance of a form of words and the sprinkling of water—the Eternal descends at the spell of a man!" This has been described as "incantation, not Christianity." To escape this teaching some have explained that "Baptism is an authoritative symbol of an eternal fact, a truth of eternity realised in time."—Robertson, of Brighton. Some teach "that original, or birth-sin is put away in Baptism." Origen taught that "original sin was the result of sins actually committed by the babe in a previous state of existence!" (pp. 30, 31). About the teaching of Scripture there is no such obscurity. Is it not likely to produce disastrous results to substitute such a compilation for the Word of God?

We do not endorse all the teaching of this pamphlet. The identification of Regeneration and the Baptism of the Holy Ghost seems to us to be unscriptural, notwithstanding the author's effort to prove to the contrary. We regret that the force of the pamphlet should be weakened by the introduction of a theory which will not be received by many who fully sympathise with the author's main purpose. Apart from this, we heartily commend the pamphlet. It is thoughtful, instructive, exceedingly fair in its argument, and is written in a bright and vigorous style. We trust it may serve to enlighten many who are now being misled.

Obituary.

MISS SARAH JAMES.

THIS lady, the daughter of the late Rev. Thomas James, secretary of the Colonial Missionary Society, and niece of the late Rev. John Angell James, of Birmingham, died at her residence, 33, Highbury-place, N., on September 7, aged 54, and was buried at Abney Park Cemetery on the 11th. She was for many years an active and devoted worker at Hope Mission, Banner-street, St. Luke's, formerly known by the name of Chequer-alley Mission. During a long and painful illness her interest in the Mission never flagged. She was collecting for the new Mission buildings almost to the time of her death.

REV. DR. STEVENSON DALRY.

By the death of Rev. Dr. R. Stevenson, Dalry, which took place last week, the Church of Scotland has lost one of its oldest and foremost ministers. Dr. Stevenson, who had reached the long age of eighty-three, had been laid aside from active duty for some months. Before settlement in Paisley in 1836, he used to conduct the regular service in Regent-square Church, London. Dr. Stevenson was a minister of the highest attainments, and also an educationist of the most thorough order. In his younger years he travelled a good deal, and during a long visit to America preached regularly to large audiences of his own countrymen. He also visited every capital in Europe, and made a tour through the Holy Land.

REV. PROFESSOR BIGGER.

The Irish Presbyterian Church has sustained a serious loss in the early death of Rev. Professor Bigger, M.A., B.D., of Londonderry, who passed away somewhat suddenly at the age of 37 years, on Saturday evening. About ten years since he was ordained pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Lisburn, where his simple unaffected piety, and his intense evangelical zeal and faithfulness, caused him to be greatly loved by the members of his flock. Five years ago, on the death of Dr. Given, he was appointed Professor of Oriental Literature and Hermeneutics in Magee College, Londonderry, but he did not on that account relinquish his Christian activities. He became a Sabbath-school teacher, and continued to take the deepest interest in various kinds of mission work, especially in that amongst factory operatives.

CANON LIDDON.

Rev. Dr. H. P. Liddon, canon of St. Paul's, died at Weston-super-Mare, on Tuesday last week, somewhat suddenly, though after an illness of many months. Born at Taunton in 1829, he became a student of Christ Church, Oxford, at the age of eighteen. Coming into contact with Dr. Pusey, he imbibed ecclesiastical opinions, which remained with him throughout his career. As a theologian he glorified God, and ably served his generation. In 1866 he was Bampton Lecturer, and took for his subject, "The Divinity of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." He met modern criticism on its own ground, and answered the rationalists with point and power. The same spirit of loyalty to Christ characterised him to the last, and led him manfully to combat the loose views as to Holy Scripture which have recently become popular in certain High Church circles.

Dr. Liddon was appointed canon of St. Paul's in 1870. As a preacher he exercised a powerful influence. His sermons were long, usually occupying about an hour in delivery. He was very careful in preparation, and Dean Stanley declared him the greatest preacher of the age.

GENOA HARBOUR MISSION.

WHEN the Genoa Harbour Mission was commenced, and for many years after, steamers and, sailing ships lay at anchor while discharging cargo; rarely was a sailor allowed on shore, and, when the "Bethel" boat came to "invite" to a service, the captain's leave was gladly accepted, the dingy forecastle was left for the cheery "Bethel," but with the understanding that the missionary was responsible for the safe return of each sailor to his ship: there was to be no going on shore and no drinking. That was about twenty years ago, and many a captain gave a handsome subscription to the Mission, saying that he might well do it, as at Genoa he had no trouble with his men.

Now, what do we find? Long quays, with jetties at which nearly four-fifths of the steamers lie; and the sailor, with nothing to impede, roams at will along the unknown streets, to meet temptations worse even than those at home. His eye brightens at the sight of the "Union Jack," but, with one exception, the "Union Jacks" are raised not by friends but foes—foes of a hidden kind, worse than even a drinking-shop suggests. Notwithstanding the temptations and the often direful end to his walks, the sailor likes to feel his foot on land, and frankly owns that he has had enough of the sea, and does not wish to enter the steam-launch to go to a meeting, to which, evenwhen quite willing to go, he would rather walk. During recent years he could do this, as the "Bethel" had a gangway to the quay; but that privilege, on account of the crowded state of the harbour, was withdrawn about two years ago, and since then the Mission has been worked under great difficulties.

At the request of the sailors themselves, mission premises on shore were sought and found—found with extreme difficulty and at considerable cost, as all who know the crowded and busy city of Genoa will believe. The much-loved "Bethel" was sold to the Naples Harbour Mission, and, so soon as the money can be got to carry out the alterations and additions necessary, the little detached house in Via Milano will be the Sailors' Rest, with chapel seated for two hundred men, reading and recreation rooms, and house for missionary. It is hoped that not only those who have known the Genoa Harbour Mission since its establishment twenty years ago, but others interested in British and foreign sailors will help Rev. Donald Miller in his effort to raise the £3500 required to open the Rest free of debt, especially when it is remembered that under the British flag alone from 25,000 to 30,000 men enter the port of Genoa—the Liverpool of Italy.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following——A mission to young women at the Grove-street Institute, Glasgow, from Sunday, Sept. 21 to 28, by Miss Radcliffe (of Liverpool).——For tent services at Sebastopol (Mon.), in connection with Mr. T. M. Wintle's work.——For the Christian Temperance Home, 91, Bolsover-street, Great Portland-street, W.——The Wakefield Convention.——Tent mission now going on at Wroughton, conducted by Mr. G. Sage, of the Evangelisation Society.——PRAISE: For blessing on a tent mission closed at Cricklade.

THE GERMANS AND THE AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.—According to telegrams from Zanzibar the German Administrator at Bagamoyo, in opposition to the recent decree of the Sultan, has published an official notice giving liberty to everybody to buy and sell slaves in Bagamoyo and the vicinity, without restriction, except as regards their export by sea, which is prohibited. The Arabs are also authorised to recover runaway slaves. The Arabs in Bagamoyo are stated to be overjoyed, and are, it is alleged, buying slaves openly by auction in the streets. This is very discouraging intelligence.

The Book World.

ORIENT GUIDE. 2s. 6d. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. The fourth edition, revised, of a series of chapters for travellers by sea and land, edited for the management of the Orient Line, by W. J. Loftie, B.A., F.S.A. It would be difficult to improve upon the volume in its present handsome form, admirably illustrated, and supplied with numerous maps and plans. The book is a valuable vade mecum for travellers.

A PIECE OF AN HONEYCOMB. Meditations for every day in the year. By Helen G. McKenny. 4s. C. H. Kelly. "Many thoughts of many minds have been stored and worked out, as the bee gathers the honey from many flowers, and finally presents it in the form of a piece of an honeycomb." So the author describes her work, which is calculated to perform a useful ministry. Here are words of counsel and comfort; the teaching is substantial, and the expression chaste and forceful.

THE ATONEMENT AND MODERN THOUGHT. By J. M. Denniston, M.A. 6d. Nisbet. A powerful pamphlet, addressed especially to Scripture students and young ministers inclined to follow the new view of Christ's redeeming work now so largely adopted. Attention is directed to Scripture teaching, the substitutionary sin-bearing being so made out as to leave no room for any alternative view. We trust these pages will be widely read, as they present important truth in an unanswerable manner.

THE STORY OF THE NATIONS: SCOTLAND. By John Mackintosh, LL.D. 5s. T. Fisher Unwin. To ample knowledge of the facts, Dr. Mackintosh adds an appreciation of the national instincts and religious proclivities of the Scottish nation. He has produced a worthy record of a people who, in the providence of God, have helped largely to mould the thinking and the acting of the world. The student of history will find in this volume, as in all the other volumes of the series, much food for profitable study.

SICKNESS OR HEALTH? By a Family Doctor. 2s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons. Instead of giving medical prescriptions that may be wrongly applied, the author of this work gives much sound advice of all-round application. He names a few safe and simple remedies, but gives no encouragement to reckless dabbling with drugs. Covering a wide range and dealing with many forms of disease, the chapters offer wholesome warning as to the danger of trifling ailments. For the most part the book is a reprint from the pages of Cassell's Magazine: and if it find many readers, we may be sure there will be more of caution and common sense in the risks of daily life and the remedial treatment of the minor ills to which flesh is heir.

PROFESSOR ELMSLIE. By Dr. Robertson Nicoll and Mr. A. W. Macnicoll. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. This very welcome memorial of the young and universally lamented professor is largely made up of a selection from his sermons. The biographical part, though comparatively brief, is written from full and intimate knowledge, and reveals the inner heart and soul of the man; so far as it goes it is quite worthy of the subject, and that is saying much. Dr. Elmslie scarcely lived long enough to take a place among the great formative forces of his time, but the work he did was sufficient to indicate that he would have become a powerful exponent of Christianity in its practical bearing on the great problems of our modern social life. The sermons are eminently characteristic of his special qualities as a preacher, which were insight and sympathy.

Messrs. Longmans & Co. have issued new editions of the late Cardinal Newman's history of his religious opinions, APOLOGIA PRO VITA SUA, and his religious novel, CALLISTA: A TALE OF THE THIRD CENTURY. The former work should instruct Christians in the method that ought not to be pursued in endeavours to learn God's will. While seeking for peace of mind, Newman opened his heart to many teachers, but he seems never to have allowed the Holy Scriptures to influence him. Consequently superstition took possession of his mind, and he devoted himself to ordinances of man's devising, in the hope that thereby he might attain unto holiness. The novel professes to be "an attempt to imagine and express, from a Catholic point of view, the feelings and mutual relations of Christians and heathens at the period to which it belongs," but it will be obvious to instructed readers that instead of faithfully illustrating history, the book presents a picture as misleading in its general setting as it is avowedly fictitious in its details.

SENSATIONAL RELIGION. By J. O. Bairsto E. Stock. This is a spirited, if not very refine justification of out-and-out methods of Christia propagandism, as opposed to laissez faire "religio ism." The author makes out a good case, and h brochure deserves to be sympathically studied.

The Anti-Infidel continues to champion trut against error, and faith against indifferentism Atheistic utterances are reviewed, and other occ sions embraced for driving home the claims o God upon the minds and hearts of men. Th editor of this monthly, Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh deserves encouragement in his important under taking. (1d. Snow & Co.)

NATIVE LIFE IN SOUTH INDIA. By Rev. Henr Rice. 3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. We hav here "a short and popular account of the present day manners and customs of the people of South India." Mr. Rice writes from personal knowledge and we trust his book will lead, as he desires, to a deeper interest in efforts to evangelise the natives of our great Asiastic dependency.

THE CALVARY PULPIT: CHRIST AND HIM CRUCIFIED. By Robert S. MacArthur. 4s. Funk & Wagnalls. Over twenty sermons by the pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, New York. Most of them were preached some years ago on special occasions. Theological statement does not seem to be a strong point with the preacher; but in practical counsel and loving appeal he is both able and earnest. The sermons will well repay perusal.

PASSING THOUGHTS OF A WORKING MAN. By Hubert Cloudesley. Elliot Stock. Mr. Cloudesley has not only conserved passing thoughts on many subjects, but has ventured to formulate his thinking in very unconventional language. He discourses wisely and simply on such themes as "The wrongs and rights of woman," "Is life worth living?" "The philosophy of laughter," "Manliness," "Perseverance," &c. We hope these "thoughts" may have many appreciative readers.

Two timely little works are issued by Messrs. Isaac Pitman & Sons—HANDBOOK FOR SHORTHAND TEACHERS (2s.) and THE NEWSPAPER WORLD: ESSAYS ON PRESS HISTORY AND WORK. (1s.). The first must prove invaluable as a guide and handbook to teachers of the unrivalled phonographic system, and it also contains an interesting, if brief, history of shorthand systems. The second is a chatty description from a practical point of view of the varied branches of newspaper work, and will be received with intelligent interest by many outside the great profession of journalism. Those who read the papers—and who does not?—ought to know something about the early struggles of the fourth estate, and also about the working of that wonderful machine—a great daily paper of the present time.

In HARVEST GLEANINGS Mr. W. Maxwell, late town missionary, displays some fruits of his work in Belfast. The incidents are full of interest. (1d. Belfast: Religious Tract and Book Depôt, 116, Royal-avenue.)

A FEW HINTS TO NURSEMAIDS. By a Mother. 3d. E. Stock. Excellent. Many mothers would be the better for a careful reading of this booklet. The cautions are as wise as the counsels are prudent: and kindheartedness characterises the whole.

HENRY LEA, OF READING. A sketch of his life, by Henry Holme, and a capital portrait. 1s. Sold in aid of the Memorial Fund for the relief of commercial travellers, their wives, and children, in temporary distress. Offices of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association, 185, Aldersgate-street, E.C. A life story, full of interest, and pointing lessons which all classes would do well to learn.

ELIZABETH STUART: the Faded Flower of Carisbrooke Castle. By Albert Midlane. 1d. Holness. This is an addition to the "Penny Life Stories for Old and Young." The narrative has many attractions, and it is presented in these pages with godly sympathy and to noble purpose. Empty fiction would stand a poor chance if the facts of history were more generally "improved," after the manner of Mr. Midlane's little work.

INTERESTING FACTS CONCERNING THE JEWS ALREADY IN PALESTINE. 4d. Morgan & Scott. Mr. Joseph Hannington, brother of the late Bishop, has written a very interesting account of his recent tour in Palestine. His observations regarding the Jews were such as to impress him with the near approach of the time when the Messiah shall be manifested in power and great glory. Those who watch for the Lord's appearing will be charmed with these pages, written in June last on Mount Lebanon. The proceeds of the sale will be devoted to work among young women at Gibraltar.

THE SABBATH REST UNION on the Continent receives fresh adherents daily. High officials both in the Government and the great railway companies in France are openly expressing themselves favourable to its object. The object is not always to secure religious privileges, but this may follow as the movement gains force.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 21.—Psalm CXXXV.

THIS is a call for praise, beginning with the priests, who stand in the Lord's house. God's glory, in nature (5-7); in his dealings with Israel (8-14); and in contrast with idols (15-21) is adduced as a theme for praise. It seems rather like a mosaic, as the description of the singers invoked is taken from the previous Psalm; the account of the exodus from the next Psalm; and the description of idols from Ps. cxv.

1. The first word announces the object of the Psalm—Praise.

3. One rendering of the words, "it is pleasant," is "He is lovely." When the heart is full of the love of Jesus, it seems as if the universe were too small to be an orchestra for his praise.

4. God's eternal choice is, indeed, a fit theme for praise, and we who have been thus called into the inner circle, that we might bring others there, may well join in the doxology of the Apostle Paul (Eph. i. 3-6).

5. I know.—The soul has convincing proofs of God's glory, which it treasures.

7. To its farthest limits, the whole earth is under his mighty working. He draws the veils of vapour over the hills, and shadows over life.

10. God's deliverance of his people from their foes, and his gifts, are as much subjects for our praise as for Israel's; because we have each our Sihon and Og, barring our pathway to blessedness; some unwelcome intruder on our peace.

14. A literal quotation of Deut. xxxii. 36. God is said to "repent," when his people turn to Him. The wind may be blowing strongly in one direction across a plain; but it seems to change, when we, who had been walking against it, turn and go with it.

19. In Ps. cxv. the word was TRUST; here it is BLESS. But this is the regular gradation of the Christian life. Trusting ever leads to blessing.

21. Zion is the place where the believer dwells with God, and may represent the whole Church, or any place, however simple, where two or three meet in his name.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 22.—Psalm CXXXVI.

A magnificent antiphonal Psalm, to be sung by two choirs; or by the temple choir and the people alternately; the response rolling in after every stanza. It seems like an interleaved Bible, and teaches us to interleave all things with the thought of the mercy of God. There are evident traces of its having proceeded from the same hand as the previous Psalm; the aim being to incite the hope and trust of the people of God, by enumerating his glorious acts.

1, 2, 3. These verses rest on Deut. x. 17. Is there not a trace of the Trinity in this threefold ascription?

4. Alone, i.e., without human help (Isa. xl. 12-17).

6. The emergence of the earth from the waters was a favourite thought with the Psalmists (xxiv. 2, civ. 6-9).

15. Overthrew may be rendered "shook off," as St. Paul did the viper.

19, 20. Flies preserved in amber! Our greatest difficulties and opponents will one day only be remembered for the love and mercy which they called into manifestation.

23. Men forget us in our "low estate"; but that is the time when God seems to remember us most.

25. The provision made for animals, and birds, and all living things is a proof of the mercy of God. Will He do less for his sons?

26. What an unspeakable comfort it is to rest on God's mercy, which is unaffected by our failures and sins, and changes not with our fluctuations! Like Himself, unchangeably the same.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 23.—Psalm CXXXVII.

One of the most touching of the Psalms. It reminds us of the emotions excited in an army on a distant march by hearing the strains of a home song. It was evidently composed by a returned exile. But it is also clear that the destruction of Babylon herself was imminent (8). We are thus led to the conquest of Babylon by Darius (Dan. v. 31), whereby its entire destruction, as foretold in prophecy, was brought within a measurable range. The Psalm falls into three strophes, each consisting of three verses.

1. The streams of Babylon had probably a special fascination for the exiles. First, because they were removed from the busy rush of the city, and thus afforded opportunity for reflection; and secondly, because they were an image and symbol of their floods of tears (Lam. ii. 18, iii. 48). Daniel loved and sought them (Dan. viii. 2, x. 4).

2. This touching metaphor has passed into all languages as an expression of extreme grief. Of what use is the harp when the heart is nigh to breaking?

3. This demand may have originated from the far-famed power of Hebrew Psalmody. Across the desert the news had come of the sweetness of the temple minstrelsy; or, it may be that their captors were anxious that the Israelites should reconcile themselves to their lot, and feel at home in their banishment. But in any case the treatment by those captors had made compliance with their demand impossible.

4. "The Lord's song" is only possible in the Lord's house, where his presence is manifested and felt. To be separated from Zion was to be separated from God; and to lose God was to lose all. When we have lost the sense of God's presence, having been led captive by our sins, we too are sure to lose our joy, and peace, and blessedness. The land of the stranger and the song of the Lord can never be found together.

5, 6. The imprecation here made is on the hand and tongue; on the one if it should be misemployed in playing, and on the other in singing. Would that we were more constantly able to apply these words to our Lord Jesus! Why do we remember all things and people beside, and forget Him? Surely we court failure in every other direction, so long as we do not make Him the crown and head of our chief joy.

7. Edom took malicious pleasure in the destruction of Jerusalem; and the punishment of Edom is often referred to (Jer. xlix. 7-22; Lam. iv. 21, 22; Ezek. xxv. 12 14).

8, 9. Calvin says that the Psalmist acts here as the Divine herald of coming judgment; but there seems a flavour of something more personal and vindictive in these terrible words. We can understand the spirit which breathes through them; but it is rather that of the Old Dispensation than of the New (Matt. v. 43-48).

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24.—Psalm CXXXVIII.

This is the first of a cycle of Davidic Psalms, and is founded on the promise of 2 Sam. vii. Here, as there, the promised blessing is dwelt upon with gladness. The idols, which could exhibit nothing to compare with it, retreat ashamed (1); the Lord has done more to glorify Himself by it than by all his previous wonders (2); all kings will one day praise the Lord on account of it (4); and it is the beginning of a chain of blessings that can never end (8).

1. "Before the gods" may, however, refer to angels (Ps. viii. 5; Heb. ii. 7); or to princes (Ps. lxxxii. 6; 1 John x. 34-36); or to idols (Ps. xcvii. 7).

2. It reminds us of Jonah (ii. 4), and of Daniel (vi. 10). The temple, as being the seat of religious worship and of sacrifice, is symbolic of that propitiation through which alone sinners may approach God. God's promise, prompted by love, and founded on truth, was a fuller manifestation of God's character than any previous revelation.

3. Our God does not always answer our prayers as we request; but He does for us as for our Lord in the Garden—He strengthens us (Luke xxii. 43). Let us not forget that He is "the strength of our heart."

4. It is pleasant to think how many of the great of this world have been included in the ranks of the servants of God; and more shall be (Ps. lxviii. 29, cii. 15). And it may be that not a few of them shall be found to have been influenced in their choice by the sweet words of David the king. Each man can best influence the men of his own class.

5. "They shall sing of the ways of the Lord" (R.V.).—So great is the glory of our God, that the noblest of this world may count it an honour to carry his train.

6. To have "respect unto" is to behold. God eyes with loving regard those who are true to Him, but He is repelled from those whose hearts are proud, so as to look on them only from a distance (2 Chron. xvi. 9).

7. The revival of the soul is the gracious work of the Holy Spirit. How blessedly and unexpectedly these revivings steal into our hearts; and so often, when heavy trouble lies on us from without. 8. There are no unfinished pictures on the walls of God's studio; no incomplete statues in his halls of sculpture. When He begins He pledges Himself to complete. His mercy endures for ever, so we cannot tire it or wear it out. But our assurance ought always to take on the language of pleading, that He would not forsake.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 25.—Psalm CXXXIX.

It is rather interesting to notice the position of this sublime ode on the omniscience and omnipresence of God. In repeated Psalms David has reminded us of the love and mercy of God, which "endure for ever," and here he bids us take heed that we do not make that love an excuse for sin, because his eyes are as a flame of fire. There is the same combination, though in the reverse order, in Heb. iv. 12-16.

The fact of God's omniscience (1-12); its ground, on his creatorship of man (13-18); its consolatory aspect, that as God knows the innocence of his people, so He will not condemn them with the wicked, but lead them in his everlasting way (19-24).

1. What ineffable comfort there is in the thought that our hearts, closed to all else, are open to Him. Because, as He can detect the secret source of our disease He can cure it; and, as He can read our secret sorrow, He can apply the healing balm. "He knows all, but loves us better than He knows."

2. Downsitting is our time of quiet rest; uprising, the going forth to work. Afar off perhaps means that God anticipates our thoughts and purposes before they are matured in our mind.

3. "Thou winnowest" (marg.); as if God were ever applying the fan of his judgment to our active life, and to the thoughts which chase each other across our mind in sleep.

5. The All-knowing is also the All-present. God-encompassed; God-environed. Behind, that none may attack in the rear. Before, that He may search out the way and meet our foes. Laid thine hand; as if a child were to put one hand over the hollow of another to keep some frail insect from its pursuer (John x. 28, 29).

6. We must worship, where we fail to comprehend.

7, 8. It used to be said that the entire world was but one vast prison-house for the Roman Emperors, so complete was their power. And what hope can the sinner have of escaping God? (Amos ix. 2).

9-12. Neither change of worlds, nor distance, nor darkness, can at all alter the soul's proximity to its ever-present God. What bliss this is to those who know Him as Father and Friend!

13. Possessed is "formed" (R.V.). The reins are the seat of the desires and feelings. How much transpires in that secret workshop! Nothing can be concealed from our Maker.

15, 16. We may refer these words to the mystical body of Christ, which even now is being secretly prepared and composed of many who are as the lowest dust of the earth. And God's book contains, through his foreknowledge, the names of those who are to be incorporated in that mystical body (Rom. viii. 29; Rev. xvii. 8).

17, 18. The Psalmist is so occupied with the thoughts of God, which teem in his mind, that he pursues his meditations sleeping as well as waking. And as he starts from slumber, his first bright waking consciousness is that God is by his side.

21, 22. When we are startled at these strong expressions of David, we may well ask ourselves whether, in our tender pity for sinners, we may not be losing something of his stern consciousness of the evil of sin, and the guilt of the wicked.

24. This prayer is a worthy termination of the Psalm. "Lead me" is the one incessant cry of the devout soul. "Lead, kindly Light!" We long to get forward on that way which is everlasting, because founded on the permanent principles of Truth, Righteousness, Light, and Love. The way planned from eternity by the Eternal, and leading to the eternal home.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 26.—Psalm CXL.

The tone of this Psalm corresponds with the inscription, and attests its Davidic origin. It perhaps dates from those early troubled days at court, when his steps were taken with difficulty, because of the gins and snares that lined his pathway.

The Psalm consists of five verses as the beginning, and five as the conclusion; and in the middle occurs a strophe of three verses, the heart of the Psalm, distinguished by the fourfold use of the name Jehovah.

1. "Deliver us from the evil one."

2. Gathered, as Ps. lvi. 6; and lix. 3.

3. Who can describe the mischief caused by a false and slanderous tongue? Adder's poison under their lips. See also Ps. lviii. 4; Rom. iii. 13, 14.

4. Keep me, O Lord. A good prayer for all times. (Ps. xvii. 8, xxv. 20).

5. We have every reason to be afraid of Satan, who adds cunning to his malice; and who is not content with hidden assaults, but weaves insidious toils, which may take months to mature, in order to do us harm, and grieve our Master, Christ, wounding Him through us.

6. The first portion of the verse corresponds with Ps. xxxi. 14. If He is ours, and we are His, we may have confidence that He will "hear the voice of our supplications."

7. Thou hast covered; Thou dost cover; Thou wilt cover. Such is the force of the tense used here. As we go down into the fight, let us never forget that helmet of salvation provided for us by the Lord Himself (Eph. vi. 17; 1 Thess. v. 8). What a contrast to the "head" of the wicked! (9).

9. Slander is like a man starting an avalanche, which ultimately overwhelms and covers his own dwelling.

10, 11. We have not so learned Christ (Rom. xii. 20); but we must admire the Psalmist's certainty that evil cannot ultimately prevail in God's world; and that, however great may be the momentary triumph of the wicked, they are destined to utter and disastrous downfall.

12. The Lord will maintain the cause of the afflicted. (Ps. ix. 12, xviii. 27; Zeph. iii. 19).

13. Not only hereafter, but here and now, do those who love and serve God walk and live in the manifested light of God's presence (Job xxii. 21, 30; John i. 7).

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 27.—Psalm CXLI.

Another of David's Psalms. De Wette is led by the language to class it, with Ps. x., as one of the oldest.

2. The smoke of the sweet-smelling incense is often used in Scripture as a symbol of the prayer of believers, which is precious to God (Luke i. 10; Rev. v. 8, viii. 3, 4). The offering of incense morning and evening, under the Levitical dispensation, symbolised prayer (Exod. xxx. 7).

3, 4. The Psalmist prays for preservation from the danger of lip-sins, heart-sins, and life-sins. God's sentry is God's peace (Phil. iv. 7). How wise, to make God the doorkeeper of our mouth (Prov. iv. 24).

4. The child of God does not eat of the "dainties" of the wicked, and yet amid tribulation he seems to sit at a banqueting table, anointed as a guest with oil (Ps. xxiii. 5). The last clause should be rendered, as in the R.V., "Even in their wickedness shall my prayer continue." Like a Geyser, it rises in winter's frost as under summer skies.

5. "The righteous" is referred by some commentators to God, who alone, in its full sense, deserves the appellation (2 Sam. vii. 14, 15). But it may also refer to that loving care which one believer may exercise over another, in rebuke and admonition. For, "which shall not break my head," the R.V. more correctly translates, "my head shall not refuse."

6. When the enemies of the Lord are overthrown, they will be the more prepared to listen to words which they had rejected before, but the intrinsic sweetness of which will then commend them to their hearts.

8. "Looking off unto Jesus" is a good motto. And it is marvellous how the feet are kept from snares and pit-falls, when the eyes are not fixed on the ground, but lifted upwards to the Throne.

9. Another petition that the Psalmist may be kept. Prov. iii. 26 gives an encouraging promise—"The Lord shall keep."

THE NARROWS MISSION, FOLKESTONE.—This work has for some years been conducted by Miss A. E. Moore and her workers in the Y.W.C.A. Finding in the Narrows a much-neglected class of people—flower-sellers, knife-grinders, &c., attending no place of worship, these ladies went among them and held open-air services. These have been thoroughly appreciated, the poor people greatly enjoying the hearty singing. The simple Gospel addresses were found to tell upon the hearers, and it was determined to carry out work in winter as well as summer. Accordingly a cottage was taken and converted into a mission-house; not only are evangelistic meetings held therein, but gatherings for mothers and children. Visitors staying at the Y.W.C.A. Home readily lend a hand at the singing, thus cheering the sad and encouraging the backward to take up religious impressions.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, September 28.

REVIEW OF THE QUARTER'S LESSONS.

GOLDEN TEXT: MATT. vii. 29.

IN the first lesson (xiii. 10-17) note where Jesus was on the Sabbath day. Where ought we to be? Yet place is not everything, for even there Jesus found a hypocrite (14, 15), and numerous adversaries (17), besides "the people" (14, 17) who were in measure attached to Him. There, too, was found a woman bound by Satan (11), and to her the greatest blessing was given (12, 13). To whom should the Physician come, if not to the afflicted? Jesus does the same work in his house to-day. To which class do we belong?—the needy, the hypocrites, or the adversaries?

xiv. 15-24 contains the parable of the Great Supper. What does this feast represent? What excuses did the invited guests make? What are your excuses? Who were brought into the feast? (21). There is an important lesson in the fact that the afflicted woman in the synagogue, and "the poor and maimed," &c., in the parable, received the Saviour's blessings. The knowledge of our need is the first essential in all of us.

xiv. 25-33 corrects the mistake into which some might fall after the former parable. Multitudes accompany the Saviour who are not fully his. Discipleship has not only its blessings, but it difficulties and responsibilities. There is something to be forsaken (33), and a cross to be borne (27). To begin without being prepared for this is to fail, and to become a mockery to others (28-32). The lesson xviii. 15-30 is an illustration of this. The young ruler made a splendid and most promising start, but he could not take up his cross.

xv. 1-10 and 11-24 and xvi. 19-31 may be combined. All four parables, with that of the unjust steward (xvi. 1-12), were spoken at the same time, and were occasioned by the same complaint (xv. 2). "The publicans and sinners" (1) are represented in the lost sheep (4-6), the lost coin (8-10), and the lost son (12-24). The joy occasioned by the finding of these shadows forth the joy in heaven over the salvation of sinners. Again, note that it is the consciously needy who obtain the blessing. The Pharisees, who made the complaint, are seen in the elder son, the unjust steward, and the rich man. In the first their self-righteousness; in the second their self-seeking and covetousness; and in the third their awful doom (22-31). Enforce the solemn teaching of this parable: that death is followed immediately by conscious existence in the other world; that the two states in the other world are separated by an impassable gulf; that prayer in the other world is unavailing; and, therefore, that the Word of God must be heeded now.

xvii. 11-19 resumes the narrative of our Lord's journey to Jerusalem (ix. 51). On his way He still heals and teaches. The prospect of his own suffering and death does not make Him less ready to pity and help others. The healing of the ten lepers proves the power of his word (14). If you were lepr ous, and Jesus were at hand, would you not call upon Him? Sin is the soul's leprosy; Jesus is the only Physician; have you called upon Him? If already healed, what testimony are you bearing? Are you like the one Samaritan, or like the ungrateful nine?

xviii. 1-14 gives us two illustrations of prevailing prayer. The widow prevails with an impious and unfeeling judge, because of her importunity. There is real power in prayer if we do "not faint" (1). Delays are not denials. The publican prevails because his consciousness of guilt humbles him. He deserves nothing, and craves only mercy. The Pharisee asked for nothing, because he was so self-satisfied. No answer was needed to that self-congratulatory utterance. The same lesson is enforced by the welcome given to the children (15-17). None are too young or too weak to come to Jesus. The farther you get from your childhood the less likely are you to enter the kingdom of heaven.

xix. 1-10. Who was Zaccheus? Tell the story of his conversion, and show his earnestness in overcoming difficulties; his ready response to the Saviour's call; the immediate change produced in his character; and how his conversion illustrated verse 10.

The next two lessons (xix. 12-27 and 37-48) concern the Saviour s entering Jerusalem. The parable was to correct the people's mistake as to the nearness of the visible kingdom. The tears of Jesus on the Mount of Olives, and the work of Jesus in the temple gave greater force to the teaching of the parable. Are we like the citizens (14)? Then see the measure of our guilt and our doom in the Saviour's tears (41). If servants, let us use our pound faithfully "till He come."

The Temperance Cause.

AT Margate two chemists have been licensed to sell medicated wine. It was argued that the bench had no discretion in the matter, but were bound to grant the licences, on proof that the conditions required by the law were duly met.

At Montreal, recently, there was a great assembly of temperance people from all parts of the Dominion. The Royal Templars erected a grand marquee, and besides there were about fifty camping tents on the ground. In connection with the gathering, the Dominion Alliance held its annual meeting.

At a recent meeting of the Health Committee, Liverpool, of nine cases of inquest, three were of deaths due to excessive drinking. On the following day Mr. Clarke Aspinall held inquests on the bodies of three other persons—two women and a man—who had likewise died through excessive drinking.

The connection between drink and criminality receives a remarkable illustration in the case of the drink-sellers of New York, of whom there are over 8000. Of these between 3000 and 4000 are Irish, and between 2000 and 3000 German. Only 1616 of this total number have not in some way or other passed through the prison.

A Bill has been introduced into the New Zealand House of Representatives by the Government to extend the principle of local option for the total prohibition of granting licences for the sale of intoxicating liquors. If the Act pass, no licence will be granted or renewed in any district until the ratepayers of such district shall have been consulted.

The practice as to the receipt of temperance memorials at Brewster Sessions appears to be by no means uniform. At some courts they have been ruled irregular, while at others they have been received. At Wigton, Sir Wilfrid Lawson presiding, on the advice of the clerk, they were received, though opposed by legal representatives of the trade.

REV. J. B. GRIBBLE, of Temora, New South Wales, whose parsonage was recently destroyed by fire, writes acknowledging the help received from English friends. He says: "I am still working on amidst much trial and discouragement, but with some signs of fruit. The poor aborigines still share my sympathies, and I hope, ere long, to be able to go to North Queensland to organise missionary work among the large tribes there who have never yet heard of the Saviour of mankind, and who, sad to say, are cruelly treated by the whites. If possible, I will take a trip to England next year in their interest.

THE METHODIST "PASTORAL ADDRESS."—The annual "pastoral address" of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference recently assembled at Bristol is in circulation. Speaking of the new conditions of life and work the pastoral calls attention to several features of modern evangelism which are worthy of attention, especially the deep interest now being taken in the material, the social, and the economic welfare of the people, and recommends caution in guarding against bringing political predilections into spiritual utterances; discussing social problems from a Christian standpoint and in a spiritual temper. It points out how important it is that evangelism should be followed by ethical and spiritual teaching; those who take a leading part in mission services especially should beware of all methods which tend to create a distaste for intellectual and spiritual instruction. Attention is called to certain features of the age, and habits of society, which powerfully affect religious life, such as business competition, a spirit of criticism, growing worldliness, and other tendencies which lessen, and in some instances destroy, religious life. Whilst laying down no inflexible rules, but leaving each to take account of himself, it points out that conduct is to be guided not so much by minute regulations as by Scriptural principles, and that their supreme aim as Christians is the cultivation of the life of the Spirit, and all affections and all habits which hinder in this respect are to be sacrificed at any cost.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

ASTHMA AND BRONCHITIS—CASE of Rev. C. BROOME, of FRESSINGFIELD.

This patient applied to me in January last. He had been ailing for four months, and been obliged to forego his village preaching and pastoral visitations. His cough was most distressing at this time and expectoration profuse.

For the first ten days there seemed no change, but after that improvement commenced. He writes me February 25th:—"My friends and I myself feared I was going the way of all the earth; but now I cannot tell you how thankful I am to say I am so much better, and that I can walk some distance with comparative ease."

He continued to improve, and on the 5th April last, he writes me:—"I am now fully restored to health, God has used your treatment for my recovery."

LETTER—MRS. A. A. GOODALL, of OXFORD.

Mrs. GOODALL, of 10, Wood-street, ST. EBBS, OXFORD, writing on May 29th, says:—"After several years of severe suffering, I was induced by Mr. W. ROBINSON, of this town, to seek your advice. I have much pleasure in telling you that, after taking the first supply of medicine, obtained according to your instructions, and following your directions in all respects, I was greatly relieved, and after the second supply I was restored to my former state of health, enjoying perfect rest, when, for years before, I had had none. I thank you for all your kind attention to my case.

You are at liberty to make what use you please of this testimony."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS

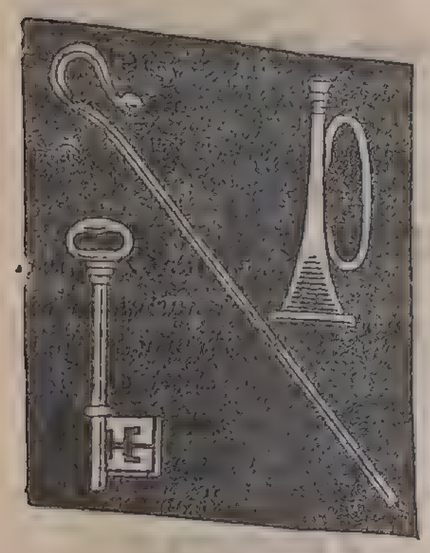
AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM.

BY LUCY J. RIDER AND NELLIE M. CARMAN.

CONTAINS

FOURTH THOUSAND.

Sixty Outline Lessons for the Class,
Forty-three Diagrams for the Black-board,
Twenty-five attractive Children's Hymns.



"A thoroughly practical book, by teachers who have learned by experience the best methods. Teachers will find it most helpful, especially in blackboard word-work. The Addresses are teachings—which very many Children's Addresses are not."—The Teacher at Work.

"We do not remember meeting with any better book than this for help in Children's Meetings. It is first-rate. There are objects to be drawn on the blackboard; but there are also capital lessons to go with them. Blackboards get very, very black; and the children are very bored, when it is all chalk and no sound sense. Many of these Addresses would make sermons of the first water—and what more can we say of Addresses?"

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in
The Sword and Trowel.

"We have no hesitation in advising all who are engaged in the good work of teaching children and young people in Gospel principles, and the way of salvation, to possess themselves of a copy of this work. It will be found to be a very valuable and suggestive book, and helpful to the teacher of the Infant—as well as to the teacher of the Bible-class."—Baptist Messenger.

The Male Choir.

A Collection of Gospel Hymns and Sacred Songs.

Composed and arranged for MALE VOICES.

By IRA D. SANKEY and GEORGE C. STEBBINS.

OLD NOTATION. Demy 8vo., Containing 95 Pieces.

Tinted Covers	1s. 6d.
Cloth Limp	2s. 0d.
Cloth Bevelled Boards, Red Edges	2s. 6d.

"The Male Choirs throughout the country will welcome this selection. Mr. Sankey has given in this volume many new and a good number of old favourites. .... Nothing is more effective in a Gospel meeting than a well-rendered chorus by male voices, and Y.M.C.A.'s would do well to organise local choirs, and introduce a few of these pieces at their open-air and other gatherings."—The Christian.

III. Spiritual Awakening.	VI. After-Fruits.

Paper Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"Our readers will recollect the intensely interesting story of 'LITTLE KATHLEEN.' Miss Butler has been able to obtain a considerable amount of information; and a sketch of the singularly beautiful life of this young friend of medical missions will be published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott. We bespeak for the little book as wide a circulation as possible. It is one of the sweetest testimonies to the grace of God in the heart of a little child which has appeared in these days; and in its cloth edition at 1s. will be an attractive gift to readers, both old and young."

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Mrs. Ahok, the Chinese lady who recently visited England to plead on behalf of her unevangelised countrywomen.

We purpose commencing in our next issue a series of expository articles on the Gospel of John, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.

Dr. Pentecost has recently been the victim of unpleasant misrepresentation and uncharitable reflections. An article appeared in an American paper, and was quoted on this side, attributing to him very severe remarks on the Scottish Churches, as he saw them during his mission last year. The result has been some bitter correspondence. Dr. Pentecost, however, who has just returned to Scotland, entirely repudiates the strictures which have been given to the world in his name. He does not pretend to have found in Scotland a perfection of Church life and work which is wanting everywhere else; but yet he does not hesitate to say that he delivered no such mischievous speech as he has been reported to have delivered at Northfield. The craving of some newspapers for articles of a personal and censorious character is much to be regretted.

It is understood that Mr. A. H. Baynes's report to the Baptist Missionary Society on his visits to the mission stations of India will embody some very practical recommendations. Among the problems to be dealt with are: The appropriation of the time and energy of missionaries to preaching to a handful of Anglo-Indians, nominally Christian, while vast multitudes around are living in complete ignorance of the Gospel; and the maintenance of native agents, which should be a charge upon the native churches, although grants in aid may in some cases be requisite for a time. This second visit of Mr. Baynes to India has deepened his sense of the great advantage of concentrating effort in a given district rather than diffusing it over a large and indefinite area.

For some time there has been a growing conviction on the part of many supporters of the Society as to the desirability of withdrawal from certain stations. In large cities, where other societies are labouring in far greater strength, it may be deemed better to retire than to remain in a feeble and inefficient condition, such retirement permitting transference to other centres, and so making the agency in them more influential. Should the proposals recommended in the report relative to concentration and consolidation be approved, an appeal is made for several new unmarried missionaries, some of whom should be stationed at a certain centre in the North-West, after the same manner in which the brethren who went out in connection with Rev. W. R. James's scheme have been located at Madripore. Attention is also called to the needs of a large district containing nine millions of people in northern Bengal, where at present there is no missionary endeavour, as presenting a most favourable and urgent opening for the location of a band of devoted brethren. Very properly, the appeal is for the best men the churches can supply.

Prayer and Self-Denial should always go together; and, moreover, they should be the badge and ornament of every disciple of Christ. We cannot but hail with satisfaction the purpose of the Salvation Army to set apart another season in which these graces will be specially exercised, and we trust that the week ending October 4 will be advantageous to the work of the war against sin, and profitable to the hearts and minds of many who may engage in it. Among those who have bespoken God's blessing on the "Week of Self-Denial" is Mr. W. S. Caine, whose words are as cogent as they are evidently cordial:—

> That a number of men and women whose lives are already one long act of self-denial for the sake of others—the foundation principle of Christianity—should strive to find fresh means of self-denial as yet unexplored, that they may help still further the salvation of the world, can only command the admiration and respect of everyone.

These are words which we heartily endorse in commending the Army's example to the practical imitation of all who name the name of Christ.

The Congregational Churches of England and Wales are invited by a vote of the Annual Assembly to set apart next Sunday for special supplication that the Holy Spirit may be more manifestly poured out upon their churches, and upon colleges where young men are trained for the ministry of the Gospel. Rev. R. F. Horton writes to a contemporary with a suggestion that other churches should unite in the day of prayer, and says:—

> If on one given day a great cry of earnest prayer arose from all the several denominations of the Church, we might look forward to a winter's work abounding in brotherly love and fruitful in rich results.

A correspondent calls attention to what threatens to be a serious danger in regard to missionary work—viz., the multiplication of new and smaller societies, to the detriment of those older institutions which have for many years borne the burden and heat of the day. There is ample room for all, if their forces are wisely distributed, and we welcome every fresh endeavour to extend the knowledge of the Lord among the heathen. But we should be sorry to find that the exchequers of old and tried agencies—such as, for example, the Church, Baptist, London, Moravian, and Wesleyan Missionary Societies, should suffer from lack of support, or their operations be crippled thereby. We would, therefore, commend the matter to the prayerful consideration of our readers.

In the current number of The North American Review, Madame Blavatsky, the recognised leader of the Theosophical movement, draws a somewhat pathetic picture of Humanity, with a capital H, crying aloud in the darkness for guidance and light, and, "dimly feeling its origin, and presaging its destiny," stretching out to the East empty hands that "only a spiritual philosophy can fill." She ventures to assert still further that only the "Masters of the Eastern wisdom" can set the foundation, and satisfy the intellect and the spirit, and guide humanity safely through the night to a new day.

We are not disposed to question the weariness and the cravings of humanity, but we do deny the capacity of Theosophy to allay or remove them. One greater than the Masters of the Eastern wisdom has laid the foundations of peace and rest for the human race, and other foundation can no man lay. Theosophy has no message for the slums, and no amount of incomprehensible jargon about "the opalescent tints of modern Psychology" will make up for that vital and fatal defect.

A letter recently appeared in the columns of a weekly contemporary of decidedly "High Church" leanings, upon the spiritual dangers and fallacies of hypnotism and spiritualism, and with the writer's words of warning and caution we cordially agree; but we quote the following extraordinary passage as a lamentable instance alike of the extremes into which a sectarian uncharitableness may run, or of an inability to recognise any work for the good of souls which does not run upon ecclesiastical or "sacramental" lines:—

> May not this hypnotic power of certain persons possessing a strong will over those of weaker wills explain some of the remarkable phenomena of religious revivals, especially the extension of the Salvation Army? The supposition that all spiritual force exercised on man must either be the working of the Holy Spirit or else of Satanic agency can hardly be maintained. There may be another force affecting mankind, i.e., the powerful wills of human beings. This will explain many of the difficulties that beset the minds of parish priests in whose parishes dissenting revivals take place. They are not unmixed evils, and so are apparently not Satanic, for to some souls they appear to do good. They are not the work of the Holy Spirit, for not only are they without the signs of a Divine work, but often hinder the work of the Church, depreciate sacramental grace, and occasionally develop vices opposed diametrically to Gospel teaching.

Comment is needless: such assertions surely are their own refutation.

A writer in The Daily Telegraph urges that what the Church of England really needs in the present day is a body of itinerant preachers. We certainly think that the establishment of such a body of evangelists would result in much good, but that they should receive £1000 a year each, as the writer goes on to propose, seems to us quite out of the question. Are there no men who, with a burning desire to win souls, would be willing to take up the work on more Apostolic conditions, not seeking personal advantage from it, but willing to spend and be spent in the cause of the Master?

As the season is approaching for the renewal of music-hall licences in London, we would urge our readers to exercise their influence with individual members of the London County Council for the better administration of these places of amusement. The Council is already alive to the necessity of strict supervision, but unless its members are supported by their constituents its power will be minimised. One of the greatest evils incident to music-halls is their close association with the liquor traffic, apart from their many other objectionable features. We trust the Christian public feeling will make itself heard, and that further checks may be placed upon the demoralisation of our young people. Our good friend, Mr. E. W. Thomas, of the Preventive and Reformatory Homes (200, Euston-road, N.W.), is interesting himself in this matter, and would aid in consolidating any such efforts.

The British Medical Journal deprecates the growing practice on the part of doctors of prescribing medicated wines, and urges that the custom is fraught with danger, as such prescriptions may excite to inebriate indulgence, and in certain cases arouse a latent and inordinate craving for drink. So, too, in regard to the use of narcotic preparations, some of which are perhaps even more dangerous than their alcoholic brethren. Our contemporary makes the remarkable statement that most of the advertised "cures" for alcoholic addiction are composed largely of alcohol, many of them being stronger in intoxicating properties than most alcoholic beverages.

It is sometimes at a very great cost that earnest men rebuke public evils. Rev. Sidney Savage, vicar of St. Mark's, Barrow-in-Furness, a courageous temperance reformer, recently used language with regard to the blighting curse of the liquor traffic which was sufficiently personal to expose him to fifteen actions for libel, brought by persons interested in the trade. The actions have been compromised, and costs paid amounting to nearly £500. Canon Wilberforce, writing to The Pall Mall Gazette, well says:—

> Considering the unspeakable mischief done to the masses of the people by that which Lord Randolph Churchill calls "the destructive and devilish liquor traffic," temperance reformers should thank God when prominent clergymen abandon the attitude of silent and timid toleration which has been too much the mildew of the Christian Church, and should stand shoulder to shoulder in support of one who through, possibly, excess of zeal has come within range of the enemy's fire.

A fund has been opened to recoup Mr. Savage (who is son-in-law of Archdeacon Farrar) the severe penalty of his well-meant endeavour. We trust there will be no lagging behind on the part of friends of individual sobriety and social well-being.

We are glad to see that the Birmingham justices are taking vigorous action in regard to "tied houses," and that they have determined to refuse to renew licences in all cases in that town in which it is found that the property is that of one of the brewery companies. As a matter of fact, the tied house is simply a place in which to get rid of as much intoxicating drink as possible to the advantage of the brewer or shareholders, the occupant being not the landlord of the premises, only a name. The matter is a most important one, and drink manufacturers are preparing to contest the point of the legality of the magistrates' action. We trust, therefore, that at the coming licensing sessions all friends of temperance and religion will do what they can to support the magistrates, who follow the example set by their colleagues in Birmingham.

The annual conference of the Library Association, held last week at Reading, introduced an important notice of an amendment on a national question. Our readers will know that a town can avail itself of the provisions of Acts of Parliament in relation to free libraries by a majority vote in public meeting, or one through voting papers. But again and again earnest workers for the well-being of a community have found themselves defeated by a combination led by tavern-keepers. It is now proposed that Municipal, or other local authorities, who are elected by the ratepayers, shall be as free to provide public libraries for the people as they now are to pave the roads and supply good water.

One aspect of this free library movement has not received the consideration it deserves. Doubtless books are read which might well be left unread. This evil, however, diminishes, and a real necessity grows. Questions touching the duties of the capitalist and the producer; the right of association of the employer and the employed; the drawing or otherwise of a hard and fast line in regard to hours of labour; the claims of home life; encroachments on the Sabbath; employment of women; free contracts, profit-sharing, &c., are becoming controversies of absorbing interest. Nothing can be more urgent than that both sides of these questions should be considered by workmen. To leave them in the thraldom of Socialistic leaders, or of one-sided journals, imperils the safety of the nation. Free libraries meet this demand. "Where no counsel is," saith the Scripture, "the people fall; but in the multitude of counsellers there is safety."

The Daily News calls attention in a noteworthy article to the striking indications of a rapidly progressing change of opinion in native Indian society in regard to the rightful position of woman. The question certainly is the most important under consideration in the present day, and the native press has condemned, almost unanimously, many of the marriage and other customs which have been so powerful in retaining the Indian women in an ignoble and unworthy position. The time, therefore, seems to have arrived for vigorous action on the part of the authorities, and we trust that ere long we shall see steps taken in the direction of fostering and strengthening the growing public feeling in the matter.

It is pleasant to record another instance, in addition to that of the Royal Niger Company, of careful thought on the part of a trading company in Africa, for the welfare of the native races with whom they come in contact. The Standard, describing an exploring trip to Mashonaland, states that the South Africa Chartered Company aims at the abolition of domestic slavery, which means to the native tribes a constant dread of murder and pillage at the hands of the Matabele. It is also asserted that the Company intend to do their utmost to protect the natives in their territories from the terrible drink traffic, which has been the ruin of the souls and bodies of so many of their brethren in the Cape Colony and other parts of Africa. Even apart from its undoubted morality and righteousness, such a policy will, we doubt not, ultimately redound to the pecuniary benefit of the Company.

It is satisfactory to learn, from later intelligence, that a decided disclaimer has been given to the very serious charge, to which we alluded last week, to the effect that the German Vice-Commissioner at Bagamoyo had issued a proclamation permitting free and open traffic in slaves in the territories of the German East African Company, and that slaves were being openly bought and sold. The German Imperial Commissioner at Bagamoyo officially denies that any such proclamation has been posted up, or that any auction of slaves has taken place; and the German Government by its official organ declares itself resolved uncompromisingly to oppose slave raids and slave trading, and promises to place further restrictions upon the existing system of slavery, and to see that they are properly enforced. An investigation is to be made into the origin of a statement calculated to do such grievous harm. It is incumbent upon English and Germans alike, whose position in East Africa is one of the gravest responsibility, to be most careful to avoid any action which might set back the clock of civilisation and progress even for a day.

The United States are threatened with a widespread agitation on the public school question. One powerful party of the Roman Catholics are denouncing the public schools as immoral because they are undenominational; another is pleading that one portion of time should be devoted to purely secular and the other portion to denominational instruction. Meanwhile the Supreme Court in Wisconsin has decided that the reading of the Bible in public schools is illegal because it is "sectarian instruction," and against this view an appeal seems likely to be carried to the Supreme Court of the Union. The New York Independent devotes twelve pages to the controversy, and is strong in the conviction that the present system is safely entrenched in the love of the people. The battle with Ultramontanism is everywhere, among Swiss and Americans, and needs consummate wisdom and firmness.

The Romanist journals are indignant with a modern dramatist who has ventured to portray a priest revealing the secrets of the confessional; but, as Rome "never changes," it may be assumed that there are only too good grounds for the portrait. Readers of the history of Protestantism in Spain will not need to have their attention directed to notable cases in which the confessional was the means by which possessors of copies of God's Word were discovered and brought up, and in even more recent days in Italy, during the Garibaldian movement, instances were plentiful in which the priest gave information to the tyrannical civil power. What other uses are made of the power which the confessional gives have been fully detailed by able and responsible Continental writers familiar with the subject.

"The Christian" in Hospitals.—We understand that back numbers of The Christian would be welcome to patients at the infirmary in the Archway-road, Highgate. At other similar institutions copies of the paper would doubtless perform a useful ministry. They should in every case be delivered carriage paid.

THE THREE GARDENS.

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN WHERE THEY LAID HIM.

IX.—The Gospel of the Resurrection.

(Concluded).

"Vanity of vanities, all is vanity" bursts from ten thousand hearts that the world has disappointed—not in scorn and recklessness, but oftentimes very sadly. Throughout society we find unrest, heart-weariness, repining, vain regrets, "wild and wandering cries" disclosing memories—like pools of lava that have not yet cooled down—of evil passion, self-willed rebelliousness, eager rushing after pleasures that cannot satisfy. What does it all mean? What but this, that men have not yet found a Saviour for the present life—a Saviour who saves?

Just listen to the voices around us. There is the cry—one might almost call it the wail—"Who will show us any good?" There were many who uttered it in the Psalmist's day. There be many who utter it to-day—millions more than the Psalmist ever dreamed of. It comes up wherever the light of morning comes; wherever the evening shadow falls; in all centuries, in all lands, in all forms of speech, in inarticulate groanings that will not be repressed. Even in the hour of success, when the hand closes on the coveted prize, the disappointed heart exclaims, Is this all? and there still remains, as fierce as ever, the unquenched longing for something not yet attained. It is really the bewildered cry of children who have lost their father—who have lost sight of Him, and wandered away in the dark. Can a satisfactory practical answer be given; or must men simply learn to be dumb, and crush down the inner misery, and keep their heel upon it, and smile with their lips, and learn to desire nothing?

On another side the cry comes up—not flippantly, but from well-nigh breaking hearts that have stumbled into doubt against their seeking—Is there in very truth a living God, who is Light and Love? Or is there only eternal matter and changeless law? And is the God of my childhood, to whom my mother taught me to say, "Our Father who art in heaven," an illusion that melts away before advancing light and science? Is heaven empty, and earth Fatherless?

In another quarter the cry comes up, half tauntingly, half in earnest: Does God care? See what He is doing! How He wastes the life He has created! You point me to the loveliness of nature—the evening shadows on the hills of God, the starry magnificence of night, the dewy verdure of morning, the earth arrayed in the beautiful robes of spring or wearing her golden harvest crown; you bid me listen to the song-birds and the sweet tones of all nature, and the laughter of the bright-eyed children; and I, in turn, point you to battle and murder going on in his creation, strength remorselessly vanquishing weakness, victims reaching death through torture and agony. How ruthlessly throughout nature He crushes whatsoever comes in the way of his wheels, not turning aside by a hair's breadth in order to spare! Goodness is no defence against Him, nor does He pity weakness, nor bate one pang to the sufferer. The innocent is stricken down with the guilty. The babe suffers because the father sinned. All creation groans, and there is no sign that its Maker heeds; He lets the misery run on. God cannot care if He allows such things. I do not complain of my own lot; but my heart breaks for the misery of this miserable earth.

On another side, from some blasted spot in one of our great cities, where human beings are huddled together in poverty and squalor, and have all but abandoned hope, whether in God or man, a voice rises piercingly: Have you aught to say about human brotherhood? Not a stone's cast from us is wealth, luxury, refinement, a civilisation such as the world never saw before, churches glorious to look at, but into which shame (or call it self-respect) forbids us to venture; and here, in miserable dens, we are herding like wild beasts, the life crushed out of us by hunger and want. We were born into this state; so are our children; and we see no redemption from it: have you any help for us? Has your Gospel anything in it to meet our case? Or must we look to Socialism and Communism? There is a great gulf fixed between you and us; and on our side there is growing up a terrible hatred of the well-to-do, and a terrible impatience of the system which makes the few, rich—and leaves the many, hopeless toilers or paupers. We do not want your Mansion House Funds and your so-called charities; we want a change of the system which bears the evil fruit. There must be a terrible wrong somewhere: do you know what it is? can you do anything to remedy it? What does your Gospel say?

In another quarter one sobs out: O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me? I have sinned in ways that I dare not tell; there are black spots in my life that all the water in the ocean could not wash out; is there God's pardon for one like me? My will-power is gone; I cannot resist temptation; can your Christ make anything of a life so misused and wasted and leprous as mine? Or must sin work itself out in death?

Another, who has enjoyed the world but missed out God, is nearing the inevitable end; the tide of life is slowly ebbing away, leaving him like a dismasted and stranded hulk with only dull reaches of yellow sand and oozy weed where once the full deep sea had been. The world has no promise for him now; and he begins to think of that hereafter for which he has made no preparation. How awful it looks! Is that which I took for a far-off phantom, God? Is He living? Must I meet Him? Is there retribution on the other side of death? What is the meaning of those awful words about "the wrath of God," which almost burn on the page that records them? Is there no room for repentance in that world to come? Is there no kneeling-place for prayer?

Questions like these are in men's hearts, and are being asked in all forms of speech, or in no form of speech at all, but in groanings that cannot be uttered. And then, behind the questions, what an awful "if" there is, an "if" that lies in many a heart where the lips are silent—an "if" more terrible than the gasping of death. If Thou art, O God—

> If e'er thine ear in mercy bent
> When wretched mortals cried to Thee—
> And If, indeed, thy Son was sent
> To save lost sinners such as me.

The condition indicated by such questions and doubts is dread beyond conception. Our plummet cannot sound its depths: only God can deal with it. For it needs a Divine Saviour and a Divine Spirit.

In the questions that have been quoted, and in the condition they indicate, there is a terrible pathos. For the questions are not those of speculatists, but of men as on a battle-field who know not how soon they may be shot. True, there is a jaunty unbelief abroad, clever and sarcastic, proud of itself, whose tone is as easily recognisable for its insincerity as is the whine of a professional beggar; but there is also a profound and most pathetic earnestness which cannot but touch every man with a heart in his breast. In any case, it is not possible to silence the questioning, and it is foolish to try.

The real answer to man's need is Jesus Christ. Not that vague, powerless abstraction called "Christianity," which never saved anybody, and never will, but Jesus Christ Himself, wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities, risen from the dead, exalted to the right hand of power, operating on earth through the Holy Ghost, conquering carnal, selfish hearts by the magnanimity of suffering love.

The record of the four Evangelists shows how He began in the days of his flesh. Oh, the tears He wiped away, the wounds He healed, the bonds He unloosed, the frenzy He calmed, the gloom He dispelled, the souls He restored from the ways of death, the purity He created, the everlasting hopes He kindled! Has He expended all his force? Are those wondrous years, when He dwelt among us, full of grace and truth, the fulfilment of his commission? Are they not rather the promise of what is yet to come, now that He is risen and glorified? Are they not the mere showing of his hand and foreshadowing of what He means to do through the wonder-working of the Holy Spirit?

I know no other hope for this poor, bleeding world of ours, nor other means to heal its wounds and assuage its fierce misery. The world's salvation hangs on Him. A vast claim to make on his behalf. But not vaster than He makes for Himself. Calmly facing the ages, He says—"Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden," come with your questions, your perplexities, and dreads, with your failures, with your heart-sickness, with your sin and shame and misery and vain regrets—come, all of you—"and I will give you rest." Nor is the claim vaster than his Apostles make for Him. "We have seen," they say, "and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world."

Saviour: this is not a courtesy-title; He is called Saviour because He saves—saves, not merely from the wrath to come, but from the evils of the present, aimlessness, selfishness, pride, hate, falsehood, fleshliness, and whatever other "works of the devil" may be named; does not merely open the gate of heaven to believers, but opens the gate of the heart to take heaven in, in the beginnings of its purity and joy. As He comes up, sun-like, on the soul's horizon, the true light shineth. As souls surrender to Him, the evils that curse humanity begin to wither from the root.

Through the gracious power of Jesus Christ the sun looks down on fairer and brighter scenes to-day than it did nineteen centuries ago. Yet how sad a spectacle the world still presents! Take what is most outward. Here is selfishness watching selfishness, class at war with class, nation scowling at nation, armed to the teeth to defend its "interests," or its "honour."* We keep the peace by means of shotted guns. And if war breaks out, what a wild joy is kindled, and how men rush to the fray! Will a day ever come when it shall be otherwise; when we shall have brotherhood where now we have distrust or enmity, and shall be able to lay aside our slaughter-weapons? Such a day is promised in Jesus Christ, and is on the way through the surrender of hearts to Him. He is the Prince of Peace. Under his gracious rule, "they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Living in brotherhood, they shall forget the science of war: they shall learn it no more. Yet the weapons of war shall not be lost, or given up to be devoured by rust. The iron of the sword blade and spear, released from the service of death, shall be used for the benefit of man—beaten into ploughshare and pruning-hook, that yellow harvests may wave, and autumn yield her fruits. The wealth spent on armies and navies, and in maintaining the terrible apparatus of slaughter, shall be released from such use, and made to contribute to the world's comfort. The energy, the daring, the endurance, the faculty of swift decision and command that made the warrior shall not be lost, but employed in other service. The genius that created Iliads, or that inspired battle odes, shall become holiness to the Lord. And so, in all the compass that the words suggest, "they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks," and shall live in brotherhood, through the triumph of that kingdom which is righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

Every conversion of a soul to God means a step toward the glorious issue, and so does every good and holy purpose created in a Christian heart, and every Christ-like deed wrought by Christian hands." "He shall not fail nor be discouraged" till his purpose—the purpose of eternity—is accomplished. And when at last He surveys his new creation in its completeness, clad in garments whiter than snow and purer than the purest light, He shall have a joy ineffable, measureless, Divine.

"For, behold (the ancient oracle ran), I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind." The ages pass, with Christ at work, and the Seer of the Apocalypse tells his Vision, and shows what Christ had been doing: "I saw a new heaven and a new earth...and I saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband; and I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God Himself shall be with them, their God; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor sighing, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away."

WALTON-ON-THE-NAZE.—Miss Moore, who has been staying here lately, writes: "We had services on the sands for nearly a month, first for children, and afterwards for adults. They were well attended, as also were meetings nearly every evening. The Home of Rest room was too small, so the Primitive Methodist Chapel was thrown open to us. Much blessing attended our efforts, and we were asked by three ministers to take missions. My mother is not able to leave home, so I am going, with a friend who has been helping us, to Haverhill, Suffolk, on October 11, for a week's mission. I have started and got workers for a Band of Hope at Walton."

Holy Ghost Power.

"Words...which the Holy Ghost teacheth."
1 COR. ii. 13.

THE best chapter in homiletics ever written is the second chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians. Many books on "preaching" and homiletics are eminently unsatisfactory and misleading. They go to the making of orators and rhetoricians it cannot be denied, but for one ounce of comfort they give to the man whose chief desire is to preach the Gospel, they burden him with a ton of complicated precepts and mysterious suggestions as to style, language, manner, and such like.

"Who is sufficient for these things?" may well be the reflection of one's mind after perusing a few chapters of ordinary homiletics.

It is not eloquence so much as power in preaching that is needed. There is eloquence without power; that is, power to effect moral and spiritual results, which surely is the only estimable aim of preaching, as distinct from "orating." Of course, wherever power is manifested in preaching there we shall always discover what we style "eloquence"; not, however, implying by the term mere elegance of form, but a something that forces our attention, compels our interest, and, despite ourselves, turns the current of our thought and purpose.

Such eloquence is to power what the rainbow is to the refreshing showers after a long drought. We look up at the glowing bow with thankfulness and admiration, because it is the accompaniment of that which gladdens our hearts. Our eyes are upon the bow, but our heart is with the needed rain, "the thirsty land refreshing." After all, it is the rain we want.

The first condition of all true preaching is that the preacher be absolutely convinced of the need, the urgent need, of his hearers; if he can meet this, he does a real service; how he does it is of little consequence. If condemnation be an empty term, if the wrath and justice of God be mere theological modes of expression, and the damnation of souls a dream, he may preach to entertain; but the man who believes the statements of God's Word, who believes in the dark destiny of unconverted souls, who believes that salvation through Christ is a necessity to eternal life, he it is who will prevail with men, because he knows their need.

IF HELL BE A FICTION,

Next, the preacher must himself possess a positive faith in the Gospel as the power of God unto salvation. With a heart that feels intensely the desperate need of the unregenerate, and a burning faith in the efficacy of the Gospel to meet this need, he requires no priestly sanction, but may dare to stand up and plead with men, and let him do it in his own way without anxiety as to grammar and style.

Many a Christian man thinks himself unfit and incapable of delivering the shortest address in public, and delays in the hope that by-and-by he will be better able to do so, thus losing the experience he would gain from practice. But this is not all. However admirable may be the modesty that restrains him from entering upon so important a work, it nevertheless proceeds from utterly mistaken ideas of the nature and character of that work.

We must dismiss from our minds the notion that any formal excellence of ours can give power to the spoken word. On the contrary, it is not impossible that with increased facility in the use of words, and what is supposed to be a more accurate and refined manner of expression, we may actually lose in power.

To be more anxious as to how we shall present the truth than of the importance of the truth itself is to overlook entirely the very first principle of Christian work. I do not wish it to be inferred from this that the worker's power is in the ratio of his ignorance. The true worker will seek to develop and perfect his whole mental, moral, and spiritual character; but at the time of speaking, when he stands before his audience, there must be no thought, no suspicion, no shadow of suspicion as to his inability or his ignorance, and no consciousness of his own ability or wisdom; he must give himself up to the direction and control of the Holy Spirit of God.

The best worker with God is the best worker for God. Hence "failure" and "success" are not proper terms in reference to the result of our efforts. We may be as wide of the mark in attributing our "failure" to our stammering utterance and questionable grammar, as when we ascribe our "success" to the easy flow of our speech, and the accurate method of our discourse.

I believe that the conviction is fast gaining ground that for the extension of the kingdom of God we must look less than we have done to mere elegance of methods. The golden trowel must give place to the trowel of steel. Men begin to feel that the whole question of eternal salvation is far too serious and pressing to be any longer buried beneath a load of refinements and inanities; "we would see Jesus." The tide of human life is gathering velocity, the march of earth's millions is accelerating with an awful speed downwards. Souls have we want bare truth, truth that we can lay hold upon, and by it be lifted out of the perishing crowd.

I am not now presuming to give advice, but recording my conviction, that the only true work for God is work with God, in the sense of absolute abandonment of self. We must suffer the Spirit to speak through us.

This does not exclude what is called preparation; it only excludes self-direction at the moment of action.

To inferior officers is given the disciplining and perfecting of battalions; but in action the general commanding "sets the battle in array," gives the position of this battery and of that, allocates his brigades where he wills, and decides the time and method of advance, attack, or defence.

I begin to think, therefore, that when we go out prepared, as we call it, with text, divisions, and words pre-arranged, we are much in the position of a commander who adheres inflexibly to one pre-ordered method of attack, regardless as to whether he may have to fight on the plain or in mountain passes, to combat a Continental army or a Soudan horde.

God alone knows what is the nature, number, and character, of the foe we shall meet.

"But," it may be said, "may He not dispose us beforehand to make effective attack, and take us into the conflict prepared in every particular?" Certainly; yet there is an element of weakness that betrays itself under the inquiry. "You wish to feel fully prepared beforehand; have you any suspicion that He will fail you?" "No; but I want to do my best." "To what end?" "The conversion of souls and the glory of God." "Not by might nor by strength, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

This also is true, that it must not appear even that the words you speak are of yourself, and this will appear whether you read from a paper or from the hidden tablets of your memory.

The listening spirit of man will detect it, however skilful you may be. To touch and move the hearts of men we need something more than the authority of our own minds; in a matter of this kind men wait for and look for the sanction of a higher authority; when our words are stamped with this sanction they cannot be mistaken.

The desire to do our best is, humanly speaking, praiseworthy; but the danger is that in doing our best, or having done our best, we may be just a little conscious of it. "My glory will I not give to another.

Jeremiah was anxious about his best, and said, "Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak: for I am a child." But the Lord said unto him, "Say not, I am a child; for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee... be not afraid of their faces...Behold I have put my words in thy mouth."

J. R. BENNETT.

DOCKERS AT TEA.

ABOUT five months ago, I was taking a friend to see Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall. It happened to be an evening when he was giving one of those "Teas," which are so frequent and so useful in connection with his work. I was not aware of this until I entered and saw the spacious hall crowded to the second gallery with men who have now become so familiar to us as "Dockers." My friend and I got wedged in amongst them, and made the most of our opportunity to observe all that took place.

Mr. Charrington, as the chosen honorary treasurer of the men and host of the evening, had been presented with a magnificent white silk sash, richly embroidered in gold. Some bell-ringers played "Home, Sweet Home," which seemed to hold that vast, rough gathering spell-bound. The man who sat at my left hand had tears in his eyes, as he turned to me and said with a gasp rather than a sigh, "There's only one home." "The home above?" I asked. "Yes," he replied. The refining, touching influence of the music and its sentiment had reached the man's inner soul. Mr. G. F. Cook, the temperance advocate, followed with a speech upon "The home here below, and the home hereafter," setting before the men the miseries of the drunkard's home, of his wife, of his children, and earnestly urging them to give up the "drink," which brought a curse to every house, to forsake the publichouse, which left a man no home. The substantial result of the address was that 127 men signed the pledge on the spot. One might almost call this the inauguration of the temperance movement amongst them, which I rejoice to see has been steadily on the increase. Is not this the way to reach such men? A little friendly fellowship, a cup of tea, a homely interesting entertainment for their special benefit. May not the short cut to their souls lie through their hearts? I think so.

A LOOKER-ON.

REV. DR. PIERSON of Philadelphia has bought fifteen acres of ground at Northfisld adjoining Mr. Moody's seminary, on which he proposes to erect a cottage for his own use and a House of Rest for missionaries who have come home to recuperate.

SCOTTISH CONFERENCES.

CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE, DUNDEE.

DUNDEE is the centre of the great jute industry, and is well-known, the world over, for its enterprise and the business acumen of its merchants. It has also been the scene of the labours of many a devoted and successful servant of God. It is not very long, however, since the earnest Christians in the town were moved to meet annually in united conference: probably the visits of the American Evangelists, Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, helped largely in this direction. These occasions have been fraught with real profit and stimulus to believers, as well as times of converting grace. This may truthfully be said of the Conference meetings held from Tuesday to Thursday last week in the Kinnaird Hall. The attendances and the interest manifested were very encouraging, and so were the known results. One thing must have specially and happily impressed the visitor—the entire absence of the sectarian element. Quite a large number of local pastors and others took part in the proceedings, but nobody could have had the least inkling, from the announcements, or from the addresses themselves, to what branch of the one Church the speakers belonged. All were so intent on magnifying the common Lord, and on setting forth the common faith, that party walls (which in Scotland, as elsewhere, are high enough) were quite lost to view. This is a feature of these modern conferences for which we cannot be too thankful.

The great bulk of the speaking, morning and evening, was done by invited friends from a distance; these were Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, London; Rev. C. B. Sawday, Leicester; Rev. Dr. Williamson, Belfast; Rev. J. G. Train, Hull; Rev. F. E. Marsh, Sunderland; and Dr. Kerr Cross, of Africa. All those fresh voices were highly acceptable, and each friend, according to his special gift or message, contributed much to the common profit. The general topic of conference was —one supremely important, and needing to be constantly brought forward in such a materialistic and money-grubbing age as the present. The threefold division of the subject was orderly and conducive to its practical consideration. The first set speaker on Tuesday was

THE SPIRITUAL LIFE

REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES.

His popularity as an exponent of the Christian faith in action had reached Dundee before him, and he had the largest morning audience of the three days. The sub-topic committed to him was the reality of the spiritual life as shown in its Divine origin. Christ's talk with Nicodemus was the basis of a stirring address, and its key-note was the absolute necessity for the impartation of a new life by the Divine Spirit. John the Evangelist represents Christianity as a life, and this life is only to be had as the gift of God in his Son. Nicodemus was, perhaps, the greatest ecclesiastic and theologian of his day, but Christ had to teach him that mere orthodoxy of the head is nothing when divorced from the religion of the heart. Outward reformation is good, but it is not enough; the very spring of the life must be changed. The most overwhelming evidence of Christianity is the living Christian. Thank God there are millions of such Christians, who could go into the witness box and testify from experience to the reality of this spiritual life. Mr. Hughes declared he could find in the neighbourhood of Soho, who had been turned from darkness to light within the past three years. Scientific men have utterly failed to show that life can spring up without pre-existent life; so the Divine life cannot be evolved out of anything; it must be given by God Himself. Men point to the failure of Christianity, but the failure is only on the part of those who try to be Christians without having been born again.

Mr. Hughes graphically reproduced the points in an engine driver's address he heard some years since at a Railway Mission meeting in Exeter Hall. Its climax was the catch-words educate, educate, and legislate, legislate, which, though good in themselves, must give place to regenerate, regenerate, if men and women are to be truly saved. There is no essential quarrel between religion and true science, but the effective and permanent reconstruction of society can only be carried out by men and women whose hearts have been changed by the power of the living God. We ought to look and labour for great social reforms—the abolition of strikes, lock-outs, wars, and standing armies—but, in order to the achievement of such high ideals, we must have a large multiplication of those who possess and lay out the life which is the free gift of God.

REV. C. B. SAWDAY,

of Leicester, followed with some helpful words on the Divine maintenance of this spiritual life. We need in these days, he said, to have our life splendidly maintained: not to be like the man whose epitaph was—

Poorly lived; poorly died;
Poorly buried; nobody cried.

This epitaph might be written over many a church as well as individual. In Christ's conversation with the woman of Samaria, Mr. Sawday found many practical points as to the maintenance of life. The living water within the man is not only for his own refreshment, but for the blessing of others. Lips that are wet with that living water cannot be silent. We read of one of Christ's miracles that "they all did eat and were filled." So many, nowadays, are satisfied with little, and do not eat of the Heavenly bread till they are filled. We are enjoined not to labour for the meat that perisheth, but for that which will endure to life eternal. In this busy age men do not take time to have their souls properly fed. God is ever ready to bestow this bread upon us; sometimes we are praying for it when we ought to be receiving it. Let us feed continually by faith on the Son of God, and our Christian life will be kept strong and vigorous.

In the evening, to an immense congregation,

DR. WILLIAMSON, BELFAST,

spoke with searching power on the transcendent importance of the choice between Christ and the world, as illustrated by the conduct of the people of Gadara, who preferred their swine to the presence of the Saviour among them. Then followed an old-fashioned, keen, incisive Gospel appeal, in which the speaker contrasted the position of "sinners" and "sons." The great audience listened intently, and it seemed as though the Spirit were driving home the faithful and urgent message. Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES followed with another very weighty and pungent deliverance, setting forth the issues of life and death in his own clear-cut, trenchant fashion. He pressed home, by precept and by illustration, the necessity and the possibility of instant decision for Christ. Then came some

MEMORABLE WORDS TO CHRISTIANS.

Lazy and cowardly professors are the curse of the churches, and the greatest hindrance to the progress of the Gospel. Why is it that the majority of Church members are drones? Great numbers are not essential. If fifty Dundee Christians were wholly given to God, the evangelisation of the city would soon be accomplished. Twelve consecrated young disciples are better than 5000 namby-pamby professors. Our Churches are largely hospitals full of sickly patients, instead of being bands of valiant and conquering soldiers of the Cross. These conferences are pleasant, but they are only a means to an end, and must not be made the occasion merely of self complacent enjoyment.

Passing on to speak of some of the crying evils found in Dundee, Mr. Hughes declaimed powerfully on the drink curse, and on the iniquity of having permitted a network of soul-destroying publichouses to be spread over the city. What is the use of holding holiness conventions if we do not take steps to stop the ravages of strong drink? The evils of gambling and lust were also referred to and denounced with no bated breath, and the Christians were urged to help in the removal of these social curses. More deadly, however, than all other agencies in retarding the kingdom of Christ, in Mr. Hughes's opinion, is the love of money that has taken possession of so many professors of the Christian faith. He said he had an increasing sense of the enormity of this stumbling-block, and he meant to cry out against it more and more. The aggressive work of the churches, he said in closing, lies mostly in the hands of the Christian young men and women of the time, and to these he addressed an impassioned plea for thorough consecration of life and energy. In a final word, Mr. Hughes asked for the prayers of fellow-believers in Dundee for his important work of evangelisation in the West of London, "where Satan's seat is."

GROWTH AND PERFECTION

of the Spiritual Life were the morning topics of Wednesday and Thursday. On the former morning, Rev. J. G. TRAIN, of Hull, took up the subject of growth as promoted by communion with God. It seems difficult in our day, he said, to have sustained waiting on God in secret, but this soul exercise is very essential to vigour and increase of life. A careful and prayerful study of the revealed Word was also urged. Like the sainted Murray McCheyne, of Dundee, let us turn Scripture into prayer. We are in danger of paying too much attention to commentaries and devotional literature, to the exclusion of the pure Word itself. Let us have milk fresh and unadulterated; there is a good deal of milk and water given out nowadays by our public teachers. Mr. Train told of an old Scotchman who was learning to read very late in life. His wife was asked one day how he was progressing, and she replied: "Oh, he's gettin' on fine; he's oot o' the Testament into the newspaper." The application of the story is obvious. We need to be on our guard against anything that would interfere with this constant communion with God and feeding on his truth, whether it be business or social claims and amusement—anything that will leave an unpleasant taste in the mouth of the soul, and destroy the relish for prayer and Divine fellowship.

REV. F. E. MARSH

dealt next, somewhat discursively, with "witnessing" as a means of growth. His main point was that in this department of the spiritual life, as in others, Christ must be the Alpha and the Omega. All witnessing must circle around Him, otherwise it will become mechanical and will be of no practical value. Self consciousness and self-sufficiency in our witness can only be avoided by looking unto Jesus.

REV. A. S. INCH,

who presided on the last morning, had some timely words to say on the "perfection of the spiritual life." The ideal Christian state, he said, is too often regarded as shadowy and unpractical. We are satisfied with the commonplace of attainment. We seem to live in two separate worlds: we have our moments of devotion and our hours of worldliness. We profess to ask God for guidance; then we go away and take counsel with all and sundry. These conferences are perhaps mountain tops in our experience, but soon we are in the valley, and the vapours of earth shut out the view. Why should not our business life be as devout as our prayer-meetings? Why should we crush all our real Christianity into our Sabbaths?

PERSONAL HOLINESS,

as an element in the perfected life, was the theme of a very searching—almost crushing—word of exhortation from Dr. WILLIAMSON, of Belfast. He contemplated the serene and perfect holiness of God, and contrasted that with the poor attainments that we find in ourselves. Yet we are commanded to be holy and without blame before God in love. This height is only to be fully reached by us here as we are in Christ. A few pious thoughts and feelings are not enough. While we must not flippantly talk of having "a clean heart," let us strive in the might of the Saviour to get as near this spiritual perfection as we may.

Rev. F. E. MARSH, in an address full of expository teaching, looked at the subject in its bearing on "the heavenly glory." If we are to be ready for the glory when it is revealed, we must live a life of looking for the second coming of the Son of Man. Our place in the glory is entirely a matter of free grace; our position in the glory will be according to our fidelity in service. In order to an abundant entrance into the heavenly kingdom, we must now have a clear conscience, a purified heart, a yielded will, and devotion in service. In this service we must be true to the old Gospel, filled with the Spirit of God, constrained by his love, and having a single eye to his glory.

THE CONVERSATIONAL MEETINGS

in the afternoon were exceedingly profitable seasons, and had little of the formal element in them. On Tuesday the subject considered was

INTELLECTUAL AND MORAL HINDRANCES.

Rev. J. AITKEN, chairman, remarked on the critical tone and temper of the age in seeking tangible proof of the spiritual. This, he believed, was only a passing phase. We must be patient and sympathetic with such questioners, avoiding all raillery or imputations of wrong motive. The practical materialism which absorbs the energies of the great mass of the people is another serious hindrance. People need to have a higher conception of life and its issues, and this can best be set forth through the exhibition in believers of a true Christian character. We must fight the idea that the spiritual life is merely one department of our being that can either be taken up or let alone; it must be regarded as the source, and spring, and strength of true manhood in all its ramifications. Let us draw our inspiration from the living Christ Himself, and we shall be successful in coping with these hindrances.

In the course of the subsequent conversation, Mr. R. Anderson counselled better spiritual sanitation. Lord Kinnaird protested against paying too much heed to the sceptical deliverances in our periodicals and reviews. We are only fostering doubt, and giving our young people an excuse for not yielding to the claims of God. Rev. C. B. Sawday mentioned worldliness and inconsistency among professors of Christians as a great hindrance. Rev. J. G. Train deemed the craving for worldly honours to be a serious obstacle in the way of others. Rev. Andrew Inglis thought that pride of human intellect kept many from a simple reception of the faith of Christ. Other hindrances mentioned were ignorance and pre-occupation with the things of this life.

FAMILY AND SOCIAL HINDRANCES

were very faithfully set forth, on Wednesday afternoon, by Dr. WILLIAMSON. Briefly, his points were these: Hindrances come from one of the parents being unconverted, or in a backsliding state; undue craving after worldly position for the children; lack of the old-fashioned family training; decline of the family altar; gloomy ideas of the Christian life, and inadequate endeavour to make the home happy and attractive; conformity to the fashions of the world.

These and other points were amplified by succeeding speakers. Among the hindrances noted were the drinking customs and the increase of drinking facilities; worldliness, in the form of card playing, private and public theatricals, ballroom dancing, &c. A city missionary thought that true family life was impossible where the mothers go out early to work, and are away all day, as they often do among the humbler classes. A very earnest spirit was manifest in the discussion. It may be added here that the last half-hour of each afternoon meeting was devoted to prayer on behalf of children and young people—a very praiseworthy feature.

HELPS TO THE SPIRITUAL LIFE

were looked at on the last afternoon. Rev. J. G. Walton strongly commended prayer; study of the Word; close imitation of the character of Christ; frequent fellowship with other believers, especially those more advanced in the Divine life; and a giving out of service for those around us. Another friend spoke of the importance of quiet and protracted meditation, a rare thing in these days; submission to the Divine will; a spirit of patience, even if it can only be secured by tribulation.

Musa Bhai, the Indian Salvationist, gave a brief exhortation, and ended with a glowing and earnest appeal for the evangelisation of the 265 millions of his benighted countrymen. Mr. James Smith (secretary of the Y.M.C.A.) advised as helps regularity of habit in prayer and communion; unquestioning obedience to God's commands; watching for providences and answers to prayer; and a putting away of self-consciousness in service. As to the point that holiness sometimes comes through chastening, he said the three holiest men he had ever known in Dundee were great sufferers. Rev. A. Inglis spoke of "bringing all the tithes into the storehouse," and Rev. Mr. Gibson extolled the study of the promises.

A closing word came from Mr. E. H. GLENNY, of the North Africa Mission. The need of soul exercise, he said, had been spoken of; the best way to get it was to go to the mission field. Then he spoke of North Africa, so near our own shores, and yet so needy. Whereas nine years ago there was not a single known Protestant worker in Algiers, Morocco, Tunis, or Tripoli, there are now nearly a hundred connected with various societies. Seven new workers are about to go out for the North Africa Mission, one of them a medical missionary from Dundee, Dr. Grieve. Mr. Glenny appealed for more workers, and said that if the men were forthcoming God would undoubtedly send the means to support them.

"A LOVE FEAST"

at the rooms of the Y.M.C.A. on Thursday afternoon was a new and very pleasant item in the Conference programme. There was a large attendance, and this social assembly will no doubt become a settled institution at future Dundee Conferences. After tea the chairman, Mr. R. ANDERSON, made a hearty speech, dwelling especially on the need of greater mutual intercourse and more brotherly love among the different sections of the Church of Christ. He told a story of Archbishop Usher, who visited the sainted Samuel Rutherford in disguise, and at the family catechising startled everybody by saying there was an eleventh commandment, which turned out to be our Lord's new commandment to love one another.

We do not know that the Methodist love feasts are exactly after the same pattern as this, but at any rate it was a most happy and profitable occasion. First of all we had from Rev. Mr. BLACK a fervid and faithful sketch of the Keswick Convention and its special teaching. Mr. Black told of the personal blessing that he had received there during three visits, and said that the two years which had elapsed since he went to Keswick first had been the most blessed in his own life, and the most fruitful in his ministry. A convention after the Keswick pattern is to be held in Dundee in February, and the friends seem to anticipate great results in the consecration of those who may attend.

We were next carried across the Atlantic by Rev. F. E. MARSH, and treated to a brief but most enjoyable glimpse of Mr. Moody's at both of which the speaker was present this year. We wish we had space for Mr. Marsh's summary, but must content ourselves with some of the leading points. Speaking first of the Students' Conference, he told how on one occasion a Frenchman, an Irishman, a Scotchman, and an Englishman sang a hymn together, while a Swede played the organ. The students' missionary meetings greatly struck Mr. Marsh, and here again the wonderfully cosmopolitan character of the audience was seen. At one meeting there were addresses from a Red Indian, a Chinese, a Japanese, a Swede, a German, a Frenchman, an Irishman, a Scotchman, and an Englishman. One occasion, when Mr. Sankey sang "The Ninety and Nine" on the Round Top Hill, was very effectively referred to. As the grand strains of the singer rang out, the hills in the distance took up the notes and sent them back in echoing refrain. The phrase in one verse "sick and helpless and ready to die," sank deep into Mr. Marsh's mind, and seemed to speak to him of the cry that is going up to heaven from a groaning creation; it pictures forth the heart longing for the Gospel message of men and women in India, China, Africa, and other dark lands of heathendom. The leading speakers and their topics were referred to, and among the latter Mr. Moody's talks on the Gospels and the Acts were by no means the least helpful.

Coming to the August Conference of Christian Workers, Mr. Marsh very aptly showed how the subjects taken up were peculiarly adapted to meet the varied needs of the time, as indicated in Mr. Moody's invitation circular, which said:—

There are in the churches stores of unconsecrated wealth, unused or misused talents, multitudes at ease in Zion, witnesses who bear no testimony for the Lord, workers without the Spirit's conquering power, teachers who speak without authority, disciples who follow afar off, forms without life, letter without spirit, church machinery substituted for inward life and power.

Mr. Moody's wonderful tact in seizing the fit occasion for evoking the generosity of the conference attenders was illustrated, and altogether Mr. Marsh's necessarily hurried account must have created in the minds of many Dundonians a strong desire to visit Northfield at some future conference.

A word of testimony from Dr. KERR CROSS as to the refreshing he had received as a foreign missionary from these united home gatherings of believers, led him to speak briefly but impressively of the spiritual needs of Africa, where there are five millions of people to every single Christian voice that can speak to them. Then Mr. E. H. GLENNY gave an intensely interesting and powerful presentation of the claims of Gospel work among the Moslems of Northern Africa. His representation of the low morale of the people and the unspeakable degradation of woman was fearful in its blackness; while the success that has attended the work, especially the medical missions, formed an agreeable set-off to the dark background of the picture. The most recent development in Tripoli was spoken of as especially encouraging, and certainly no one who heard it can forget Mr. Glenny's story of North Africa, told from personal observation gained during nine visits to that region.

Last of all we had a very simple and touching account of quiet but fruitful work in Bethany, the place of our Lord's Ascension, by Miss CRAWFORD, and a thrilling appeal on behalf of the heathen world from Miss CAMPBELL, of the China Inland Mission. This "love feast" was truly a very memorable and delightful time.

THE EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The Dundee friends wisely arrange to make the most of the evening meetings in pressing home the Gospel message on the great throngs that attend. Kinnaird Hall was crammed all the three evenings of the Conference, and the meetings were soul-stirring in the extreme. On the first evening, Mr. Price Hughes, in addition to the address noted above, conducted the after-meeting, and directed his weighty words of appeal and admonition to three classes in the audience—Christians who had wholly given themselves to God, half-hearted professors, and the undecided. When he came to draw the net, as he did with rare skill, the responses to his invitations were very numerous, and the occasion was singularly encouraging in its promise of definite result. The same may be said, on a somewhat modified scale, of the two following evenings, when the Gospel appeals were given by Mr. Train, Mr. Sawday, and Mr. Marsh. On the last evening, Dr. Kerr Cross related the story of his work in Nyassaland as a medical missionary; and Musa Bhai made an eloquent and pathetic appeal that the Gospel should be taken to his dark and degraded fellow-countrymen.

YOUNG WOMEN IN DUNDEE.

SOME interesting conference meetings in connection with the Young Women's Christian Association of this city were held at the pleasant rooms in Tay-street on Friday. They served to celebrate the second anniversary of the dedication of the new headquarters, as well as to diffuse information about the work of the Society. At noon a gathering, mainly of ladies, was addressed by several friends of the sterner sex. Mr. W. O. DALGLEISH presided; he and his wife have been fast friends of the work from its commencement. He said the Society was prospering in all its departments. Some of the City Trusts had shown their appreciation by contributing to the funds. The working young women of Dundee are a very large and important section of the industrial community, and the task of making their lives brighter and happier is one that may well engage the energies of their more leisured sisters in the town. He hoped the membership of the Association would soon be numbered by thousands instead of hundreds.

Rev. D. M. Ross, one of the ablest rising Free Church ministers in the town, expressed his hearty interest in the work, and told of the pleasure it had recently given him to address an immense gathering of 3000 or 4000 persons in the Town Hall, Melbourne, at a Y.W.C.A. anniversary. Referring to the social conditions of his own town, he felt sorrowfully constrained to admit, after having visited many Australian, Asiatic, and European cities, that nowhere had he met with so many signs of degraded womanhood in the lower ranks of life as in Dundee. This very startling state of things could be in some degree accounted for by unfavourable life surroundings, and this Young Women's Association might surely do something to improve these. The most effectual way to elevate the life is to reach the heart with the love of Christ, and the churches of Dundee, as elsewhere, are not doing what they ought for the young women. Let the Y.W.C.A. wake the churches up. Church work is too largely in the hands of men who are often obstructive, and who lack the sympathy that is characteristic of the true Christian woman. He had known some of the finest specimens of womanhood reared amidst bad surroundings; but the great need of these young working women are homes worthy of the name. We must not throw stones at these sisters, but do something practical to help them in the hard struggle of life. One great lack in Dundee is places of pleasant and innocent resort for young people, and so they are driven into the public-houses. Our Christianity is not half serious enough, or we should do far more for the highest welfare of those around us. We must not be content with talk; we must follow in the steps of Him who continually went about doing good to all men.

In a thoughtful little speech, Mr. H. B. FERGUSON remarked on the constant displacement of the conditions of the "labour market" through the introduction of improved machinery. This brings to our large cities many untrained girls from the country. With few acquaintances, and fewer friends, their position is an extremely perilous one, and such an institution as the Y.W.C.A. ought to be an ark of safety to those solitary voyagers on life's troubled sea. In the last dread hour we shall be thankful for any sacrifices we have made for the temporal and eternal happiness of others.

The meeting was closed by earnest prayer from Rev. F. E. Marsh.

A LADIES' CONFERENCE

in the afternoon was well attended, and much information was supplied as to the varied departments of Association work; some of them, as will be seen, not yet adopted in Dundee.

Mrs. DALGLEISH, who presided, gave an encouraging account of the general advances made during the past two years. She referred to the Gospel meetings held with the view of reaching outsiders, and appealed for young lady workers to fill the places of those who had been removed from the active ranks through death or other causes.

A strong appeal for new and suitable books to fill the library shelves was made by Mrs. MORRISON DUNCAN, who said that those now in the library had been well read. In view of the classes on cookery and domestic economy, she asked for a supply of good manuals on these subjects. Considering the moral dangers that lurk within the boards of so many modern books, we could not but feel the deep importance of Mrs. Duncan's appeal, and we earnestly trust that not a few friends who can spare copies of healthy and interesting volumes will send them on to the Secretary, 33, Tay-street, for the edification and enjoyment of those Dundee young people.

A paper on the work of the "Factory Helpers' Union" was read by Miss MEREDITH BROWN, of the Shaftesbury Institute, Lisson-grove, London. Many of the details she furnished are more or less familiar to our readers, through the notices given in these columns from time to time; but probably they were new to a Dundee audience. Miss Brown said she understood there are 16,000 mill or factory girls in Dundee; here surely is a great field for the operations of such effort as that which has proved so successful at Lisson-grove. Many touching incidents were related by Miss Brown as to the way in which these rough girls respond to the love shown by the workers in practical ways. Few of them know the meaning of a true mother's love or of a true home, and the sympathy manifested towards them finds its reward. Among the agencies mentioned by Miss Brown were the flower mission, the letter mission, the day in the country, the convalescent home, and the training for domestic service. She said that parcels of under garments for the girls were greatly needed, and an "odd minute" branch was in operation, the members undertaking to make at least two such garments every quarter, afterwards sending them to the Institute in Lisson-grove, London. It would be a very happy result if Miss Brown's earnest words led the Christian young ladies of Dundee to arrange for factory visitation and evening classes on behalf of these thousands of their toiling sisters.

A reference has been made to the cookery classes at the Tay-street Association. A most excellent account of it was given by the capable and intelligent lady who superintends it—Miss MCDONELL. She invited the Christian mistresses in Dundee households to send to her, as often as convenient, their general servants—sometimes not inaptly called "slaveys"—for thorough tuition in simple cooking and also in scientific sewing. Having heard Miss McDonell's report, and seen the large and pleasant kitchen where the practical classes are held, our representative feels much impressed with the wisdom of these Dundee friends in urging this scheme. If it were widely adopted a large class of our household communities would not only be better equipped for their duties, but would have much needed brightness cast into their lives.

The next item on the full programme was a vivacious and altogether delightful talk by Miss WEST WATSON, of Glasgow, about a work in which this young lady appears to have taken an active and successful part. Her special efforts have been in Glasgow tailors' workshops, but of course her methods are applicable to all rooms where a number of workers are employed. She expressed much surprise that nothing of the kind had been attempted in Dundee, and appealed with pathetic entreaty to her young lady friends to commence it as soon as possible. The plan adopted is very simple, but Miss Watson regards it as a direct agency for bringing the Gospel to bear on those who listen. Much wisdom is needed to avoid argument, as there are sceptics, freethinkers, and Romanists among the workers; so the work is confined to the simple reading of the Word of God with prayer and occasional hymns, and elevating books, such as history, travel, biography, &c. Many encouraging results have been met with even in known conversion, while a purer air pervades the workshop. Will not some Dundee ladies with a good voice and the ability to sing (said Miss Watson, in closing), give one hour a week to this easy and blessed form of service for the Master?

Yet further, we heard some particulars of zenana work in India from Miss McPhun, a very heartfelt call to consecration from Miss Campbell, and a paper on "Protected Emigration," written by Lady Victoria Campbell, and read by the lady in the chair. Verily, the ladies who sat throughout the 2½ hours' conference had plenty to think about and to resolve upon after they went away.

Another meeting was held in the evening, when earnest addresses of an evangelistic nature were given by several ladies.

Our representative was kindly shown over the premises by the President, Miss Jessiman. It is finely fitted up with large meeting-hall, drawing-room, dormitories for several workers and two or three young women who may arrive in town friendless and looking for work, library, splendid kitchen, &c. At the back there is space for further extension, and Miss Jessiman hopes one day to see it covered with a Preventive Home for girls and for servants out of place. The Association is on a sound financial basis, but needs an accession of annual subscribers, so that the good work may be well sustained. Dundee ought certainly to keep its Y.W.C.A. in a very thriving and vigorous condition, for it has very much land yet to possess, and that cannot be done without the combined power of many heads and hearts and hands.

THE PERTH CONFERENCE.

LADIES' MEETINGS.

MRS. OATTS presided at the Evangelistic meeting for women on the Monday evening, when Miss GELDARD gave an impressive address, beseeching those present to come to Christ that they might become intercessors for others. She dwelt on the prayers of two women—Rahab and Esther—Joshua ii. 12, 13, and Esther vii. 3, 4, and showed how the former prayed in fear and trembling, having no warrant that her prayer would be answered; the latter came in confidence, resting on the promise of the king.

Miss MACKENZIE (Edinburgh) presided at the tea-meeting on Tuesday afternoon, and asked for prayer for the young women employed in the Edinburgh Exhibition. They are exposed to many temptations, and are very difficult to reach. Their Sunday afternoon tea-meetings are, however, much appreciated, and after a temperance address from Mrs. A. Campbell lately, eight took the pledge. Efforts have also been made to reach the Italian men and women engaged there. In concluding, Miss Mackenzie quoted Isa. xl. 31, and recalled a remark made by the father of Rev. H. Moule: "'Renew' here means change." A different kind of strength is needed for walking, running, and flying. We may need each kind—let us wait for it. While the Church was waiting in the upper room for the promise of the Father, their Head was also waiting in heaven. Women specially need to wait for strength, and "As thy days, so shall thy strength be." Miss MURRAY GARTSHORE gave a short account of Miss Stewart's work among the herring fishers, and reported progress in Y. W. C. A. work, thirty-four new branches having been started during the past year. Mrs. MILLER said that the S. G. F. S. work in Perth was increasing. Several young women have emigrated, through Mrs. Joyce of the United British Women's Emigration Association. Miss GELDARD said that, returning to this country after some years' absence, she was horrified at the amount of drunkenness she found. She urged all present to pray for the families of those engaged in the sale of drink.

Mrs. OATTS said that the Superintendent of the central premises of the Y. W. C. A. in Glasgow had asked for special prayer that, in a time of great outward prosperity, they might be kept near the Lord. She urged the importance of holiday homes for the young women in our large cities. Besides the Home at Largs, the Glasgow Y.W.C.A. this year took a farm on Loch Long for the month of July and was able to receive fifty girls there. Miss MUDIE spoke of the recent Y.W.C.A. Conference at Montrose, and said that such gatherings were a great help in bringing country workers together. Mrs. MILLER, Milnathort, remarked that three years ago her Bible Class had been formed into a branch of the Y.W.C.A. and since then their roots have gone deeper and their interests been enlarged. One of the Prayer Union members, who never thought she could speak before, has charge of the junior branch. In concluding, she appealed for speakers for evangelistic meetings in Milnathort.

Mrs. STUART GRAY presided at the tea-meeting on Wednesday afternoon, and in welcoming the missionaries and other strangers present, referred to the blessing in Num. vi. 22-27, as the work of the three persons of the Trinity.

Mrs. WATT, Tanna, said that she and her husband had spent twenty years in that island since Mr. Paton had been obliged to flee after labouring there three-and-a-half years. The population is about 8,000, and four distinct dialects are spoken, making the work difficult. There are still hundreds of painted cannibals, and probably every man and woman above the age of twenty has tasted human flesh. A sample of the women's dress was shown—a petticoat of leaf shreds hung from a string, also the manner in which men dress their hair, twisting it into strips of the bark of a creeper. Men and women mix freely; the women are much easier to reach than the men, but have little influence except over their sons. Woman is looked on as a necessary evil, even the mothers are ashamed of their baby-daughters. Their betrothal in infancy is a cause of difficulty to the missionaries, as their pupils often have to marry heathen men. The women are expected to strangle themselves when their husbands die, so as to follow them to the other world. They profess to do this willingly, for if they shrank from it life would not be worth living. One wicked woman was converted and, rather than yield to temptation again, was clubbed to death. When asked as she was dying what she was trusting to, she replied, "Jesus only."

Miss CAMPBELL, of the China Inland Mission, gave the verse, "God so loved the world," &c., as suitable not only for gospel meetings, but for God's own people, with our Lord's parting words, "Go ye into all the world." What we had heard of Tanna was true of the whole heathen world. Women owe so much to Christianity; they owe all that men owe, and much more. In a Junior Missionary Association in America seventy little children, aged from three to six years, brought gifts amounting to £6 3s. in one year. This was not money received from their parents for the purpose, but what they were able to give through self-denial. We say we can easily give so much and never miss it. Is that the way God gave? If you cannot go to the foreign field, have you a representative there? A lady once said she was working twenty-four hours in the day. When asked how that could be, she said she had a representative in China who worked for her when she was asleep, and when awake she worked herself. If you can easily support one worker you should support two, or if that is easy, try twenty.

Miss DAVIES gave a short account of work among the Mohammedan women in India. Unlike the Hindoos, who have innumerable gods, the Mohammedans believe in one God only, but they cannot understand the Incarnation. Miss Davies's work is chiefly in the zenanas, and she mentioned some of the superstitions she came across. One man, when he was asked whether he would not like his little girl taught to read, called for his horse and a pair of spectacles, and putting a book before the horse told it to read. "There!" he exclaimed, "if such an intelligent animal as the horse cannot read, how can you expect a girl to learn?"

Mrs. MIRRLEES, who had been unable to be present the previous day, told of the Feeing Market in Glasgow. The girls met in the cattle market to be engaged, and in stormy weather their only shelter was a publichouse. The magistrates gave the Y.W.C.A. permission to use a shed which had to be put in order for the purpose. Later, after waiting and prayer, a workroom was provided, and soon fitted up. No charge is made, but there is a box for contributions. The farmers appreciate this effort so much that they give quite large sums as thankofferings. Mrs. Gilbert Beith and another lady take charge of this work, and a Bible-woman follows up the girls.

Mrs. BROWN DOUGLAS presided at the prayer-meeting on Friday morning, when Miss B. MUDIE gave as a motto Heb. ix. 21. Mrs. BANNERMAN gave Phil. iv. 6, as having been specially realised in her busy every-day life throughout the Conference. Other friends spoke cheering words.

Mrs. SHAIRP presided at the annual meeting of the Christian Women's Education Union in the afternoon. Mrs. BANNERMAN, secretary, gave in the report. Particulars may be had from her at St. Leonard's F. C. Manse, Perth. Miss C. L. MAYNARD, Westfield College, gave a short sketch of some of the Ladies' Colleges in England, and said the difference between cramming and true education was like the difference between varnishing—putting on a foreign substance to make the material look better, and polishing—showing the material at its best. The question whether education is a good or bad thing depends on the hand that uses it. It has its danger, but its tendency is to go to the right side. The uneducated may be fished in numbers with the net; but the educated, who differ more one from another, require to be gathered individually with hook and line one by one.

THE COW CROSS MISSION HOME OF REST,

at St. John's, near Woking, has been well used during the summer months by London poor. Mr. W. Catlin, the superintendent of the mission, though invalided, has been working in the large vegetable garden, and Mrs. Catlin acting as housekeeper, cook, and general servant. The vicar and curate of St. John's have extended true sympathy, standing by the workers in the open air. The residents generally have been exceedingly kind. On the 10th of September there was an outdoor exhibition of dissolving views, a monster sheet being extended across the road under the avenue leading to the church. About 800 persons were present, many coming from villages for many miles round.

For the Young.

"ESTHER'S TEMPTATION."

BY EVELYNE MORAY.

"Faithful in that which is least."—LUKE xvi. 10.

"WELL, dear, if the drawing-room is done thoroughly it cannot be got through in less than five minutes, I am quite sure. I want you now; you must do it better to-morrow."

So said a mother to her fair-haired daughter, Esther, who, duster in hand, was just leaving a cheery room, furnished with pretty trifles, little polished tables, and quaintly carved chairs.

Esther Searle, in obedience to her considerate mother's wishes, generally helped to lighten the work of the two servants kept in her father's large house, by doing a few light duties.

The next morning Esther commenced to give the room a "thorough dusting." Although it had been well turned out in the early part of the week, the dust raised and scattered by the traffic of the highroad was thick on all around.

Most industriously the small figure worked for a short time, then—"Oh, those tiresome chairs," she sighed; "I'm sure nobody will come to-day; I needn't be so very particular," and so one chair was left undone. It stood in the dark corner of the room, and would never be noticed, she thought.

Next came the polished table with its four carved legs branching from the centre. The top of it was carefully done, because "mamma would like it." The books and ornaments were removed while Esther dusted it, and afterwards neatly replaced.

Then she must stoop to get at the table's legs. Now stooping was a thing Esther particularly disliked, especially in hot weather.

"Oh, what a nuisance," she said, giving one of her rather frequent sighs. "I won't do those to-day; it's so hot. Mamma will never notice them."

Just as she was about to dust the more pleasing flat surface of the piano, there flashed into her mind the words, "Faithful in that which is least." Then again, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." In an instant a never-to-be-forgotten scene of a few years ago came to her memory.

Esther saw herself seated on the yellow sands at Bournemouth. Behind her was the glorious, quiet sea, sparkling under the bright sunshine. With a number of children, like herself in light summer attire and large sun-hats, which only partly concealed the earnest, interested little faces from the grown-up people standing round, she was listening to an address on "faithfulness," given by a Cambridge gentleman, who, in straw hat and white cricketing flannels, was standing on a little sand-mound, under the shelter of a red banner, with white letters on it, reading, "Children's Special Service Mission."

The young are attracted by earnestness, and the speaker carried the children's hearts as well as their attention along with him, as he showed how the Lord Jesus for us had been faithful unto the bitter end, "even unto death."

"Dear children," Esther fancied she heard him saying, "will you not be faithful to Him? You can be so in three ways:—

"1. Faithful in obeying and serving Him.

"2. Faithful to Him in temptation.

"3. Faithful in confessing Him.

"God says, 'Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might.' Fulfil all duties faithfully, then.

"Now, be faithful in temptation. That is, keep 'looking unto Jesus,' asking Him to come and fight for you; thus He will give you the victory, however small or however great the temptation may be.

"Then confess Him faithfully. Though others may try to shake your faith in Jesus and make you deny Him, tell them 'I know whom I have believed' (2 Tim. i. 12). When God gives you the opportunity to witness for Him, use it faithfully. Jesus says 'Whosoever therefore shall confess Me before men, him will I confess before my Father which is in heaven.' Thus you shall glorify the Lord Jesus, and He will say unto you, when He gathers in his redeemed ones: 'Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.'"

And Esther also recollected how they all sang:—

I belong to Jesus—
So, I'll try to spend
All my life in pleasing
My Almighty Friend.
Since He is so holy
I must watch and pray,
That I may grow like Him
More and more each day.

And how she, with bowed head, during the moments of silent prayer which followed, had told Jesus that with his help and blessing she would be faithful.

Have you ever sent up such a prayer?

All this did not take long to pass through Essie's mind; for a moment she hesitated, and then in the half-dusted drawing-room went up the cry, "Lord, pardon me for my past unfaithfulness. Lord Jesus, help me now. Keep me from being idle and deceitful!"

And Jesus did help her. He showed her that even the smallest duties might be done to the best of her abilities, just for Him, and not merely "to please mamma," or because visitors must not see a dusty room.

This sweet thought of doing them for Jesus made Esther's harder duties become less irksome, and even the dusting of "those tiresome chairs" was honestly gone through, as she felt it a pleasure to bring glory to Jesus by doing something faithfully for Him.

"Why! Essie love," said Mrs. Searle a short time after, "this is a change! You are doing the work well, but don't be too long over it."

A glow of colour suffused the bright face.

"I am trying to be faithful over a few things, mamma dear," she said.

It was sweet to Esther to win her dear mother's fond look of approval; but it was doubly sweet to feel that Jesus was smiling too.

She never felt so near to Jesus as when she had been true to His word, "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily," and had trusted Him to keep her faithful.

Esther is now a useful servant of God, longing to persuade others to share her joys in knowing for themselves, as she does for herself, that the Lord Jesus, who is "the Faithful One," will one day re-echo in glory the words she has heard Him speak to her heart, and remembers Mr. —— quoting on the beach, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Not long ago an honoured worker in the Lord's vineyard said to Esther, who for the time was tired out: "Whatever you undertake, you seem to do so thoroughly."

Oh, how Christ's weary worker rejoiced that He should allow her work to thus witness for Him. With a heart full of thankfulness, she sent up the cry: "Father, I thank Thee that Thou hast given me the victory over my self-indulgence through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Can the same be said of you, dear young reader? Have you been quite faithful in all that was given you to do, in your studies, your home duties? Did you do, are you doing, your utmost in all you undertook?

If not, ask God to forgive all unfaithfulness, and make you willing to do your best for Him in all things, and even in your play.

Be loyal to your Captain,
Be true to your Lord;
Bring joy to your Master
By keeping his word.

Just faithfully doing
All "next things" for Him;
His smile is worth winning,
His "Well done" of a King.

The Annual Meetings for seaside reports will be held at Princes Hall, Piccadilly, W., on Mon., Oct. 13, afternoon and evening; and at Strangeways Hall, Manchester, Oct. 20.

A SUMMER RESORT IN FRANCE.

I HAVE just been the guest of M. S. de Neufville, at his seaside residence at Beuzeval, Calvados.

He is known as the Christian banker of Paris, is chairman of the Bible Society and treasurer of the Paris City Mission, and both by his voice and purse supports the McAll and other Missions.

Every morning we drove down to the Salle Evangélique, where Pasteur Théo. Monod expounded for fifteen minutes the Gospel of John in his clear and logical manner. A similar service is held every evening at 9 o'clock.

On Sunday, besides the two or three services in English, in the church built by M. S. de Neufville, M. Monod preaches at 10.30.

Last Sunday he gave us an exhaustive discourse on the gradual growth of the Holy Spirit, as recorded by St. Luke in his Gospel and the Acts of the Apostles.

In the afternoon, instead of the usual church service and sermon, they have a hymn and prayer, and an exposition of thirty to forty minutes on the Acts of the Apostles. This was very simple, yet not at all like a Sunday-school class lesson. As we came away M. de Neufville said, "It was worth publishing."

Would not something more like this be welcomed in many of our English churches and chapels? Instead of detached and often dreary sermons, let our pastors take a portion of God's Word and expound it from Sunday to Sunday. This was done in the early days, and is wanted just as much now. Besides being more attractive, it would, I feel sure, be more "building up."

Beuzeval is a pretty village, with two reasonable hotels and several lodging-houses, situated in a well-wooded hilly glen running from the high Normandy tableland to the coast.

The sands are firm, and suitable for bathing and other amusements, without the glare and fashion of some of our English and many French watering-places.

These natural beauties, combined with such opportunities of spiritual food, I think, if better known, would attract even more English families than they do at present. G. H. B.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN INDIA.—The long-talked-of union of the various Presbyterian bodies in India seems farther off than ever. The apparent advantages of combined action brought the proposal into high favour a short time ago, but when the Free Church of Scotland compromised itself with doctrinal laxity in the Dods-Bruce case the project received a blow from which it will not soon recover. The Makhzan-i-Masihi, a religious paper published at Allahabad by missionaries of the American Presbyterian Church, recently maintained that the proposed union is out of the question in view of the present doctrinal differences. Thus it appears that the Free Church of Scotland, in its anxiety to preserve peace at home, has spread dissension abroad, and exercised an influence prejudicial to organic union on the part of the various branches of the Presbyterian Church in the Indian Empire.

THE JOHN G. PATON FUND.

The organisation of this Fund, about three months since, and its success in the early stages having come to the knowledge of the devoted missionary to the New Hebrides, now in Australia, he writes in his whole-souled, responsive way telling how he hears, "with tears of joy and gratitude, of the wonderful response God has drawn forth to the appeal to British Christians to help me as soon as possible to occupy every island for Jesus." He expresses his thanks to the publishers of the appeal, and to all God's stewards who have sent monetary help to him in the good work; and adds, "I thank our Father in heaven for using the simple record of my humble life in deepening the interest and drawing forth the prayers and help of so many of his people. Surely, if ever missionary had cause to be low at the feet of Jesus, and adore Him for the help given in extending the Gospel to the heathen, I have; and I am indeed laid under the deepest obligations to Him."

The letter gives some further instances of devotion on the part of the converts—notably young chiefs on the island of Malo—but there occurs in it the following suggestive paragraph: "For the last three months I have suffered a good deal from internal pain and weakness; yet, inspired by the hope of being spared and used to have a missionary placed on every island of the group, and in answer to prayer, Jesus has sustained me, and enabled me to hold on my arduous task."

That one desire for the salvation of the heathen still burns into the inmost soul of this aged pioneer of the Gospel. No wonder that pain and weakness come upon him; and indeed his benign face with its silver locks may not much longer grace the earth. Surely a monument to his devoted life while yet he lives is a far more desirable scheme than any posthumous recognition of his worth. No greater joy could be given to him than to enable him to secure the eight additional missionaries for which he is pleading now in Australia.

The special Fund raised in Britain now amounts to £1000. It is desired to double that sum. Further contributions may be sent to the Rev. James Paton, B.A., 2, Park Quadrant, Glasgow. A. K. L.

TEMPERANCE IN SCOTLAND.—The Edinburgh Exhibition was the scene of a large and important demonstration on behalf of national temperance on Saturday. Over 40,000 persons were present during the day, and the sale of all intoxicants was stopped. At an immense meeting in the Grand Hall strong and earnest speeches were made by Mr. P. Maclagan, Rev. John Smith, Rev. John Robertson, and others, calling for such temperance legislation as will enable the people to cope with the evils caused by the public sale of drink. There have been many complaints of the temptations to drink thrown in the way of young people visiting the Exhibition, and this public testimony raised on the same spot will not be without beneficial results.

THE HOUSE OF REST FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.—This Institution, which has for twenty years been situate in Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, is now established in much more suitable and commodious premises in No. 10, Finchley-road, St. John's Wood, N.W., close to the Marlborough-road Station. The leasehold property in Kilburn has been disposed of, and the freehold at St. John's Wood purchased on most advantageous terms. A new wing is to be added for the "Aged Workers' Home," a much-needed addition to the institution. The sum of £2500 is still needed to complete the purchase fund, and Miss Mason earnestly desires that this shall be forthcoming before the new house is formally opened towards the end of October. Those who know how many a weary lot has been cheered and brightened by the influence of the House of Rest will feel constrained to do all that lies in their power to assist in carrying on the work to which Miss Mason devotes her life.

PASTOR J. BENNETT ANDERSON.

Mr. John Bennett Anderson, pastor of the church assembling in Byrom Hall, Liverpool, is about to take a trip to recruit his health to the Antipodes. After ten years of work, largely evangelistic, in the great northern city, he has been granted leave of absence for nine months. The farewell meetings were very cordial, and made specially pleasant by the presentation of many tokens of affection to the pastor, who will, it is hoped, find in Australia and New Zealand many open doors for preaching and singing the Gospel.

Mr. Anderson is forty-five years old, and has been engaged in active evangelistic work since 1866. His labours in Liverpool have been very fruitful of good. During the ten years 700 believers have been baptised, and large numbers of persons have signed the temperance pledge. Outdoors, as well as indoors, Mr. Anderson's activity has been incessant, so it is not surprising that many friends have been wishing him a happy voyage and blessed occupation in the Gospel.

For five years before entering upon work in Liverpool, our friend laboured as an evangelist in Canada and the United States; he has seen other lands also, and will bring an old traveller's experience to bear upon the journeyings which now lie before him. He sails from London in the Orotava, on October 10. We trust he will return to his much-loved sphere in vigorous health, and in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ.

MISSION TO INVALIDED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.—I have been hoping again with the help of kind friends, to send my annual box of comforters and cuffs to Portsmouth, as Christmas and New Year's gifts to our returning invalided men from abroad. I shall be very thankful to receive help for this good object in money or goods; also used Christmas and New Year's cards, if not soiled or written on, and Gospel booklets or tracts, for tying on the articles. Parcels should be sent not later than December 12.

RELIGIOUS OPPRESSION IN RUSSIA.—Advices from Russia (says the Vienna correspondent of The Daily Chronicle) state that religious oppression still continues, all those who refuse to go over to the Orthodox Church being persecuted in various ways, and compelled to leave the country. On Friday last a number of German settlers from the west and south of Russia made their appearance at Brody, a town on the Russo-Austrian frontier, having been expelled from their homes on their refusal to become converts to the Russian Church. The unfortunates, who were mostly ignorant men, had passage tickets for Brazil; but, as they had no passports, they were stopped and sent back to Russia.

HOLD ME!

Here am I! O Saviour sweet,
Cast by sorrow at thy feet;
Take me as I am and bend
To some consecrated end;
Make me olive branch or sword,
Only do Thou hold me, Lord.

Here I am! I had no choice,
But to listen to thy voice;
Use me wholly at thy will,
Though for sadness use me still;
I can drink the bitter cup,
If Thou, Lord, dost hold me up.

Here I am! Oh take me all,
Body, soul—for Thou didst call;
I should deem it service meet,
Lying only at thy feet;
Be it suffering, be it song,
Hold me—and I shall be strong.

Here I am! I fain would be,
Just what Thou dost fashion me;
Make me what Thou art, and then
Thee will I make known to men;
Silver ask I not, nor gold,
But that Thou my footsteps hold.

Here am I! And here I lay
All, and own no other sway;
Hold me waking, hold in sleep,
For myself I cannot keep;
When I triumph, when I bow,
Hold me ever—hold me now.

MESSRS. FULLERTON & SMITH.

For a fortnight these brethren have been holding services in St. George's Hall, and the Mechanics' Institute, Bradford, and from first to last great crowds, much interest, and gracious results have been witnessed. Bible-readings were held in the afternoons, which from six hundred to eight hundred persons attended, and evangelistic services in the evenings, when the spacious building was packed with audiences of 1200 to 1500, and on some nights hundreds had to go away, unable to get in. There has been nothing approaching to sensationalism, either in method or matter, and yet no one can say that there was a dull moment from the time when the first note of praise was raised, till the last "Amen" was uttered.

From the first large audiences have been gathered to the mission, and that in itself is no small matter in this busy pleasure-loving town. Sundays were the high days for numbers and blessing. In the afternoons Mrs. Fullerton addressed meetings for women, and Mr. Fullerton and Mr. Smith conducted services for men; while in the evening the large St. George's Hall was packed with a vast audience, eagerly waiting and willing to listen to the joyful news of salvation.

But crowded buildings were not, thank God, the only result of the mission. There were surging crowds, but there were also surging emotions welling up and overwhelming many hearts. Conviction strong and deep was depicted in many a face, and the bowed head and tearful eye told the oft-repeated story of the Spirit's power in awakening a sense of sin and a yearning for salvation. Before the final meetings, at least 200 persons had passed through the inquiry-room, and doubtless as many more were impressed who did not stay to the after-meetings. Moreover, there are results which can never be tabulated. Christians were aroused, instructed, helped, and led to a fuller consecration, and in the hearts of some preachers zeal in the service of the Master was increased to an intense heat. H.

THE MOST REV. W. SAUMAREZ SMITH, D.D.,

Bishop of Sydney.

THE subject of our sketch this week was born in Jersey on January 14, 1836. His father, Snowdon Smith, was at that time connected with a branch of the Volunteer Service; but soon afterwards entered the ministry of the Church of England, and for thirty years laboured with untiring faithfulness in one of the poorest districts of Brighton. Now in his eighty-first year, Prebendary Snowdon Smith, relieved from pastoral responsibilities, is still full of good works, a man beloved of all who know him.

SAUMAREZ SMITH was educated first at Marlborough under Dr. Wilkinson and Dr. Cotton, and took a high place among the five or six hundred boys, winning the Ireland scholarship in 1849. In 1854 he passed from school to college, and wrote to a companion words which have now a peculiar significance: "We are certainly not to be always casting wistful glances behind us; we must press forward. Let our motto be onward, upward, heavenward." At Trinity College, Cambridge, he was known as a hard-working and successful student, winning prizes, taking a high position in classics and theology, and ultimately attaining the dignity of Fellow. He found time, however, during the greater part of his university career to teach a class of boys in the Jesus-lane Sunday-school, and, while a genial companion, was never ashamed to own Christ as his Master.

When Dr. Gill was chosen Bishop of Madras in 1861, Saumarez Smith went with him as his chaplain, and in a tour of some two thousand miles among the missionary stations in the south of the Indian peninsula, acquired a valuable and enlarging experience. He met in the course of this tour Dr. Cotton, his old master at Marlborough, then Bishop of Calcutta, and to him he naturally dedicated his first book, written in 1865, after his return, on "Obstacles to Missionary Success."

For three years Dr. Smith did faithful pastoral work as vicar of Trumpington, near Cambridge—work which we are assured is still gratefully remembered by some of the parishioners—until in 1869 Dean Howson and Dr. Lightfoot, afterwards Bishop of Durham, induced him to undertake the charge of St. Aidan's College, Birkenhead. There, for the last twenty years, he has laboured with an earnestness, a hopefulness in the face of serious difficulties, and a success which have both earned and prepared him for the position of higher honour and wider responsibility, that of Bishop of Sydney and Primate of Australia, to which he has been raised. Birkenhead seemed then fitly named the city of the future (like mankind, which "never is but always to be blessed") and this handsome college, designed for the training of aspirants to the ministry of the Church of England, was empty and burdened with £10,000 of debt—a name and a possibility, just as long streets near it were indicated only by kerbstones. Principal Smith has turned the forlorn hope into a considerable success; the debt is long ago extinguished; the working of the institution has been thoroughly organised; and hel eft there fifty hopeful students. His latest undertaking was the erection of a chapel in the grounds, where his ministry was enjoyed, not only by the students, but by residents in the neighbourhood.

Canon Smith—for he was made an honorary Canon of Chester in 1880—has been always known as a liberal-minded but decidedly evangelical Churchman. The direction his liberality takes is not that of doctrinal laxity, but rather of cordial readiness to co-operate in all good works with brethren not conforming to the Established Church. The Waldensian Missions in Italy, the Religious Tract Society, and the British and Foreign Bible Society, received his steady and effective support both on the platform and in the local committees. It was natural, therefore, that when a man had to be found to consolidate and extend the work of the Church of England in New South Wales, Canon Smith should be thought of—a strong man every way, tall, broad-chested, with a face full of dignity joined with goodwill, who, while still in the prime of life, has behind him five and twenty years' experience in organisation and the management of clerical human nature. A parting gift of £550 testified the regard in which the new bishop was held by all classes in Birkenhead.

Dr. Smith's consecration took place in St. Paul's Cathedral on June 24 last; but it pleased the Head of the Church to give him, just ten days earlier, a more solemn and tender anointing. Mrs. Smith, who was looking forward to the new life in Sydney, if anxiously, yet with hope and prayer, was suddenly taken from his side after a very short illness; and in the strain put upon his heart by separation from one who had helped him devotedly and wisely for twenty years, Dr. Smith felt that he was being very specially called to cling to the one Source of consolation and strength. Mrs. Smith was one of those gentle, earnest, cultured, godly women who do much good with little prominence—"Half canonised by all that looked on her, so gracious was her tact and tenderness."

The Bishop took farewell of Birkenhead in a sermon preached on August 3, from a text which breathes the same spirit expressed in the college letter already quoted "But I will hope continually, and will yet praise Thee more and more" (Ps. lxxi. 14). He showed that a Christian cannot afford, even in so great a sorrow as he had been called to bear, to let down the courage of his hope, but must go forward, assured that the future will yield "more and more" reasons for praise.

On August 15 he sailed with his motherless children for the Antipodes, where we trust he will be largely blessed in a work for which he has peculiar fitness—not least in his recognising others besides Anglicans as Christian brethren, and co-operating with them in the service of a common Master.

Salisbury Conference.

THIS unique and refreshing gathering took place last week. The subject for consideration was the often pronounced benediction—"The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all" (2 Cor. xiii. 14). It is scarcely possible that anyone who was present will ever again repeat or hear these words of blessing without remembering how much they mean: that they are a message from the Triune God—a solemn recognition of the three co-equal persons in the Godhead.

Grace is the outward expression, in word and act, of love which is invisible: just as the Lord Jesus Christ is God manifested in flesh. Thus the order is explained—we drink of the stream before we reach the fountain. The grace manifest on earth leads us upward to Love upon the throne in heaven.

The Holy Ghost is the medium of communion between the Father and the Son; between us and God; between us and our brethren.

Dr. GRATTAN GUINNESS suggested that this benediction is the New Testament equivalent of the Old Testament blessing (Num. vi. 24-26), in which the Lord's name is thrice mentioned. "And they shall put my name on the children of Israel, and they shall bless them." We learn the meaning of a text by its context. In 2 Cor. xii. 9 Jesus says, "My grace is sufficient for thee," which leads in xiii. 14 to "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ...be with you." In xiii. 11, "the God of love and peace shall be with you" leads to "the love of God...be with you." The love of God results from the God of love. Then what is "the communion of the Holy Ghost"? The question before the mind of the Apostle was the unity and community of the Church. He had just said, "Finally brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace...greet one another with a holy kiss." The communion of the Holy Ghost is the communion of those with whom He dwells.

We have thus briefly touched upon the three parts of the benediction as a whole. Much of a very edifying character was said on the Grace and the Love and the Fellowship, by the convener and chairman, Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites, by Revs. R. Graves Walker, J. Stuart Fox, Geo. Wainwright, Trevor Fielder, F. Baldey, W. E. Chapman, T. Thwaites, and others.

One characteristic of this Conference is that attention is directed away from self to Christ, and it is very helpful in this respect. We must content ourselves with a few brief extracts from the addresses:—

Rev. J. S. FOX.—The greatest mystery is not that God loved me when a sinner, but that He has loved me since, all along the way.

Rev. R. GRAVES WALKER.—Have you found your life-work? The work God has given me to do is to speak good of Jesus Christ. Do this, and you will be to the praise of his glory.

Dr. WHITE, Winchester.—It is no use learning at this Convention if we don't go away determined that "I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress."

Rev. J. WILKINSON.—Blessing comes if we do the things we know. James lays stress on not being a forgetful hearer but a doer... that man shall be blessed in his doing. Before my conversion I was a native of this world; for fifty-one years I have been a pilgrim and a foreigner...God never counts us his children till we are born again.

Rev. E. N. THWAITES.—All the corn came through Joseph: all grace through one channel, Christ. "Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."

Rev. T. FIELDER.—Presence of mind, spiritually, is the presence of Christ.

Concerning the love of God, one of the speakers said, "This love will express itself in love to the brethren. Not only to those at the other end of the world, but to those in the same town. A speaker on the platform of the Evangelical Alliance had once said: "We are all one on this platform, but we shall not know each other in our own town.' True love goes out towards all believers, even though they differ on many points, and occupy a different denominational position. This manifestation of love is the most effective way of confessing Christ" (1 John iv. 15-16).

John says in his Gospel—"No man hath seen God at any time: the only begotten Son who is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him." And now that Jesus has gone out of this world to the Father, the same Apostle writes in his Epistle—"No man hath seen God at any time: he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God and God in Him"—implying that as Jesus while on earth revealed the Father, it is now given to his people to make Him known.

Rev. GEORGE WAINWRIGHT.—The Holy Spirit is the power of fellowship among all believers. Scripture recognises no other basis of union. The possession of a common life makes us one. "'We are all baptized by one Spirit into one body.' We have been making many bodies, but God is unmaking them everywhere. All denominationalism is based upon similarity of thought and opinion, and is, therefore, unscriptural and contrary to the mind of God. What we are to 'endeavour to keep' is not the unity of thought upon doctrine or ceremony, but the unity of the Spirit." We are one by the act of God; our earnest endeavour must be to manifest that oneness. All denominations are doomed, and we may rejoice to see them destroyed, in order that those who possess a common life may be bound together in the true fellowship of the Holy Spirit. This will convince the world that Jesus was sent by the Father.

Miss FAULKNER, showing how ignorant some of our own people, though surrounded by churches and chapels, are of God and prayer, and yet how the Spirit enlightens them, told of a woman who in advanced years was converted to God. When she came to the weekly prayer-meeting she said, "I should so like to say something, but don't know how." She was told that God would understand and be pleased however she might express herself.

THIS WAS HER PRAYER.

"Dear Sir,—Thank you up there in heaven very much for washing me whiter than snow. I am only a poor washerwoman; I always have tried to wash well: but now I must wash better than ever, because you have washed me whiter than snow."

Here was justification and sanctification, and consecration and transfiguration. May all our prayers be as Scriptural and as truly of the Spirit as that of this newly-born sister in Christ.

At the evening meeting, on Christ as Saviour, Shepherd, and King, the hearers were given wheat beaten out of full ears, matured thought, and spiritual teachings. The five-minute records of work after luncheon and the impromptu expositions after tea, are always interesting features here.

On Wednesday afternoon Sir John Kennaway presided at a full missionary meeting addressed by Rev. J. H. Hoare, of Ningpo, and by Dr. Grattan Guinness, who explained the situation in Africa from a large map of that country.

On Thursday evening the speakers were Rev. John Wilkinson and Dr. Grattan Guinness, each of whom gave splendid addresses on Christ as King. Dr. Guinness answered the question, "Who is the King?" (Psa. xxiv. 8-10). (1) He is the rightful King; (2) He is the righteous King; (3) He is the rejected King; (4) He is the resistless King; (5) He is the returning King.

The Conference closed with a praise meeting, at which for half an hour text after text which had been specially used came from all parts of the hall, until many were melted under the power of God's Word. Then half-minute testimonies followed of definite blessings experienced. Lastly, those who would dedicate themselves to home and foreign mission work if the Lord open the door were asked to rise. Five responded to the former and thirteen to the latter appeal. Thank-offerings at the Conference amounted to £177, with two valuable rings and a gold chain.

In the evening a great evangelistic service was conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane, at the close of which many remained to be directed more clearly into the way of life.

SO FAR, AND YET SO NEAR.

(Composed at Sea.)

So far, and yet so near! Oh, happy thought,
Which lightens care, and sanctifies my lot,
And sends my spirit far o'er land and sea,
And upwards, Lord, my blessed Lord, to Thee!

So far from home, and yet so near to God,
Who makes the humblest heart his blest abode;
Who deigns Himself to come and dwell with me,
And guide me o'er this wild, tempestuous sea.

So far from friends, and yet so near to Thee,
Thou blessed Saviour, Christ of Galilee,
Who stills the tempest in my troubled soul,
With "Peace, be still! I am thy Lord, thy All."

So far from city and the sanctu'ry's calm,
So near to service and the Sabbath's balm;
That saved from fear amid surrounding things,
I hymn my praise with Jesus' priests and kings.

So far from harbour, yet so near to port,
Where storms can never come, nor aught can hurt;
So, like the watching sailor, I can swell—
"The lights are turning bright, and all is well!"

So far, and yet so near! So let it be;
If far from friends, I still am near to Thee;
Then let winds roar, and the wild waters roll:
I am content and safe—Christ keeps my soul.

OLD CORNISH.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.—In connection with the World-Wide Prayer Union for the Second Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, a week of prayer has been appointed to be held in the Conference Hall, 143, Clapham-road, S.W., from October 18 to 25. There will be meetings from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily, during the week, with intervals for refreshment. The Lord's remembrancers are entreated to unite in obedience to the commands: "Keep not silent. Give Him no rest, till He establish, and till He make Jerusalem a praise in the earth, and to seek the blessing promised to those that love and pray for the peace of Jerusalem." Among the friends who have signified their intention to lead in prayer are Sir A. Blackwood, Revs. Dr. Bullinger, F. A. C. Lillingston, H. Pelham Stokes, H. W. Webb-Peploe, and J. Wilkinson, General Halliday, Major McKinlay, Messrs. J. E. Mathieson, and R. C. Morgan. The secretary of the Union is Rev. N. S. Taylor, 5, Sydenham-terrace, Babbacombe, Torquay.

MR. LETHABY'S WORK IN MOAB.

THE work of Mr. William Lethaby and his devoted wife in the land of Moab is now well known; and in proportion as it becomes known the workers are held in high esteem for their loving zeal in prosecuting the cause of God in a sphere which has too long been overlooked by the Church at large. Mr. Lethaby is at present in England on a short visit, and on Tuesday evening last week, at a meeting held in the Wesleyan Chapel, City-road, he told the very interesting story of his Mission. The chair was occupied by Major-General HAIG, who was able to bear personal testimony as to the nature of the work, for nearly two years ago he visited Kerak. He saw in the Mission a great and important step towards the evangelisation of Central Arabia, with its ten or twelve millions of inhabitants. He looked forward to the time when from the Mission at Kerak—the most advanced point of Christian work in Central Arabia—colporteurs will carry the Gospel into regions hitherto unevangelised and otherwise very difficult of access.

Mr. LETHABY began his story by referring to his longings while still a local preacher in Somerset, and traced in outline the story of God's blessing upon his truly adventurous work. Kerak is 3000 feet above the Mediterranean Sea, and the eye can see Jerusalem in the distance, the Dead Sea lying deep in the hollow between. The country is fertile as of old, but unless care is taken, the fruits of the earth fall into the hands of plunderers. The people are for the most part

DESCENDANTS OF ISHMAEL.

Invasions have been numerous, as might be expected, for of the seed of the bond-woman it has been written: "His hand is against every man, and every man's hand against him." Notwithstanding, the Moabite is no poor starved wretch, but holds his head up higher than those around him. There are many towns and cities in the land, of which little or nothing is known. They are tolerably well walled; Kerak is the chief stronghold, and mentioned under various designations in the Old Testament (e.g., 2 Kings iii. 25; Isa. xv. 1). From the time of Saladin and the crusaders down to our day no English woman had been to the place until Mrs. Lethaby went.

Answering the question: "Why did I go to the Moabites?" Mr. Lethaby maintained that as a Methodist he would have been unworthy the man who said, "All the world is my parish," if he had not gone where there was greatest need for the Gospel message. When on a visit to the Holy Land, he learned that there were souls in Moab for whom nobody seemed to care—no one had told them of Christ. He was dissuaded from going to them immediately, and persuaded to continue his local preaching and other work in England. However, God struck him down in health, and some seven years ago death seemed very near. Then, realising that he had better live and labour in Moab than die altogether at Frome, his friends wished him God-speed in his new sphere.

Notwithstanding many rumours of the arrival of a Turkish force, Kerak still remains an independent Arab State. There is an utter absence of protection to life and property, but the missionaries are free to make known the Gospel and instruct the children—principally of Moslem families—in the Word of God, also to conduct house-to-house services among the women. The ruling families are very lawless; one of them told Mr. Lethaby: "We do not want any of the commandments of God." Certainly they do not mind breaking any one or all ten of them. There are in Kerak a few members of the Greek Church, which, though admittedly corrupt, has not ceased all down the centuries to provide for Christian worship in the city.

It was against the advice of many in Jerusalem that Mr. and Mrs. Lethaby set out for Moab. They said: "It is not safe; you are throwing away your life." But four missionaries' wives spoke differently, saying: "Go"; to Mrs. Lethaby they gave this word of encouragement:—

"NEVER MIND WHAT ANYONE SAYS;

if God has given you work there, go in his name, and do it." Having described his journeyings, and some of the troubles and toils of his undertaking, Mr. Lethaby told of the cheering progress of the work. Many children have been taught to read and write; while in learning by heart passages of Scripture some of the children have excelled. The little ones are taught Psalms and other portions of Holy Writ, from ten to sixty verses every week, and many of them can write in English as well as Arabic. Hymns, such as "My God, I am thine," "Thou, O Christ, art all I want," are known and heartily sung by these offspring of Mohammedans; the children will surely never be followers of the False Prophet. Their instruction is broad and deep. Said Mr. Lethaby: "I will go through every chapter of St. John's Gospel, and the boys will tell me what is in each and all; I ask for verses, and they repeat them from any chapter I name." In view of the wickedness of the people, one boy remarked thoughtfully: "They do not think of the judgment day." Mr. Lethaby also spoke of his wife's meeting of Mohammedan mothers; and acknowledged the valuable assistance rendered by their helper, Miss Arnold. A hospital is wanted, also Christ-like fellow workers. From Kerak colporteurs might explore the land, spreading the Word of Life abroad, so that "Arabia's desert ranger" may bow the knee to Christ.

In his modesty Mr. Lethaby did not enlarge upon the great hardships he had endured. Rev. GEORGE PIERCY, treasurer of the Mission, referred to these, also to the insults and outrages that had attended the devoted workers. It was clear that Mr. Lethaby left much unsaid, as he did not make the barest allusion to his beneficent medical work among the people.

The "Occasional Papers" on the Mission are full of interest. Those who wish to receive them should communicate with Mr. Piercy, at 276, Burdett-road, London, E.

MR. JOHN CHAPMAN, of Torquay, has during the past four months found many open doors for Gospel work in Australia. To a large extent he has laboured in country districts, but he has had large audiences, people having come together from far and near to hear the Gospel. Latterly he has been at Sydney, preaching in the Temperance Hall, and giving Bible-readings at the Tabernacle.

PRAYER FOR ISRAEL.—Rev. J. Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, has issued a circular announcing that it is arranged to hold an All Day Prayer Meeting at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N., on Tuesday, September 30, to plead with God on behalf of Israel. "We shall be grateful to the Lord," says Mr. Wilkinson, "if the friends of Israel in London and its suburbs, and if possible those in the country, will unite with us on that day; but where this cannot be done in person we would suggest that similar meetings, with the same objects and topics, be called together in provincial towns." The meetings at Mildmay will be held as follows:—9 a.m.—Confession of culpable neglect of the Jews by the Church of Christ; Chairman, Colonel J. F. Morton. 11 a.m.—Prayer that the Christian Church may be aroused to an interest in the Jews warranted by the Word of God; Chairman, Mr. James E. Mathieson; address by Rev. Dr. Bullinger. 3 p.m.—Prayer for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the Jews throughout the world; Chairman, Rev. John Wilkinson; address by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch. 6.30 p.m.—Prayer for all Missions to the Jews—that men and women engaged in this work may be filled with the Holy Spirit, and that modes of work may be those approved by the Word and Spirit of God; Chairman, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe.

A FRENCHMAN'S CONVERSION:

A STORY OF DIVINE PROVIDENCE.

WE quote the following from the Annual Report of the Open Air Mission for 1890:—

A Frenchman stood on the sea-shore at Folkestone, hungry, desolate, miserable. Though young he was wicked, and considered himself abandoned of God for his wickedness, and had long given up all ideas of religion. A few months earlier he had left Paris with a companion for London. There they had drunk freely together, and after one of their drinking bouts his companion deserted him, after robbing him of all save ten francs. For awhile he wandered about, and finally he resolved to walk to Folkestone, where he arrived on a Saturday. Being destitute, he lay out all night, and on Sunday morning he went down to the beach to be out of the way of the people, and hoping to find a few mussels to satisfy the cravings of hunger, but found none. At the sight of the barren sands his emotion overcame him, and he wept. This recalled his past wickedness, and he felt he deserved his present misery; so he cried to God for help.

Meanwhile, a missionary in the town was strongly impressed with the conviction that he ought to visit the beach. He had gone to an inn, to speak to the men who usually gathered there for gambling and drinking; but the Spirit bade him go to the beach. As it was a long way, he hardly cared to go at first; but he felt the Lord wanted him to go, so he went. He was led to a very out-of-the-way place to get down. At this spot he saw the young Frenchman we have described. He felt afterwards that God must have led him that way, or he would not have discovered him. At first he passed him, but the Lord bid him go back. Then he offered him a little tract, for which he returned his thanks with tearful eyes. Finding the stranger thus thrown in his way had a kindly voice, he told him his story, in broken English, as stated above, and ended by saying he was just asking God to help him, so that when the missionary stepped up, he felt that it was God himself who had come.

Here was as clear a case of providential guidance as the familiar story of Philip and the eunuch in the eighth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. The missionary took the stranger home, and having fed him, had a long discourse with him, which ended in the poor fellow yielding his broken heart to Jesus. Then they prayed together, and the penitent's first prayer was: "I thank you, good God, for ever bringing me to London, and for losing my all, or I should never have found the good Jesus. I thank you for dying for me. I will serve you for ever. Do keep me."

He stayed awhile with the missionary, who then put him aboard the Boulogne boat which left Folkestone at midnight. Before starting they had prayer together on the beach, commending each other into the hands of God, and sought his guidance. After waiting about five weeks the missionary received a letter from his grateful convert. On board the boat, he said, were two young gentlemen on their way to the Exhibition, and as they could not speak French they engaged him as their interpreter during their stay. Thus the means to earn money were speedily and providentially arranged. In this letter he still praised God that he was saved.

"Who hath despised the day of small things?" It was Gipsy William Smith, the town missionary of Folkestone, who proved the good Samaritan in this interesting case.

WIMBORNE, DORSET.—A mission under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. was conducted at Wimborne by Mr. Henry Thorne, from September 6 to 17. Much blessing was experienced during the services, and many testified to the saving power of Jesus Christ.

At Doncaster Races.

WHO could look unmoved on a spectacle such as this?—Doncaster station the starting-point, and Doncaster racecourse the destination of an immense multitude, men, women, children, princes, peers, peasants, surging along the fine wide road, about a mile and a half in length, and blackening the prospect with their numbers. Thousands, tens of thousands, scores of thousands, on they go, hour after hour, day after day for four days—a solemn and striking illustration of the broad way that leadeth to destruction, many going in thereat. What attracts them? Pleasure, ungodly gain, sin. And do they come back satisfied? Let their faces tell the tale. Here is one—a typical betting man—costume and countenance alike unmistakable. There is a look on the latter which plainly says, I have won, but it is a look none of us would care to wear. Here comes another—a young man who walks with heavy step and downcast air. Despair is written there, and it says, I have lost my all. On they come, these faces glad and sad—thousands, thousands.

And amid this carnival of hell, this triumph of ungodliness, who is on the Lord's side? Not many, apparently. Myself, from the office of the Open-Air Mission, and two or three local workers—working men who have willingly sacrificed time and money for the Master's sake and for his glory. We sally forth together every morning, laden with booklets, tracts, and Scripture cards, and, making our way to the racecourse, stand within the entrance offering tracts, repeating texts aloud, and warning the young as the multitude passes by. And while, in one sense, the work tells heavily upon the spirit, and in another it is cheering, for the great majority take willingly what is offered them.

At Epsom it is different, for there, perhaps, fully fifty per cent. of the people refuse even the choicest publications; but here they are accepted by almost all except professional betting-men and aristocrats, whom it seems almost impossible to reach. Those in vehicles, too, must receive attention, so we walk through the whole course, giving the precious seed to country people in breaks, carriages, and traps, and to keepers and attendants at stalls and booths. The butter-scotch boys, too, of whom hundreds are about selling Doncaster's famous product—must not be forgotten, and a pretty card or children's booklet greatly pleases them.

The afternoon brings a pleasant change, for at 2·30 we join the prayer-meeting in the Y.M.C.A. conducted by local ministers, Episcopalian and Nonconformist, and attended by a goodly band of praying men and women, who cry to God on behalf of those who never lift up cry or prayer for themselves, and for the efforts made in his name to stem the tide of evil. Then, armed again with Gospel ammunition, we take our stand some distance on the road, and as the race-goers return we meet them with spoken and silent messages from the Master.

It is half-past seven, and we are in St. Sepulchre Gate. A score of earnest workers gather round, and while evening falls, and the crowd thickens, we tell the "old, old story, of Jesus and his love." It is grand!

THE MAYOR IS WITH US,

and earnestly, simply, faithfully, he addresses the assembly, and proudly declares that he has received no greater honour in the town than this, to tell them of the Saviour's invitation to sinful men. My host, Dr. A. Christy Wilson, the beloved physician, is there, and his splendid voice rings out like a trumpet-tongue upon the evening air, as with powerful and persuasive words he preaches the glorious Gospel. Christians of many denominations are there, Methodists and "Exclusive Brethren" alike rejoicing in the privilege which is theirs. And godly women are there, and as they speak the objector's voice is hushed, and a solemn stillness of rapt attention steals over all. Best of all, the Holy Spirit is there, His voice is being heard, his power is being felt. It is grand!

Alas! it is but a drop in the ocean. Thirty-thousand tracts distributed by three or four workers in four days, but a hundred workers and half a million publications would not be too many to meet the awful need. Why are not more local workers forthcoming? Partly because everyone is so busy in the race week, and partly because many mouths are shut, and many hands paralysed, by tacit acquiescence in that which takes place. Lodgings are let for fabulous sums,* trade is busier than at any other time, and a clear annual profit of something like £10,000 is made by the corporation, a contribution to the local rates, which wins over almost all the local opinion. But if this be so, outsiders must step in. For many years past the Open-Air Mission† has sent special agents for the work, and, did funds permit, efforts on a far larger scale could be put forth.

Would that the Church of Christ were awake to its duty of more worthily supporting this Mission, which, undaunted by sneers, and unchilled by the averted eyes of the great amongst us, has laboured on for thirty-seven years amongst those who, met and reached at racecourses, never can and never will be reached except on their own ground.

Let no one say the effort is a fruitless one. Stern, blessed facts, long in the possession of the Open-Air Mission, and added to with the added labour of every year, are, thank God, too strong! Ask Mr. Edwin H. Kerwin, the right-hand man of Mr. Charrington at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, and he will tell you it was on Doncaster racecourse that he read and heard the Gospel, to return home convicted of sin, and to seek and find the Saviour. And this is anything but a solitary instance. But if it were, or if we lacked even that, the Divine command must be sufficient. "Go out quickly," "Go ye into all the world," this is enough for obedient and consecrated hearts.

Open-Air Mission. FRANK COCKREM.

CHRISTIANITY IN TURKEY.

THE growing feeling of unrest among the Christian subjects of the Sultan, both in Europe and in Asia, is daily becoming more apparent. Every mail that reaches England from the Turkish dominions brings confirmation of the brief telegraphic despatches which of late have followed each other in quick succession, all showing how hopeless it is to expect any reforms whatever, however solemnly they may be promised at the Sublime Porte. From Southern Macedonia come reports of oppression and barbarous cruelty. In Crete the smouldering embers of discontent may at any moment burst out into flame. Wherever, in fact, the banner of the Star and Crescent flutters in the breeze, there also is to be found mal-administration and peculation in all public departments, weak and lazy officials, corruption in the courts of law, and general insecurity of life and property. Armed brigands levy blackmail right and left, the local "Robin Hoods" ostentatiously parading themselves in the bazaars at noonday, exchanging friendly salutations with the officers of gendarmerie, and passing unmolested under the fretted casements of the Governor's house. Nor are the Mohammedan peasantry themselves satisfied with their lot under Islamic rule. They would infinitely prefer a strong Government under the protection of a European Power, such as now exists in Egypt, Bosnia, the Herzegovina, and Cyprus (where, at all events, the poor obtain substantial justice at the hands of Christian judges, and all enjoy perfect religious liberty) rather than continue to endure the present unsatisfactory condition of affairs.—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

THE friends gathered on Wednesday last week at the usual workers' meeting, at 29, Bethnal Green-road, greatly missed the bright and cheery presence of Miss Macpherson, who had left that day for Canada. Many prayers were offered for her and the work among the little ones on the other side of the sea.

Pastor W. FULLER GOOCH gave an address founded on Numbers xi. 24-30. The faithfulness of Scripture in recording the failings as well as the excellencies of God's servants is not only a tribute to its Divine truthfulness, but also an encouragement to the people of God to-day, showing them that the best of men were of like passions with themselves. Moses gathered the elders around the tabernacle; it is very important for us all to be right as to the centre we recognise. This is not sect or party, the only true centre for faithful workers is Christ the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man. The Lord's descent to speak with Moses in the cloud illustrates the readiness of the Master constantly to communicate to his servants all that is necessary for their guidance and help. This is done through the Holy Spirit, who now takes the place of the pillar of cloud. The same Spirit who empowered Moses as the man of God came upon the seventy elders. Whatever diversities of gifts or operation there may be, it is ever one and the same Spirit who worketh all in all. Eldad and Medad, though outside in the camp, received the Spirit as well as those who were by the tabernacle. We must be careful not to make the mistake of Joshua, and of the disciples spoken of in Mark ix. 38, and only recognise those as the Lord's who work on our own lines, or in accordance with our own views. If the fruits of the Spirit are brought forth, never mind where or by whom, they are tokens of a Divine commission.

Mrs. Merry, who has just returned from Canada, remarked that circumstances connected with the new opening in Manitoba required Miss Macpherson's presence and counsel. Miss Stock gave some account of the children in Canada, saying that some of the grown-up lads were preparing themselves for the foreign field. It was a great joy to meet with those she had known in former years, and the contrast from misery to happiness and prosperity was very wonderful.

THE TRUE NOBILITY OF CHARACTER.—The following are the closing sentences of an admirable article on "Character," by "F. M. B." in last week's issue of The Queen:—"It would be scarcely possible to leave religion altogether out of a consideration of 'Character,' for the reason that the highest type of human character must be formed upon a Divine ideal, having for its basis and building-up such Christian virtues and graces as the faith that can trust as well as believe, the hope which both illumines the future and cheers and supports in the present, the humility that grows with the growth of the spiritual man and increases in depth as he rises in knowledge and attainment, and the love which 'loses' and 'finds' its life in self-sacrifice. Without such foundation and support a truly good and noble character could never be formed and perfected."

GENOA HARBOUR MISSION.—A correspondent, writing from Brighton, describes a visit to Genoa, and concludes:—"I could not help thinking how much the men must appreciate the great kindness and loving sympathy shown them by Mr. and Mrs. Miller, and how glad they must be of such a haven of rest when staying, it may be for some time, at a foreign port, where they have no friends and are exposed to so many temptations. On Sundays a boat goes round to the vessels to fetch those who wish to go either to the Presbyterian or Church of England services on shore, as well as to those held in the 'Bethel.' I am sure this work is much blessed by God, and I do sincerely trust that many by their prayers and their contributions will help Mr. Miller to open his new 'Bethel' on shore very soon, so that he may be encouraged to go on and prosper more and more in this important work.'

Anglo-Saxons in India.

"ZENANA MISSIONARY" writes to us from the Punjab:—

It is with much thankfulness that I have noticed the article in THE CHRISTIAN of June 20 under the above title, and the proposal for an effort to promote religious education and influence among European and Eurasian children in India. It is more than true that so exceedingly important, and hitherto so comparatively neglected a duty, should be brought before the Christian public with all that urgency of appeal, and vividness of illustration, and assuredness of blessed results following faithful and prayerful effort, which we call into use in our pleadings for any other special service for our coming King. It was never so important as now, that in the work of caring for the souls and bodies of the ever-increasing community of domiciled Europeans and Eurasians in India, the Church of Christ should take immediate action, spend and be spent, and let faithful and untiring effort keep pace with vigilance and prayer!

This short letter is a "distress signal," sent in the hope that many of God's people may take up the cry, and or send others to the rescue! Why is the distress so urgent? Because in this land of heathenism and Mohammedanism, these uncared for and untaught, Godless "Christians," are putting stones into the King's highway, and making much more grievous and disappointing than need be the toil of his servants, whose life-work here is to "gather out" those stones, and to "make straight in the desert a highway for our God."

In the article of your issue of June 20, the domiciled European and Eurasian children are spoken of as "largely neglected on the part of English missionary societies." Neglect implies the non-fulfilment of duty, but the duty of missionary societies is presumably to carry the Gospel to the heathen. For that they have been organised and called "Missionary Societies," in the general acceptation of the words. Of course, such an interpretation of the meaning of mission work cannot be defended, if it implies that the representative of any missionary society in any large town or city in India is justified in not making any efforts for the souls of some two or three hundred nominal Christians of his own race, who may be living within a walk of the Mission compound, and concerning many of whom, at least, it is not too much to assert that through them the name of God is

BLASPHEMED AMONG THE HEATHEN DAILY.

Nevertheless, business is business, and order must be maintained; so that while every Christian who feels aright must realise that he is debtor to each Christless person with whom he meets, and that the debt is not discharged until he has done at least all he can to make known to that person the wonders of redeeming love, yet the facts will remain that specially trained and fitted workers are required for each special sphere of work, and that the same all-wise Hand which prepared the "chosen vessel" to be pre-eminently "the Apostle to the Gentiles" (albeit leading him constantly into circumstances in which he found himself constrained to preach to Jews!), doubtless does mark out special paths and appoint certain boundaries for his workers now. May there not have been intentional teaching of this very lesson, in the words of the blessed Master, when He said, "To every man his work"?

Rev. T. CRAVEN was pleading in the paper under notice for missionary effort on behalf of the children, and his pleading does indeed demand warm and earnest seconding; while the schools which he mentions as established in various stations call for the unstinted praise (no less than the in the direction of our "lambs of the flock" should excite the vigilance and activity) of our missionary forces.

But we need workers for God, not among the children alone. We must have their parents reached, and the home life and all its surroundings purified. In every large city there is scope for every sort of evangelistic agency. Cases abound on all sides of distress, of sickness, of misery on account of conjugal unfaithfulness and consequent separation; of breaking up of family life, of degradation and every sort of disgraceful habit, the inheritance of children who are familiar with every detail of "the reason why" they have been reared in such wretchedness; these things call loudly enough for Christian people's help, and "district visitors" would find a grand field for all sorts of efforts for Christ, among the wives and grown daughters of men employed in workshops and on railways, &c.

Our sailors and our soldiers, too, echo the call of distress, as do all the innumerable openings for service for God's children in connection with ports, and barracks, and camps; to say nothing of the half-European homes (nearly always having all the essential characters of brothels) to be found in the bazaars of most populous cities which have been much frequented by low-class Europeans; and, again, the distinct and of "rescue work" among the hosts of lost women, very many of whom have some English blood in their veins, and many of whose unfortunate children attract our notice in the worst haunts of the city (as we are startled by their Saxon hair and eyes), plead piteously for gentle, strong, wise, motherly women to come for Christ's sake to the rescue!

MR. BARON, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, so greatly interested Mr. Moody and his guests at Northfield that he wired to Mr. Wilkinson to prolong Mr. Baron's stay. Mr. Baron has gone to Chicago to give Bible-readings at Mr. Moody's new Evangelistic Bible Institute. He will sail for home (D.V.) in the Majestic on October 1.

A CALL TO PRAYER.—Mr. Robert Teare, of Ramsey, Isle of Man, for many years an earnest labourer in the cause of the Gospel, writes to us:—"A number of Christians in Cornwall and London have agreed to ask the Lord to increase their faith, and pour out his Spirit upon them. Also speedily to fulfil his precious promise in Joel ii. 28-29, Luke xxiv. 49, and Acts ii. 17-18, in turning millions of the people of the United Kingdom from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. Will your readers please join in this agreement? 'Ask, and it shall be given you' (Matt. vii. 7)."

IRISH SOCIETY.—DEAR SIR,—I have been one of the examiners at examinations held in Liverpool and Manchester lately, when six hundred Irish Roman Catholics were examined in reading, translating, and repeating from memory, appointed portions of Holy Scripture in Irish and English. The work of Scriptural education among the Irish population in Lancashire, commenced in 1881, has advanced far beyond the initial stage. There can be now no question as to the good that might be done among a class of people whom no other agency can effectively reach. The only limitations to the attainment of larger results by the Irish Society are those imposed by want of means, From this cause the examinations intended to be held three times a year can only take place at uncertain and distant intervals. The suspension of such a work, even for a time, would mean the breaking up of large classes formed for Bible study, the loss of golden opportunities, and the withdrawal of Scriptural instruction from hundreds of eager students. Kindly allow me, through the medium of your widely circulated paper, to make known the above facts, and to request that special prayer may be made that this excellent work may not be allowed to languish.

THOS. KEANE, Clerical Sec. for England.

"IT IS I."—MATT. XIV. 27.

[Lines suggested by the words of Rev. C. A. Fox, at the close of the Keswick Convention praise meeting, July 26, 1890.]

WHEN the shadows round us gather
Out on life's tempestuous sea,
And amid the lonesome darkness
Hope, and trust, and courage flee;
Walking on the stormy billows,
Lo! the Master draweth near;
But too oft our eyes are blinded,
And our hearts cry out in fear!

Then He speaks: and as his accents
Fall upon our anxious ear,
All our doubts and vague forebodings
Vanish at his words of cheer;
Not a spectral, nightly vision
Is this Presence, felt so nigh,
Hear his voice in loving greeting
Whispers gently: "It is I!"

"I," the everfaithful Master,
"I," the neverchanging Friend,
"I," who ever will be with you
Through the life that knows no end!
Not a mystic, dreaded phantom
This, from spirit-worlds above,
Not the "It" of fearful fancy,
But the "I" of living love!

Thus in hours of lonely trial
When no human help avails;
For a hand is laid upon thee
At whose touch thy spirit quails;
Listen then, for through the darkness
Comes a voice to cheer and aid,
Though the shadows veil his Presence,
"It is I; be not afraid!"

Or, when called on special duty
In the service of the King,
And thy trembling heart says faintly:
"Who am I, to do this thing?"
Fear not thou, for Jesus calleth—
His strength is the test, not thine;
Not the "It" of human effort,
But the "I" of power divine!

If on thine own path of service
Hindrances impede the way,
Circumstances cast their shadow
O'er the brightness of the day;
Wishes crossed, or hopes deluded,
Work disowned, results delayed—
'Tis the Lord, not Fate, that ruleth,
"It is I; be not afraid!"

And when wrapped in awful silence,
Thou must face the last great strife,
Passing through the lone, dark valley
To the bliss of God's own life!
Fear not then! a vision glorious
Dawns upon thy raptured sight,
Nevermore the "It" of shadows,
But the "I" of endless light!

MR. GEORGE MULLER has been quite busy holding meetings in Stuttgart and its neighbourhood. His physical and mental activity, his true spirituality of thought, seem to furnish themes for wondering comment on the part of the Protestant press. One writer confesses to great surprise at meeting the venerable octogenarian in the streets of the city carrying his own carpet-bag!

THE SALVATION ARMY IN INDIA.—Commissioner Booth-Tucker has published from the Indian Territorial Headquarters, Esplanade, Bombay, an account of the work of the Prison Gate Brigades of the Salvation Army in India. The story is one of praiseworthy devotion to the cause of Christ, and love for the lost millions of the Empire. Some remarkable cases are given of "brands plucked from the burning." A pamphlet, entitled "Ceylon Warfare," gives a brief account of interesting operations in connection with the Army. It is from the pen of Major Jai Bhai, and contains details which are calculated to enlist the sympathies of many in the work. In a recent letter to Commissioner Tucker, Mr. W. S. Caine says:—"I have faith in your methods, and I believe that, if God spares you for ten years more, the results of the labours of the Salvation Army in India will astound Christendom."

Three Epochs in English History,

AND THEIR SPIRITUAL LESSONS.

BY REV. J. F. T. HALLOWES, BIRMINGHAM.

THE religious life of England has been progressively built up by three great movements, in which the power of the Spirit of God has convicted multitudes of sin, righteousness, and judgment. These movements gather round three great historical names—Wyclif, Luther, Wesley.

Wyclif struck the first serious and effective blow at the supremacy of the Church of Rome in England by his translation of the Bible into English, the publication of his tracts, and by his organisation of an order of "Poor Preachers," the Primitive Methodists of the 14th century. These the sarcasm of the clergy nicknamed "Lollards," or "Idle Babblers," a name very similar to that given by the wits of Athens to St. Paul. So great was their success that a few years after their home missionary work commenced their opponents complained that "every second man you meet is a Lollard."

That the Reformation in the 16th century took such firm root in England was doubtless partly due to the fact that the soil had been prepared by our own Reformer, Wyclif. The historian J. R. Green, says: "The translation of Wyclif did its work. 'Scripture,' complains a Canon of Leicester, 'became a vulgar thing, and more open to lay folk and women that know how to read than it is wont to be to clerks themselves.'" Hence it was that the itself had such free course and lasting influence as they gained in no other country—not even in Germany, the home of Luther, still less in France, Italy, and Spain, where similar blessed preparation was wanting. Moreover, as the Reformation was fortunate in its antecedents it was equally so in its consequents.

Puritanism was the consolidation of the Reformation, representing as it did the growth of its ethical life.

Again, the Methodist movement and the evangelical revival of the last century was the occasion of a wondrous working of the Holy Spirit.

Greatly was this revival needed, in spite of prior spiritual quickenings. Those noble clergymen, two thousand in number, who, in 1662, allowed themselves for conscience, sake to be cast out of their "livings," had all died, and had left very few successors at all worthy of themselves. Green says that "the English clergy of the beginning of the 18th century were the most lifeless in Europe, the most remiss in their labours, and the least severe in their lives. The decay of the great Dissenting bodies went hand in hand with that of the Church, and during the early part of the century the Nonconformists declined in numbers as in energy."

Dr. Watts in 1737 complained that the work of conversion goes on very slowly, and that the Spirit in his saving influences is much withdrawn. Then the mercy of God once more intervened in our behalf. In 1738 John Wesley established the Methodist Society in London. Soon commenced. John Wesley and George Whitefield were the two great lights of the new day, and they were surrounded by a host of lesser luminaries. It is difficult to exaggerate the importance of this fresh religious departure. Though Dissenters and Church people alike feared and distrusted it at first, yet by the beginning of the present century they were greatly enlivened by it. It gave a severe blow to the Deism of the day. It became the mother of Sunday-schools, of the great missionary societies, and of the new philanthropy generally, with all its sectional activities on behalf of different classes of the community. But it is impossible here to indicate ourmany-sided indebtedness to this remarkable revival, whose streams brought benediction to the institutions of the Church of Christ generally in this land, and through her largely to the State.

Nor are these forces by any means exhausted. It is true that a counter reformation movement—the "Oxford Revival"—has in certain quarters somewhat undone the work of the Methodist revival. It is true, also, that Agnosticism has made distinct headway, particularly among the cultured classes, during the last twenty-five years. Still, all who can really measure the religious life of last century will pronounce that our present situation is vastly preferable to that which obtained then. Despite these admissions, however, I deeply feel that England needs to check the present tendencies to superstition on the one hand and negation on the other, which, should they grow apace, will before very long inflict immeasurable damage upon us as a nation. The three great times of special refreshing which God has graciously given us during the last five hundred years ought to encourage Christians to intercede with intense earnestness for another general outpouring of the Spirit of God. Assuredly, the Spirit of the Lord is not self-straitened. In Himself He is as free to act as ever. He limits not Himself. He is limited by us. He is not self-straitened, but church-straitened. He desires more liberty to work in and through the different sections of his church on the people of England, more union between those sections, more loyalty to truth, more responsiveness to God. He desires that Christians should have more of Him by his having more of them. That they should be

MORE FORCIBLE TOWARD THE WORLD BY BEING MORE FLEXIBLE TOWARDS GOD.

But how will this greater power of the kingdom be manifested in England? Not perhaps according to the method of any of its earlier revelations. God often transcends his former works, surprising the world and even the Church. Our religious history as a nation has by no means exhausted the fertility of his expedients. Hitherto some eminent man has been at the centre of each of the marked revivals of former days. In the next great manifestation of the forces of his kingdom there may be no such prominent figure.

Even the Spirit-inspired prayers of his people may take a somewhat different shape. In the Methodist revival, the cry was "England for Christ"; but this had not been uttered long before some began to broaden the cry, and say, "The World for Christ." What if this becomes the great preliminary voice of the next revival, the heart's cry of thousands of Christians, being not so much patriotic as ecumenical. It is the conviction of many persons that in the next few years the Holy Spirit will quicken the consciences of multitudes of English Christians on behalf of the world, and thus sending from our shores an increasingly large number of missionaries will condescend to bless us at home through our widened and more self-denying sympathies for mankind. It seems a law of the kingdom, that broadened spiritual sympathies should bring a broadened blessing both on the sympathisers and on those who are compassionated.

Thus particular churches, dismissing all ecclesiastical selfishness in attempting to bless the heathen have been richly blessed themselves. I know of no better instance of this than the case of

in Hermansburgh, Hanover. In 1849 this congregation of poor persons, fired by their pastor's zeal, inaugurated a mission to South Africa, which in thirty years' time resulted in the establishment of thirty stations, served by 1 ordained and lay missionaries, in addition twenty-two ordained natives and 185 helpe Thus were nearly 4000 converts gathered and nearly 9000 persons openly renounc heathenism. "During the seventeen years Harms' conduct of the enterprise (says I Pierson) his parish and 10,000 members were gathered into t church fold." It seems probable that su facts are God's finger indicating to us t channel along which He means that refreshi streams should reach his churches in countri where Christianity has been long establishe And since such tremendous religious respon bilities are committed to the Anglo-Saxon ra generally, if only the churches of Great Brita of Greater Britain, and of the United State will arouse themselves to a far more prayerf and intelligent enthusiasm, to propagate t Gospel amongst the thousand millions heathen and Mohammedans who do not y know it—the stimulus that home missio would then receive would be simply incalcu able. Before the nineteenth century expir there is yet time to win a great victory at hon and abroad, provided that Christians will agr together to plead for this with a faith and zeal commensurate with the greatness of the request.

Oh, that the Church would do her devotion duty. The supreme need of the modern Chur is prayer. In the present century the organis tion of the Church and the equipment of h ministers has been perfected in a remarkab degree, whilst her activity among the differe classes of the community has made encouragi progress. But her ability and love for pray has not kept pace with the vigour and versatil of her external life. She can never have t full advantage of her outward activities un she multiplies her inward heart activities. S wants a "forward movement," she needs

AN INWARD MOVEMENT.

Let her be such to God (who longs to bless h more than she longs to be blessed) that He w be able to work in her mightily, and assured He will work through her mightily, soundi out through her an effective message to th ends of the earth.

Obituary.

REV. JOHN TRAFFORD.

REV. JOHN TRAFFORD, M.A., who was for ma years connected with the Baptist College at Sera pore, India, died at his residence at Lordsh Park, N., on Monday. Returning to England few years ago, Mr. Trafford undertook pastor duties at Weymouth; but more recently he h acted as secretary to the Bible Translation Societ in the interests of which he visited many parts Great Britain. This office he held until within few days of his death. Mr. Trafford had been failing health for some months, having reached th age of seventy-three years. His widow is daughter of Rev. D. J. East, Principal of th Calabar College, Jamaica.

COMMANDANT HERBERT BOOTH, the hea of the Salvation Army Training Home work, w married on Thursday morning last week at th Congress Hall, Clapton, to Captain Corrie Schoc daughter of Major Schoch, formerly of the Dut Army, but now of the Salvation Army in Ho land. The Congress Hall was crowded in eve part, so that there must have been some sev thousand people present, mostly members of t Army. The ceremony, which lasted about tw hours, was conducted by General Booth benea the Army flag. Subsequently a luncheon w given. Short addresses were delivered by t General, the bride and bridegroom, Mr. and M Schoch, Mr. Bramwell Booth, and others. A touc ing letter was read from Mrs. Booth, at whc compulsory absence much regret was expresse In continuation of the proceedings, a musical fe tival was held in the evening at Exeter Hall.

The Book World.

The Child's Guardian, the official organ of the ational Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to hildren, is filled with painfully interesting atter. While it is grievous to read of so much eartless treatment of child-life, it is gratifying to arn that Rev. B. Waugh's labours to visit punishent upon offenders meet with large success. Mr. Vaugh's evidence before the Select Committee of ie House of Lords on Infant Life Assurance is ummarised in this issue. (2d. Kegan Paul, rench & Co.)

WHAT CHEER, OH! By Alex. Gordon. 1s. Nis- t & Co. This deeply interesting volume consti- ites a splendid plea for a splendid Christian work -the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. Graphic arrative and statistical report are admirably mbined, and the interest of the reader is thoughly held from the first page to the last. No hilanthropic effort of modern times lends itself ore readily to treatment of this kind. From Mr. ordon's sympathetic and touching record we pre- ct much good for the Mission of which it tells.

THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE DATED. By E. H. radby, D.D. 1s. T. Fisher Unwin. This is an ideavour to popularise "the results of Biblical iticism." Many of the positions assumed are ill strongly contested, and therefore cannot be rrectly called "results." Dr. Bradby shows an nreasonable haste in adopting destructive opinions. he facts and fancies of criticism are not disriminated; therefore the book is not reliable, and nnot be regarded as needful.

SEVEN YEARS IN CEYLON. By the Misses eitch. 2s. 6d. Partridge & Co. No one who has eard these gifted and enthusiastic ladies tell their ory of life and labour in "the spicy isle" will eed to have this attractive book commended to em. It contains a series of letters written from e field to friends at home, and affords very vivid impses of the social condition of the people as ell as of Gospel work on their behalf. The illusations are profuse, and altogether the work is lculated to deepen the public interest in a noble ork.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA. By Howard rosby. 3s. Funk & Wagnalls. The well-known ew York pastor faithfully exposes the worldliness the professing Church. Without enlarging upon e symbolic or prophetic meanings of the tters (Rev. ii., iii.), he extracts the moral and iritual lessons of each and all. The Church's nger is the subject of an eighth chapter, in which e following three rules are given for the regulaon of Christian life:—Refuse worldly guidce, take God's Word as guide, and engage perally in the work of evangelisation. Each point admirably justified and enforced.

THE LIFE OF GEORGE H. STUART. Written Himself; edited by Dr. R. E. Thompson. Jas. isbet & Co. The sketch which recently appeared our columns, of the public career of this Amecan philanthropist, showed him as a man well to e front in every good work. These autoographical chapters supply a very detailed mplification of a crowded life history. Mr. Stuart ay be said to have had a hand in every movent undertaken during his working life for the od of the American people, and the record of it ntained in these pages is much more a history of hristian endeavour on behalf of a great nation an the mere story of a good man's life. It is minently readable, and full of references to wellnown men and movements. There are five porits of various leading Americans, as well as two Mr. Stuart himself.

GIDEON AND THE JUDGES. "Men of the Bible" eries. By Rev. J. Marshall Lang, D.D. 2s. 6d. isbet. This is all that it professes to be, "a study, storical and practical." The volume is mainly ographical; what of the national life is unfolded (to use the author's own words) associated with e typical persons whose influence and judgeship e traced. One of these persons occupies the chief ace on the canvas; and without unduly "improvg" the features of his career, the wealth of instruction in righteousness" contained in his fe is admirably indicated. Dr. Lang has not lowed close attention to historical questions to lure him from his purpose to instruct his readers the highest sense. Embodying Biblical informaon and spiritual counsels, attractively combined, e book will prove of great service as a handy mmentary on an important portion of the Old estament.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES. Sermons on the Fourteenth, Fifteenth, and Sixteenth Chapters of the Gospel of John. By Alexander Maclaren, D.D. 5s. Alexander & Shepheard. Thirty-four discourses, covering a superlatively grand portion of the Golden Gospel. Our Lord's words of tender sympathy, solemn warning, and deeply precious teaching are divided up with logical precision and spiritual insight; and the sermons founded upon them are expository and practical, edifying and powerful in a high degree. The prayerful perusal of this book will, we are sure, prove a veritable means of grace to such as, like the disciples in the upper chamber, are troubled in heart and mind.

BIBLICAL ATLAS AND SCRIPTURE GAZETTEER. 5s. Religious Tract Society. This is a new edition of a work of great utility. There are eighteen maps by Mr. Henry Courtier, F.R.G.S., accurate in detail and beautifully printed. The several introductions are copious, and abreast of present geographical knowledge. The gazetteer includes every place mentioned in the Old and New Testaments, and by its many references serves the purpose of a concordance to the place-names of Scripture. The book gives a comprehensive outline of the best attainable information on Biblical geography, and may confidently be recommended to Sunday-school teachers and students in general.

CALABAR AND ITS MISSION. By Hugh Goldie, Missionary at Old Calabar. 5s. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. Full of interesting information concerning the people, the country, and the work of God accomplished in their midst in connection with the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland. The Gospel is seen in conflict with slavery, and all the forms of evil incident to barbarism and grossest superstition, and the proofs of its Divine efficacy are graphically set forth. The book is rendered increasingly attractive by a number of pictorial illustrations, and is written in a style worthy of the author's long and practical experience in the work he describes. The fact that Calabar is at the present time requesting to be made a British colony renders the volume specially welcome to British readers just now, and should induce a large circulation.

SWITZERLAND. Mrs. Lina Hug and Mr. Richard Stead have produced a volume which occupies a worthy position in the very useful "Story of the Nations" series. 5s. T. Fisher Unwin. Beginning with the lake settlements of remote antiquity, this book sketches a very entertaining and instructive history. Mindful of the special interest attaching to the Confederation in its formation and progress, the authors have traced step by step that remarkable political development. No less than larger and more influential States did the history of Switzerland call for such a succinct and lucid treatment as is here accorded to it. Moreover, being "the playground of Europe," it was highly desirable that the story should be carefully told. This work supplies just what was wanted in the form of a popular history, admirably and amply illustrated, and provided with a capital index.

PRINCIPIA; OR, THE THREE OCTAVES OF CREATION. A New Eirenikon. By Rev. Alfred Kennion, M.A., Vicar of Gerrard's Cross. Elliot Stock. The author of this work correctly holds that the Creation records of the first two chapters of Genesis are mutually complementary, not antagonistic; further, that they steer clear of all collision with scientific discoveries, and allow free play for all scientific researches. Though this is a sober attempt to harmonise and expound, we cannot regard it as successful. The author postulates an octave of "words," "works," and "seals"—callings into being, operations, and completions—but it is impossible to exhibit these without treating the record in an arbitrary manner. That the passage is truly descriptive of God's great creative work is not to be questioned for a moment; this Mr. Kennion admirably maintains in a closing chapter on the Creation doctrine of Scripture as a whole. He well asks: "Where is the book to be compared with this, whose first two chapters give us the Yesterday, and whose last two chapters tell us of the Morrow of the world's long and eventful today, and which has filled up the stupendous interval with so varied, so orderly, so progressive, so finished a drama of human life?"

ONE OFFERING; or, The Anti-Sacerdotal Testimony of the Epistle to the Hebrews. A sermon by Rev. W. H. Rankin, vicar of Christ Church, Surbiton. 3d. Nisbet. A good argument in simple language.

NOTES ON DEALING WITH ENQUIRERS. By Charles Shirreffs, secretary, Aberdeen Y.M.C.A. A penny booklet, to be had from the author. Earnest workers will do well to read these pages, which are filled with sound teaching and practical advice.

A SERMON IN MEMORIAM OF THE LATE DR. RUTHERFORD, OF NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, preached in Bath-lane Chapel, in March last, by Rev. Alfred Barrett Tebb, pastor of the Congregational Church, Winlaton, has been published. Dr. Rutherford was widely respected as a labourer in the Lord's vineyard. (2d. Newcastle: Bible and Tract Depôt, 35, Pilgrim-street.)

Recent additions to the "Popular Temperance Stories" Series, published from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, are: P.C. X21.—A POLICE STORY; SERGEANT SADLER'S FRIENDS (a sequel to "P.C. X21"); BLASTED, OR JAMIE WILSON'S FATE; and A MOTHER'S CURSE. These are all by "An Old Salt," and made specially attractive by means of illustrations.

Mr. Champness has issued from the "Joyful News' Depôt, Rochdale, two penny books worthy of wide-spread circulation:—OLD ADAM, one of John Ashworth's "strange tales," well illustrated; and THE LOGIC OF SYMPATHY, a moderate man's views on the Temperance Question. The latter is one of the Selby Series, and presents an argument which ought to have great weight with educated and thoughtful people.

MR. J. W. WILSON, late of Redruth, Cornwall, has been doing active evangelistic work for several months since his arrival in Australia. In the "bush" he and Mrs. Wilson have held Gospel services with much blessing. They have now settled in Geelong, Melbourne, where they have been appointed town missionaries to a population of some 20,000.

COLPORTAGE AT CALNE.—Mr. W. New, the colporteur at this place, during August made 605 visits to families, held 11 services, sold 52 Bibles and Testaments, 73 volumes, 138 magazines, and 98 scripture cards, with other work. There is no more welcome nor successful work amongst the villagers than colportage. Mr. New is from Mr. Spurgeon's Association, and he is supported at Calne by a small church, which has kept the work going for seven years. The help of Christians will be welcomed.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—The parish of Dull, N.B.——A fourteen days' mission to soldiers at Colchester, from October 4 to 17, by Mr. Herbert R. Francis. ——Services conducted at the Great Bridgewater-street Wesleyan Chapel, Manchester, next Sunday, by Rev. J. G. Mantle, of Birmingham.——Guidance in the conducting of a children's mission, by Mr. Tyler, from October 18 to 23, in Thorner, near Leeds, that there may be much blessing, and many souls won for Christ.

SEAMEN'S MISSION, RIO DE JANEIRO.—A long letter, dated August 26, has just been received from Mr. Wesson, the recently appointed missionary to the seamen of Rio, in which he most graphically describes the difficulties and hindrances by which he is surrounded in that port. Mr. Wesson, however, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, is seeking in the strength of the Lord to do battle bravely with everything that opposes itself to the cause of Christ. He writes confidently and hopefully of his work, and earnestly desires the prayers of God's people. Rev. E. W. Matthews, writing of this and other Brazilian ports, "deadly in more ways than one," says: "The work in the mighty port of Rio must be extended, and Mr. Wesson, who has gone out in faith, should be supported by the faithful." We invite Christian people at home to rally in the name of the Lord to the aid of this isolated worker. Communications may be made with Colonel Hobbs, Netley Abbey, Hants.

R. CALDWELL.

REV. C. H. SPURGEON delivered the inaugural address for the autumn session at Hackney (Congregational) College on Tuesday morning last week. There was a large attendance, Rev. Dr. Cave, the principal, presiding. Mr. Spurgeon addressed the students at some length, and with characteristic humour as well as common sense. He asked: How were they to glorify God in their ministry? He had known young men attempt to preach before they knew what they were going to say. It must be a wretched business to talk over a theory and about something they never experienced. He took it for granted they knew what was meant by sin and by conversion. Conversion should be definitely aimed at, and they should preach with that view. Sometimes the very simplest thoughts and plainest words would do more good than the most studied discourse. A brother minister said to him: "I really get weary of preparing sermons for my people. The other day I was so unwilling that I could not prepare my sermon, but I preached unto them just as I should have preached in my shirt sleeves if I had been awakened in the middle of the night; and they came to me and thanked me for that sermon." He said to his friend: "I should give them some more of that sort if I were you."

Letters to the Editor.

CONVENTION SPEAKERS.

DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent last week regretted that the speakers at Carlisle were not able also to be at Perth, as the conventions were held simultaneously. There is another view of the case. It may be well that the speakers be varied, rather than that a class of professional convention teachers should be developed.—Yours sincerely,

FRIEND.

CHRISTIANS AND BUSINESS.

DEAR SIR,—In reply to Mr. Pewtress' letter in your issue of September 12, on "Christian Principles in Business," I would like to call attention to a little book by Mr. Geo. Müller: "Scriptural Advice to Christians concerning their Earthly Occupation" (to be had from the Scriptural Knowledge Institution, 78, Park-street, Bristol, 2d.). In it will be found both helpful advice and also testimony on this important subject. It should be widely scattered among Christian men of business in the present day.—Yours, &c, G. JACKSON.

Tegarmuchd, Dull-by-Aberfeldy, N.B.

"MINISTERS AT THE PLAY."

DEAR SIR,—I am greatly shocked and alarmed to read in your last issue Mr. C. Lloyd Engström's further attempt to defend his action in going to the theatre. The suggestion that if "Jesus were in England (as He was in Palestine) He would Himself occasionally go to the theatre," would be surprising from anyone. But if, as I am informed, Mr. Engström is one of the two secretaries of the Christian Evidence Society, it becomes more serious still. The infidelity of this age is not to be overcome simply by argument. Separation from the world, bearing witness to the possession of that "well of water" within which so satisfies the whole being that no "broken cisterns" of earth are needed, is more calculated to convince unbelievers than a skilful putting of the evidences of Christianity. Better cease to argue for it at all than practically reduce it to such a level that it is not worth the having. A theatre-going minister does not awaken confidence in the sincere inquirer, for he knows how many evils are connected with the stage. But what shall we say when the minister representative of a Christian Evidence Society believes in a Saviour of whom he says that if He were here now He would be a patron of the stage? A man who wanted to defend his use of tobacco once made the same statement concerning Jesus and smoking. The same defence may be set up for every form of self-indulgence.

Many others will be shocked to read such a suggestion. To attempt to convince a man who is capable of making it is vain.

There is surely an earnest need for a new reformation.—Yours very truly, G. W.

FULBECK HOUSE, LIME HILL-ROAD, TUNBRIDGE WELLS, has been opened as a Convalescent Home for females only. It meets a manifest need in Tunbridge Wells, for although there is a Convalescent Home for children, there is none for adults. The services of an efficient matron have been secured, and the Home is so sheltered as to be equally suitable for a summer or winter resort. The charges will be moderate. Particulars can be obtained from Miss Woodfall, 9, Mount Ephraim-road, Tunbridge Wells.

THE MALAYS OF SINGAPORE are not entirely neglected by the Church of Christ. Mr. W. G. Shellabeer lately mentioned that there is a representative of the Brethren working in Province Wellesley, and that the S.P.G. have a mission to the Dyaks in Borneo. M. E. Sillem writes to us from Amsterdam:—"There is also a large German missionary society with nine missionaries working among the Dyaks in Borneo. During a long period Dutch and German missions have been established among the different tribes of the great Malay race in the Eastern Archipelago. On the island of Java alone there are at least twenty-three missionaries of different societies. In Sumatra and the neighbouring islands there are thirty-two missionaries to my knowledge. In the Moluccas also, some large missionary societies are working, but I do not exactly know the number of the men in the field. Last year I had the privilege of visiting the stations in the Archipelago, and I greatly rejoiced to see that the Christian work among Mohammedans has been so much blessed."

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

DEAR SIR,—Will some of your readers give me their opinion of Samson. Was he really moved by the Spirit of God? If so, how was it that he fell into sin? Whilst Judge of Israel, did he ever make any communication to Israel from God?

Southport. INQUIRER.

THE "LARGER HOPE."

SIR,—Apropos of your comment on the "Larger Hope" teaching and its supposed possible results, may I say, the question is only, "Is it true?" Of course, if it is, it must be safe teaching. The argument that men "will continue in sin that grace may abound" is an old one, and is met by St. Paul accordingly.

May I ask, with reference to the Greek words used in the Gospel for "everlasting punishment," why, if by everlasting is meant endless, was not "aïdios" used instead of "aiōnios," which is simply "age-long"? Again, why, if punishment means only vengeance, was not "timōria" written, instead of, as it is, "kolasis," which denotes corrective pruning?—Yours faithfully,

A CONSTANT READER.

REPLY.

These are definite questions, and we will answer them in order. First, as to the term whereby future punishment is qualified—Why, if an irreversible penalty was meant, was not aïdios used instead of aiōnios? The answer is that eis kolasin aiōnion is excellent sense, while eis kolasin aïdion would be an impossible collocation of words to convey the idea intended. Why? Because the event described—punishment—is future, and simply future. To this aiōnios is properly applicable. Not so aïdios, however, which spans time from an eternal past to an eternal future. The occurrences of this latter word in the New Testament are two—Rom. i. 20, "his eternal power and Godhead"; and Jude 6 "in everlasting chains under darkness." In each case the mind is directed to that which was "before the world began," and will be "when time shall be no more." The word aiōnios may refer to the unlimited past, or the unlimited future, but it cannot bridge time by indicating an uninterrupted present interval, which is distinctly denoted by the word aïdios. (See under each word Cremer's "Biblico-Theological Lexicon of New Testament Greek," fourth German edition). The questioner seems to think that he gets over all difficulty by the adoption of "age-long" instead of "eternal." Well, our word "everlasting" is a precise synonym, but it by no means limits the sense. "Ever," in its origin, embodies the idea of "age." One of its common meanings is "always," and "age-long" and "everlasting" mean no less. Certain it is that an absolute "for ever" admits of no reversal. God nowhere leads us to believe that He will repent Himself of the punishment of sin.

"A Constant Reader" asks: Why, if punishment means only vengeance, was not timōria written instead of kolasis? But timōria is written: see Heb. x. 28, 29. Here we learn that God has exercised righteous vengeance—"died without mercy" (ver. 28); and in direct comparison with this the punishment of rejectors of Christ is referred to, "Of how much sorer punishment" (timōria).

Again, the questioner says kolasis (as found in Matt. xxv. 46) "denotes corrective pruning." There is serious misapprehension here. To prune a tree by cutting off superfluous branches or shoots is admittedly good for the tree, but how is it for the branches or shoots that are cut off? "Men cast them into the fire, and they are burned" (John xv. 6). We are never told that those who come under Divine condemnation will be "correctively" dealt with, but that they will be cast aside, finally and eternally. In the September issue of The Expositor, Professor Agar Beet summarises the use of kolasis and its cognate verb, and with a precision fully justified by the facts concludes: "Not once in the Septuagint or in the New Testament does the context suggest the idea of remedial punishment, or anything beyond the penalty of wrong-doing." That is to say, while in arboriculture the word suggested two things, advantage to the tree and ruin for the branches that were lopped off, in moral contexts it simply denoted retributive punishment overtaking guilty persons.

Such fatal misapprehensions and fallacies as are here exposed are the Scripture "proofs" of the "larger hope"! It ought to be evident to all that the entire trend of Bible teaching is opposed to the idea of repeated probations. The Apost Paul was very definite in expressing the finality future punishment when he alluded to some in h day by saying, "Whose end is destruction" (Phi iii. 19). Certain theorists seem to see somethin beyond this "end." Their theory is assuredly fearful delusion. For ourselves, we are unable see one gleam of hope to lighten the prospect those who fall under the judgment of God. Thos who reject the Prince of Life are choosing th tribulation and anguish of the second death.

The Temperance Cause.

THERE are upwards of fifty abstainers in th Brighton police force.

The Rechabite Order has now been nearly fift years in existence. The membership is—adult 90,000; juveniles, 60,000.

After an extended trial of the Blue Cross move ment and sundry half measures in Switzerland, appears that a good start on behalf of tota abstinence has been made, having Zurich as it centre, for thorough, earnest work in Switzerlan and South Germany.

With the view of carrying out the new regulation regarding physiological lessons in the State school of South Australia, the Minister of Educatio Mr. Howe, has issued 150 plates amongst th schools throughout the colony illustrative of th system and of the effects of alcoholic excesses.

A new peril to temperance has appeared in th granting of licences to chemists for the sale "medicated drinks" for consumption off the pr mises. The basis of such drinks is, as a rul alcohol, and it is evident that the amount "medication" may be so small as not to interfe with the pleasure of habitual takers of intox cants.

It is stated that a test case in regard to th suppression of a public-house licence at Dover b the local magistrates will shortly be tried, th house in question belonging to a brewery firm Canterbury. The "tied house" question is co sidered by the trade to be a vital one, and no doub a great effort will be made to obtain a reversal the magistrates' decision.

The Spectator says:—"The result of this yea licensing sessions adds another proof to the coge evidence which supports the charge that th magistrates, by the laxity with which they ha administered the law, have suffered to grow up spurious interest of vast extent, which it is im possible to ignore, and which opposes a treme dous obstacle to all temperance reform."

In connection with the annual meeting of th Welsh Baptist Union, held at Swansea, there w a public temperance meeting, the Mayor (Alde man Freeman) presiding. The Mayor urged th formation of Bands of Hope in connection wi all their churches. Rev. J. Davies, of Birke head, expressed regret that out of five hundr ministers in the Union only two hundred a known to be abstainers.

THE LIVERPOOL CHRISTIAN CONVENTIC is fixed for Thursday and Friday, October 2 and afternoon and evening. The subject set down f study is "Spiritual Life," under the followi divisions:—"The Call of Grace," "The Ne Birth," "Culture of the Life," "Manifestations the Life," "Dangers to the Life," "The Ove coming Life," and "Pressing on to the Goal."

MISSION DES LETTRES AFFECTUEUSES. This French evangelistic agency, under the supe intendence of M. Samuel Porchère, rue Beno St. Etienne (Loire), has been instrumental of go in many directions. Written with great care, t letters are suited for sending to various classes people—words of sympathy for the bereaved, a of counsel for such as undertake new responsibi ties in life. We are not surprised that some hu dred branches of the Mission have been forme including a few in Belgium and Switzerlan Among people who never hear the Gospel its purity, these letters—on a variety topics—are likely to prove very useful, they are, in reality, tracts appealing readers at critical periods of life. For the m part, circulation is effected through the post, a to meet this expense M. Porchère's funds requir more rapid replenishment than he has the joy realising. Those who know the work intimat speak well of it, and, as it is calculated to fill important place in work in French-speaking co tries, we trust it will steadily and surely extend.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 28.—Psalm CXLII.

ONE of David's Cave-Psalms. Maschil means Instruction. How much instruction individuals and the Church have gained from the strait dark caves in which, in every age, the saints have been immured! The prison and the persecutor oppress the soul of the sweet singer, who yet towards the close catches sight of a brighter and better time.

1. In the R.V. each clause is rendered in the present tense. To use audible words is sometimes a great incentive to prayer, stirring up the spirit to more vehemency and concentration.

2. Of course God knows all before we tell Him, but it is our duty—and a great relief—to unbosom ourselves to Him. We often miss the benefit of prayer, because we deal so much in generals, and do not enough dwell on the particulars of our need.

3. There are times when, however bravely we would bear ourselves, our spirit faints (R.V. marg.). What is here said of the spirit is oftener predicted of the soul (Ps. xlii. 6, xliii. 5); but the dejection and fainting of the spirit is a more sorrowful condition. But how consolatory that God knows our path! His eye is ever fixed on its perplexities. He sees its hidden pitfalls and snares.

4. It was the Jewish custom for the advocate as well as the accuser to stand on the right hand of the accused (Ps. cx. 5). Observe the contrast—no man knoweth me; Thou knewest my path (3). Refuge failed me; Thou art my refuge (5).

5. The loneliness and isolation of the soul from all human love often makes it turn the more urgently to God, who can be loved without satiety, and whose love is unchangeable, unselfish, and eternal. How often does God diminish and break off our portion in this life that we may be driven to seek it again in Himself (Lam. iii. 24).

6. How well did these words befit the lips of our Lord when He descended into the dust of death for us. He was brought very low when He became obedient to the death of the cross. "Stronger than I," but not than Thou! His weakness is stronger than men (Ps. cv. 24; Jer. xxxi. 11; Luke xi. 22; John xviii. 6).

7. Is there not an allusion here to the history of Joseph? Lead me out of distress as Joseph from prison. The compassing of the righteous indicates their sympathy with the Psalmist as they press in to offer their congratulations as garlands and crowns. God's mercy to him would be a source of joy to others, who would bind the story on their brows as a festal crown ("shall crown themselves," marg. R.V.).

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 29.—Psalm CXLIII.

The spirit and language of this Psalm are so in unison with the earlier Davidic Psalms as to confirm the genuineness of the superscription. It is the last of the penitential Psalms. The pause divides the Psalm exactly, and it may be viewed as consisting of four stanzas, each of three verses.

1. When we are in Christ, the sterner attributes of God are on our side. A dying woman said, "I rely on the justice of God," adding, however, when the words excited surprise, "justice, not to me, but to my Substitute in whom I trust" (1 John i. 9).

2. The holiest of men have least confidence in themselves (Job ix. 3; Phil. iii. 7). Bernard of Clairvaux said, "So far from being able to answer for my sins, I cannot answer even for my righteousness." There is a sense in which God will never enter into judgment with us, because the great white throne has nought to say to those who are in Christ Jesus. Being justified, who is he that condemneth? (Rom. v. 1, viii. 34).

3. The dead are soon forgotten by the living, and David felt that long haunting of the caves and dens of the earth was like a living burial, which was bearing him from the homes and memories of his fellows.

4. Those who are capable of the gladdest heights of joy are also capable of the saddest depths of depression. David was permitted to touch each that he might be able to give expression to all kinds of emotion, to every phase of feeling. So was it with our great High Priest, "tempted in all points like as we are." But how unutterable the sorrow of this fainting, desolate heart!

5. Memory—Meditation—Musing.

6. Stretch forth your hands, and you will certainly touch God. This thirst is blessed. To have it is to be satisfied. There is no natural desire which has not its satisfaction; in the woods, birds do not hunger for food which is not to be had; and so the very existence of this thirst is a proof of the being and sufficiency of Him for whom it yearns, and in whom it is allayed.

7. Prayer gets more earnest as it proceeds. Speedily does not imply impatience, but vehement yearning. We sometimes think our spirit is going to faint, when there is still strength enough left in it to suffer still, and in suffering to attain the strength of steel. But God is very pitiful, and keeps his hand on our pulse while we pass through the operation (Isa. lvii. 16).

8. God's "lovingkindness" speaks continually in the ears of his people; but they are deaf to it; hence the prayer, "Cause me to hear." It is well to hear it in the morning, before other thoughts enter to engross our attention. Our prayer will be fully answered when the morning of eternity breaks.

When you are uncertain about your path, lift your soul into the presence of God, until He saturate it with his light and guidance.

9. Satan outwits himself when he drives us to our God.

10. It is more important to be taught to do than to know. The Good Spirit's leadings must be good to follow (Neh. ix. 20; Eph. v. 9). The "land of uprightness" is, literally, the level tableland.

11. God's credit and glory are involved in the succour and deliverance of his saints.

12. God makes Himself responsible for the safety of his servants: therefore, to be his servant is a better position than to be an Emperor or a Czar.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 30.—Psalm CXLIV.

Dr. Alexander says, "the Davidic origin of this Psalm is as marked as that of any in the Psalter." It is partly compiled of passages taken from other Psalms, as viii. and xviii. But the last verses are a valuable addition. It forms a transition between the Prayer Psalms and the Songs of Praise. The cloud of adversity is breaking; the beams of the sun are already struggling through.

1. In all spiritual warfare we need to be taught. Our weapons are only mighty through God (2 Cor. x. 4). Is there not an illustration of this in 2 Sam. v. 17-25?

2. Each of these names for God is a pathway which leads into his very heart. The all-subduing grace of God is indeed a theme for song. The Breaker is ever going before us (Micah ii. 13). Our Goliaths cannot stand before Him.

4. The shadows of the clouds darken miles of sea—and anon they are gone. They hide the sun, but they do not really injure.

5. David calls to mind what is recorded (in the past tense) in Psalm xviii. 9, and here asks God to repeat former deliverances.

9. New songs are demanded by new mercies. Let us give God fresbly baken loaves for his table.

10. Comp. Ps. xxxiii. 16.

11, 12. In times of war the children are often the first to suffer from privation and hardship. So the king asks for deliverance, that the sons may grow up as vigorous plants, and that the daughters may be as the exquisitely polished corner-stones which connect the walls of a palace, or even as pillars. Nothing is more important than the nurture of a beautiful family life, and for this the deliverances of God on the behalf of its head are all-important. Let the daughters who read these words seek the polishing which comes of God's cuttings. The Prayer-book and other versions substitute the word temple for palace.

13-15. In this picture of national prosperity, consequent on devotion to the cause and service of God, we are taught to realise the immense blessing which follows godliness, even in this life. Breaking in refers to the violence of the thief; going out to enforced emigration, like that which took Elimelech and his family to Moab. The Hebrew word rendered oxen (aluphim) may be translated captains or governors.

True happiness is only to be found among the people of the Lord, and in the service of the blessed God.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 1.—Psalm CXLV.

This Psalm is a song of thanksgiving and praise on the part of the house of David—and of the Church—after all their tribulations have come to a close. It is an acrostic Psalm, the verses beginning in the Hebrew with the successive letters of the alphabet. Somehow the couplet for the fourteenth letter, Nun, has dropped out of the text as it has come down to us. The Septuagint, however, and other ancient versions (with one Hebrew manuscript), supply the omission thus:—"The Lord is faithful in his words, and holy in all his works." The place of this verse is between verses 13 and 14 in our English Bibles. The word all is characteristic of this Psalm. It was the Te Deum of the Old Testament, and was perhaps the germ of that great Christian hymn. The Jews were accustomed to say that he who could pray this Psalm from the heart three times daily was preparing himself best for the praise of the world to come.

Gilfillan, writing of this and the following Psalms, says:—"They are the Beulah of the Book, when the sun shineth night and day, and the voice of the turtle is heard in the land. Coming at the close after all the mournful, plaintive, penitential, prayerful, varying notes, they unconsciously typify the joy and rest of glory."

1. Praise will be the employment of eternity. There prayer, and faith, and hope will not be possible, but we shall bless for ever.

> Our days of praise shall ne'er be past,
> While life, and thought, and being last,
> And immortality endures.

2. Let us not wait for eternity, but begin to-day; and let us practise on our harps every day, intermitting none, but in dark days as well as in bright. There is always something left to bless God for; at least, there is always Himself.

3. The sense is, "His greatness cannot be fathomed." Out of Christ men can only find out about God; but they cannot find Him out.

4. The generations as they pass transmit, each to the next, the story of God's love and power; and so the record can never die.

5. "I will meditate of the glorious majesty of thine honour," &c. (R.V.).

6, 7. What a tumult of voices! As if the time shall come when the hearts of men shall boil with holy love, and their voices rise in a mighty murmur of sound, till they sing.

8. Founded on his own proclamation (Exod. xxxiv. 6). We set to our seal that God is true.

9. Even to the worst; even over the most insignificant. Tender mercy is the blue canopy which arches over all.

10. Creation praises God, but not with intelligence, hence the saints are called upon to interpret her, and to express in language what she would say but cannot.

13. "Thy kingdom is a kingdom of all eternities."—Hengstenberg. It will survive the mightiest kingdoms of this world, and "stand for ever" (Dan. ii. 44).

14. What a contrast to the preceding majesty (5-7; Luke xii. 7).

16. To supply the wants of creation He has but to open his hand. In God the largest appetite is satisfied.

17. In all his dealings with us may we have the faith to dare to say this!

18, 19. What pathos! What exquisite comfort! How nigh He comes! Yet none but the devout soul hears his footfall. He first instils the desire, and then fulfils it.

21. Holy praise is contagious; it spreads from lonely hearts to all flesh (Rev. v. 11).

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 2.—Psalm CXLVI.

In the Septuagint this Psalm is ascribed to Haggai and Zechariah; and, if they were not the actual authors, these Psalms were probably composed during their times. The term "Hallelujah" (Praise Jah!) is not characteristic of the Psalms which date from the times of David.

2. Our being is to run parallel with God's for ever; but we shall never come to an end of his fulness, and so new discoveries will ever incite to new songs.

3. This was quoted by the Earl of Strafford, on hearing that, in spite of his royal and solemn pledge, Charles I had given assent to the Bill of Attainder.

4. Thoughts—i.e., "purposes" (R.V. marg.) At the moment of death the lofties projects of human life are at an end (Luke xii. 16-20).

5. If God helped Jacob, He will help the least and meanest of us. The reasons for this happiness appear in the following enumeration.

6. Even if we believe not, yet He abideth faithful. He is true to his promises and covenant-engagements.

7. We need not avenge ourselves, for God will vindicate us (Rom. xii. 19; 1 Pet. ii. 23).

8. What a true portraiture is this of the ministry of Christ through the ages (Luke iv. 18). Mark these present tenses. This is his unceasing work. Victor Immanuel—Emancipator!

9. There are traces of this in all the old Hebrew legislation (Deut. x. 18, xiv. 28, 29, xxvi. 12, 13; Ps. lxviii. 5). To turn upside down is to turn aside, so as to defeat their designs.

10. The eternity of the reign of God is contrasted with the brevity of man's (3), and is a perpetual theme for praise, because it carries with it the blessedness of all souls and worlds.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 3.—Psalm CXLVII.

It is supposed that this Psalm dates from the re-establishment of Jerusalem (2), and the re-building of its walls (13). It might have been composed for the occasion mentioned in Neh. xii. 27.

1. The first verse is compiled from three other Psalms—xxxiii. 1, xcii. 1, cxxxv. 3. The R.V. (marg.) suggests He instead of it, before good and pleasant. And we have a beautiful suggestion in the exchange.

2. Though Nehemiah and his companions wrought, yet they realised that the Lord was the true builder (Zech. vi. 12; Matt. xvi. 18).

3, 4. Another of these marvellous contrasts. God of all the stars; yet healer of broken hearts, needing such gentle touches. The Creator and Monarch is also Father. One broken heart is of more value than the stars. Bigness is not greatness.

6. What reversals are here! Hannah and Mary, and a host of saints have celebrated them in song. And in our Lord there is the most notable example of all (Acts v. 30, 31).

8. To the devout heart there are no second causes; God is all, and in all.

9. "Shall God give a ton of herrings to a whale for breakfast, and will he not care for me and my children?"

10. These clauses represent the cavalry and infantry, on which nations are accustomed to rely. God's deliverances are not given to these, but to those who trust Him utterly.

14. Here is the hope of distracted communities. God is the great Peace-maker (Job. xxxiv. 29).

15. He speaks, and it is done (Ps. xxxiii. 9).

16. The snow is like wool, not only because it is white, but because it acts as a blanket, and, being a non-conductor, conserves the latent heat of the soil. The hoarfrost resembles the fine grey ash of wood burned in the open air.

18. "So it was on the day of Pentecost. The winter of spiritual captivity was thawed and dissolved by the soft breath of the Holy Ghost." And such gracious spring-tides come to us all by the direct and sovereign grace of God (Sol. Song ii. 11, 12).

19. We may plead for this—that He would manifest Himself and his Divine truth to us as not unto the world.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 4.—Psalm CXLVIII.

The universe is summoned to praise God. When Mr. Janeway was dying, he said: "Come, help me with praises; yet all is too little. Come, help me, all ye mighty and glorious angels, who are so well skilled in the heavenly work of praise! Praise Him all ye creatures upon earth; let everything that hath being help me to praise God. Praise is now my work; and I shall be engaged in this sweet employ now and for ever." Similarly in our loftiest hours we turn to these Psalms, and find that their expressions befit the tumultuous rush of our emotions.

1. Gloria in excelsis.

2. Not angels only, but all other created intelligences are to sound out Jehovah's praise.

3. Here is the fabled music of the spheres.

4. The very clouds, dark and sombre, or steeped in glory, praise Him. And all the immensities of space are vocal; so that, storey upon storey, the whole is one temple of unceasing adoration.

6. Two things are here, the permanence and the order of creation, which shall not be impaired, though the Lord shall make new heavens and new earth, any more than man loses his identity when passing through the dust of death. What a marvellous miracle is continually in process around us in the renewal and maintenance of creation! And remember that all is directly due to our blessed Lord, to whom these praises are ascribed (Col. i. 15-19).

7. Dragons, i.e., sea-monsters (R.V.).

8. The tempests which sweep our lives have, all of them, music in their hearts. There is a chord in the rush of every storm. Let us praise God in unison. All stormy winds only fulfil his command.

9. We speak of the silence of the hills; but they too have a voice; and every tree claps its hands, or sings in its myriad leaves (Isa. lv. 12).

10. The low of the cattle; the song of the birds; the hum of the insects—all are indispensable notes in the great hallelujah chorus.

12, 13. "The Psalms are Church songs, and all who form her congregations should join in them."

14. "So near, so very near to God,
We cannot nearer be,
For, in the person of his Son,
We are as near as He."

Sunday Afternoon, October 5.

PARABLE OF THE VINEYARD.—LUKE XX. 9-19.

GOLDEN TEXT: ISA. liii. 3.

WITH very little variation, this parable is given in Matt. xxi. 33-46, and Mark xii. 1-12. Though spoken "to the people" (9), it was intended for "the chief priests and scribes"; and they applied it to themselves (19), and were the more exasperated with Jesus for having spoken it. It follows appropriately their question (1, 2), and convicts them of the sin of not only rejecting the "authority" of God's Son, but of putting Him to death. Do not limit its application to them. It shows the guilt and the doom of all who, in spite of the greatest privileges, are rejecting Jesus.

The vineyard (9).—The comparison of Israel to a vine had often been used before (Isa. v. 1-7; Ps. lxxx. 8-16). According to Matthew and Mark, everything had been done to this vineyard in order to its fruitfulness (Isa. v. 4). Husbandmen were the rulers of the people. The lengthened absence of the owner—"in a far country"—was the time of testing for the husbandmen. They have an honourable position; what use will they make of it? The fruit for which the Owner had a right to look was the gratitude, trust, obedience, and love of the people. From us who are so highly privileged, He looks for these to-day.

The visits of the servants (10-12).—The servants were God's faithful messengers, who had been sent so frequently, but who had been so ill-treated by the people. It has been suggested that the first servant (10) refers to Isaiah, the second (11), to Jeremiah, and the third (12) to Zechariah, whom they had put to death (Matt. xxiii. 35, 37). See also Heb. xi. 36, 37. Three things strike us in this ill-treatment of the servants: (1) The husbandmen's hatred to their Lord.—There was no reason for it (John xv. 25). All they knew of Him ought to have produced the opposite effect. Not to love Him is our greatest guilt. The heart is not right, hence the life is wrong. (2) Their increasing cruelty to the servants.—This appears more in Mark than here. Sin hardens. One sin makes a worse sin possible. (3) Their abuse of their Lord's long-suffering.—Just because He did not punish their first offence, they were hardened to do a greater wrong (Eccles. viii. 11). Yet his longsuffering was intended to produce just the opposite result (Rom. ii. 4). In all these things their history is being repeated by thousands to-day.

The sending of the Son (13-15).—Note (1) The Lord's question, "What shall I do?"—Godet compares this question to Gen. i. 26, which separates the creation of man by an immense gulf from the creation work which preceded it. So would Jesus impress upon them, and upon us, the infinite value of God sending his Son. It was the result of deliberate counsel. What a different answer we might have expected to the question! Only Divine long-suffering could answer such wickedness by such love. (2) The conclusion, "I will send my Son" (13).—In many ways the value of this gift is emphasised, "my beloved" (13), "one Son" (Mark xii. 6). The expectation that they would reverence the Son "when they see Him" is very touching. They had evidently got wrong thoughts of their Lord; the Son would correct these, and secure reverence and affection where there had been hatred and contempt. (3) The husbandmen's treatment of Him (14, 15).—It was their last opportunity (Mark), but they prove themselves hopelessly hardened. The Scribes and priests could not mistake the application of the parable to themselves. This very Son was now before them; his influence was hostile to theirs; and, in order to save their own positions (John xi. 47-53), they had deliberately (14) determined to kill Him (xix. 47). This filled up the measure of their guilt. In rejecting the Son, and putting Him to death, they had committed the worst crime possible to them, and had sinned away their last opportunity.

The judgment (16-18).—In Matt. xxi. 41, it is the people who pronounce the sentence; but Jesus repeats it with such solemn emphasis that they recoil from it with horror (16). The rejection of God, in his messengers, and in his Son, cannot fail to lead to judgment. The quotation from Ps. cxviii. 22 warns them that, in spite of their rejection, Jesus will triumph. To fight against Him is certain failure. And not only failure, but doom (18) of the most terrible description. He is now offered to us as the foundation stone (1 Pet. ii. 6); to make Him now a stumbling stone—to fall over Him—is to be broken in pieces. The present condition of the Jewish nation is a terrible confirmation of this. But He is coming again in judgment, and upon those who have rejected Him He will fall and "grind them to powder" (18). This is the other side of that love which sought so patiently to win men, and was rejected to the last. There is no wrath so fearful to contemplate as "the wrath of the Lamb" (Rev. vi. 16)!

Even this warning word was lost upon the priests and scribes (19). With a full description of their doom before them, they still hasten to meet it. So does sin blind men.

LESSONS.

(1) Where God gives great privileges He expects some return.—What are your privileges? What return does He expect? What return are you making?

(2) The purpose of God's longsuffering is to lead to repentance.—If the first lie—the first oath—is not immediately punished, it is only because God is not willing that any should perish (2 Pet. iii. 9). What use do you make of his longsuffering? If it is not winning you, it is hardening you.

(3) God expects men to reverence his Son.—He has a right to look for this. Many of the servants are faulty, but the Son is without spot and blameless. Yet there are some who see Him and reject Him—are you of the number?

(4) Judgment is certain to those who reject Him.—What is this Stone to you? Do you build upon it, or stumble over it?

The Protestant Italian Village.

DEAR SIR,—In reference to the very interesting account which you published last month of an Italian village becoming Protestant, and the remarkable openings for evangelistic work in its neighbourhood, and the need of additional helpers, I should like to mention that I know of two Christian young ladies, who I think could render essential service, and who would gladly devote themselves to the work, if some kind Christian friends would help towards paying their expenses. I believe that if they could go out with Miss Jane Cox, who will leave England on the 14th of next month, for the purpose of devoting herself again heart and soul to the work, as she has done in the past, it would be a great encouragement and help to her.

I shall be very glad to take charge of any contributions which may be kindly sent to me for the purpose.—I am, faithfully yours,

D. A. DOUDNEY, JUN.

St. Helen's Rectory, Ore, Hastings.

EXMOUTH, SOUTH DEVON.—Very successful Gospel Services have been conducted on the sands at Exmouth by Mr. Levi Powell, an evangelist, working under the Dowager Countess of Castlestuart at Torquay. Her Ladyship, while visiting Exmouth, saw the crowds and no services; she afterwards sent Mr. Powell, whose efforts have been much blessed. Several ministers and other friends assisted, Mr. W. H. Peters and Mrs. Jackson taking great interest in the mission. Tracts were supplied by the London Open Air Mission and the children's special service mission.

FROM THE UPPER CONGO.—Mr. Samuel A. Lapsley, of the Southern Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., writing to a London friend, from Leopoldville, Congo Free State, at the end of July, says:—"Mr. Sheppard and I are now three hundred and fifty miles inland at the beginning of the Upper Congo. A steamer brought us one hundred miles and the remainder we have travelled on foot. I am almost satisfied that we have found the place where God would have us work, at the lowest falls of the Koango River, lat. 5° 7′ S. We have each had several fevers, but are not much the worse for them. I am going up the river to confer with the veteran missionary and explorer, Rev. George Grenfell, of the Baptist Missionary Society. A Mission steamer, kindly offered, takes us to his place at Bolobo, some five days' journey up."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. S. A. Barnett, the well known East-end vicar and arden of Toynbee Hall, is about to start on "a voyage ind the world."

Advancing years having compelled him to resign his arge, Rev. Dr. Doudney, editor of The Gospel Magazine, s taken farewell of the parishioners of St. Luke's, dminster, Bristol. He has been vicar of the parish thirty-one years, and during all this time the staple his teaching has been "Christ and Him crucified."

The Bishop of Durham, on Wednesday last week, ened a Jubilee Memorial Room in connection with ly Trinity Church, Darlington. Dr. Westcott, in e course of his address, said that the Gospel which it s their privilege to hold and proclaim did indeed ver the whole of life; their Christian life should deal th the whole of man, with all men, and with all ture.

A small committee in St. Philip's, Clerkenwell, has ade a practical effort in connection with the "housing the poor" in that parish. Appalled by the crowded d insanitary condition of many dwellings, the comttee has itself rented a house of six rooms, which ve been thoroughly repaired, and are now let out in o-room tenements at a price very little more than uld ordinarily be charged for a single room. The conions of tenancy are the punctual payment of rent, d the maintenance of the yard and passages in a clean te. The experiment is intended to cover its expenses, ough not to yield any profit.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The Friends' Missionary Advocate for September is full information from many mission fields — Japan, exico, Alaska, Ramallah, China, and Indian Reservations.

At a business meeting of the Society of Friends held Uxbridge a few days ago, a memorial was adopted ling upon Parliament to prohibit the growth and nufacture of opium in India, as well as its sale in and port from all British possessions in the East.

The Christian Worker deals with the approaching estern yearly meetings, containing about 60,000 proessive members. The outlook seems very encouraging d hopeful, and the Forward Movement is likely to be veloped, and its momentum increased. Western ends always expect their annual gatherings to be es of blessing and extension, and come long tances with this purpose in view.

Western quarterly meeting held at Leominster, in refordshire, on Wednesday last week, was a time of usual interest and profit. George Satterthwaite, of kworth, Yorks, was very acceptably present, and lliam Jesper Sayce, of Hereford, was liberated for Australian journey, much expression of sympathy l unity occurring. But the special interest of the arterly meeting was the discussion on the retension l service of the young in the Church. Six short and y able papers were prepared by young Friends, look- at the subject from many sides, and all breathing alty to Christ and the Society. During the discussion t followed, several Friends expressed the hope that papers might be published, as the subject affects all meetings, and, indeed, the Church at large.

BAPTIST.

new chapel has been erected at Nantmawr, Buckley, l at the openin; services Dr. Gethin Davies, Aldern R. Cory, J.P., and other friends, took part.

ast week Rev. C. H. Spurgeon conducted a service Holland-road Church, Brighton, which was densely ked, while some hundreds were unable to obtain nission.

ery helpful meetings for prayer and edification were d at Regent's Park Chapel, in connection with the ptist Ministers' and Missionaries' Prayer Union, on nday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, last week. Revs. 3. Meyer, George Wainwright, G. D. Hooper, F. C. rr, J. E. Martin, and others took part in the ses. It was mentioned that a sister union of Baptist isters has been formed in America, with Dr. A. J. rdon as president.

he Castle-street Baptist Church, Calne, Wilts, has n at work for God since 1660. It now supports a porteur and two village stations, besides mission k home and foreign, and the preaching of the sed Gospel. Mr. J. W. Kettle has recently been gnised as minister. The tone of all the services most hopeful and joyous. The long career of this rch was repeatedly referred to, and the desire exssed of greater blessing from God being looked for he future.

evs. R. Glover and T. M. Morris left England on dnesday, last week, for New York, en route to China, heir visit to the stations of the Baptist Missionary iety. Mr. Morris says that while giving a passing nce at Japan, he and Mr. Glover intend to go into heart of Shan-tung and Shan-si, two northern proces of China, the stations at which have not yet been ted by any representatives of the committee. They ect to be out eight or nine months, for although re are only between fifty and sixty stations, they end over a vast stretch of country.

Accepted.—Rev. Lawrence Carter, late of Adelaide, Aus- to Lower Chapel, Chesham.—Rev. John Evans, of Newport, to Eastcomb, Stroud.

Resignations.—Rev. Walter Wynn, Sandy-lane Church, Bradford. Rev. Geo. Taylor, St. Clement's, Norwich.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Dr. Tyler recently baptized a Jewish family—father, mother, and two children—at Mile-end New Town Congregational Church, E.

A new church and schools are being built at Haydock by Miss Evans in memory of her father, the owner of the Haydock Collieries. The cost will be £6000.

Resignations.—Rev. J. Fielden, of Salem Church, Middleton.—Rev. S. T. Adams, the pastorate at Ross.—Rev. J. Dickerson Davies, the pastorate at Aylesbury.—Rev. D. Lloyd Jenkins, his ministry in Chichester.

Calls Accepted.—Rev. Thomas Whitehouse, of Baldock, to Trinity Church, Great Yarmouth.—Mr. J. Loosmore, United College, Bradford, to Eastwood, Nottingham.—Rev. J. C. Nesbitt, lately of Gourock, to Emanuel Church, Leicester.—Rev. J. Cliffe, of Clayton West, to the new chapel at Holmfirth.

METHODIST.

Under the auspices of the Methodist New Connexion, a Convention for the Deepening of the Spiritual Life was held in Union-street and Moseley-street Chapels, Birmingham, on September 8 and 9, under the presidency of Rev. E. F. Denton. Good companies gathered at the meetings, and much blessing was experienced.

The late Mr. John Probert, of Auckland, in his will has left £500 to the Young Men's Christian Association, Auckland, and the rest of his property to the New Zealand Wesleyan Conference, with the direction that £1000 is to be appropriated to the new mission being inaugurated in New Guinea. The Conference is further directed to appropriate £1000 to the Home Mission in the provincial district of Auckland, and the remainder for a Wesleyan Theological and Training Institution in the same district.

Owing to the diminished and diminishing funds at the disposal of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society, an earnest effort is about to be put forth to increase the revenue. A special convention, over which Rev. Dr. Moulton, President of the Conference, will preside, will be held in City-road Chapel on October 2, at which the condition and prospects of the foreign missions will be discussed. There was a large falling off last year in the contributions to foreign missions, and it is generally believed that the protracted controversy about the Indian missionaries was responsible for it.

The second anniversary of the North Branch of the Birmingham Wesleyan Mission has recently been celebrated. Rev. J. G. Mantle, the superintendent, in giving a résumé of the year's work, expressed his great desire for more help both in the work and in the finances. The teeming population, the destitution, the Sabbath-breaking, and the sin of all kinds which surround the chapel are overpowering, and open up grand possibilities for the winter's work, should the needed help be forthcoming. From September 14 to 21, the minister and people, poor as they are, had a week of self-denial to help forward the winter's work.

NOTE FROM SCOTLAND.

Rev. Dr. Wilson, of the Free Church, addressing a newly-ordained minister at Liberton the other day, said there never was a time when it was more necessary that the preaching in our churches should be evangelical. A living and earnest evangelical minister, though otherwise less gifted, would bear away the harvest from men of greater culture and intellectual power who were defective in this fundamental respect. The ministry, however, had to be more than simply evangelical. It must have the accompaniment of power, not merely intellectual but, above all, spiritual power.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Rev. William Arthur, the venerable author of "The Tongue of Fire," is staying in the neighbourhood of Belfast, and preached on Sunday week in Knock Methodist Church with much of his former earnestness and power.

The Belfast Christian Advocate states that there are at present several Mormon missionaries at work in Ireland, and warns its readers to be on their guard against the harmful teaching which these men endeavour to propagate.

Collections were taken up in all the Presbyterian churches last Sunday on behalf of Presbyterian Home Missions, which aid weak congregations in the West of Ireland, take charge of the Connaught Schools and Orphanage, and manage the colportage agency throughout Ireland.

The Presbyterian Orphan Society continues to carry on an excellent work. The annual report, which has just been issued by the hon. secretary, Rev. Dr. Johnston, states that during the year there were nearly 3000 orphans on the roll of the Society, besides forty-three girls received into the Training Home.

During Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's recent visit, the Campbell Memorial Church at Bundoran, co. Donegal, where he preached several times, was crowded at each service, many people coming from twenty miles distant to hear him, and many came on the Saturday night and stayed till Monday for the same purpose. The congregations were composed not of Methodists only, but of all Protestant denominations.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Mr. John Snow, the founder of the bookselling business of John Snow & Co., Ivy-lane, Paternoster-row, well known as publishers of missionary literature.—Rev. Thomas Hargreaves, superintendent minister of the Burton-on-Trent Wesleyan Circuit.—Rev. Hugh McKelvey, minister of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Millwall.—At Sale, Rev. Joseph Midgley, late of Crowland, for fifty-two years in the Wesleyan ministry.—Rev. James Spiers, of the Curragh Camp, formerly Chaplain to the Forces.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

M. DE PRESSENSÉ, OF PARIS, has so far recovered from his recent illness as to journey to Switzerland. He has alighted at the baths of Lavey, on the banks of the Rhone, where he will avail himself of the hot springs, which are the property of the Canton of Vaud.

THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT has at last shown that it cannot allow the flood of indecent prints and pamphlets to flow on unobstructed, to the debasement of public morals, two publishers of such things being fined £120 each and sent to prison for three months. Thus the eloquent appeal made by M. de Pressensé is anticipated.

BELGIUM.—If Belgium presents whole departments such as Namur, in which there is not more than one Protestant church, yet in it organised evangelistic efforts bear much fruit. The Missionary Church of Belgium, besides maintaining its churches, pasteurs, and schools with credit, shows a net gain of five hundred members.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION. — The Swiss correspondent of En Avant says that the gendarmes who attend at the railway station of Lausanne stop all passing Salvationists until they have satisfied themselves they are not represented on a list of those "wanted," which each member of the force carries in his pocket. Two officers are lying in prison there, but the Army holds on its way. The hall at Neuchâtel is closed by the official seals.

THE DOWN GRADE IN SWITZERLAND.—It is quite evident from a report of a recent pastors' conference at Aarau, in Switzerland, that down-grade principles have made considerable progress among the Swiss pastors. One of their number boldly stated as his opinion that while the Scriptures were a precious possession, yet they were not an absolute authority. We are happy to record that however numerous might be the silent sympathisers with such sentiments, their utterance provoked many and strong disavowals.

THE PASSION PLAY.—A series of articles on the Oberammergau Passion Play is occupying much space in the Journal Religieux. The writer dwells upon each detail as if he believed that all his readers must of necessity be carried away with a like enthusiasm. But surely it cannot be so, yet the editor makes no sign. By a singular coincidence the feuilleton immediately beneath it is devoted to notes on the Sunday-school Lesson, Luke xix. 11-28, with the following suggestive conclusion:—"Let us hasten to use our pound, lest we be numbered among the enemies. We are as apprentices upon whom the eye of the Master is fixed. The question with us is not so much our qualifications as our fidelity." How will the single eye view the thing chronicled or the chronicler?

JESUIT TRICKERY.—A striking illustration of the doings of the Jesuits of our day is furnished by a case as reported in the Allgemeine Zeitung. A young man, son of a widow at Wurzburg, entered a Jesuit house in Holland, and soon died there, leaving about £3000; this was to revert to his family, his mother being the executrix. A parish priest named Hartmann was used by the Dutch Jesuits in the attempt to secure the sum. In the mother the "confessor" found a willing tool, who, under his tutelage, was induced to take a false oath, and prevaricate before the court. Letters found in the widow's possession led to the apprehension of the priest, who denied all knowledge of the matter, when he was confronted by his own letters, which he supposed had been burned. He was sentenced to three years' hard labour, and the widow discharged as having been his tool. The money was recovered.

RUSSIAN PERSECUTION OF LUTHERANS.—Pasteur Filling, of Courland, has fallen a victim to the persecuting spirit with which the Russian Orthodox Church has forced its propaganda in the Baltic Provinces. It appears he felt himself compelled to withstand the persistent urging of the members of his flock by the agents of the Church to forsake the Lutheran ranks under promise of material advantages. He chose as the vehicle of his indignant protest a sermon upon 1 Pet. v. 6-11, a subject excellently adapted to the needs of his people. But the official mind would only see in the reference to the "adversary—the devil" a scornful allusion to the Church; consequently the faithful pastor was not long in finding himself in the presence of the judge. But instead of being sentenced to several years' hard labour, which is the penalty assigned to any hindrance to the Church's propagandism, he is subjected to four months in prison, and forbidden to exercise his ministry in the future in the Baltic Provinces. These poor saints need our prayers.

BISHOP WILLIAM TAYLOR, after spending the summer at camp meetings in the United States, returns to Africa late in the autumn.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER visited Birmingham on Sunday and Monday last week, and preached the old Gospel with power and signs following. The meetings were conducted in Lombard-street Baptist Mission Chapel, the scene of his nephew's labours. On Sunday the chapel was crowded in every part, especially in the evening, when several souls found peace through believing. On Monday the word was again blessed; at times tears flowed from nearly every eye. Those who had found Christ twenty or thirty years ago, through Mr. Weaver's instrumentality, greeted him with much affection.

Y.W.C.A. PARK MISSION.

THE "Park Mission" is carried on by special workers told off from the Young Women's Christian Association, which organised the scheme some five years ago. Those of your readers who know the London Parks must be aware that all day long, but especially towards night-fall, girls wander aimlessly about the walks, or sit on the benches idly watching the passers-by. Many of these are homeless and destitute, with sad histories of the usual kind; others only too likely, from innocence or frivolity, to fall a prey to anyone accosting them with mischievous designs. To the welfare of both these classes of wanderers the workers of the Park Mission devote themselves.

Seldom a day passes without one or more of these girls finding their way, directed perhaps by a friendly policeman (all of whom have our cards for this purpose), or invited, or even fetched, by the Park visitors themselves, to the Office of the Mission, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, Oxford Circus, W.

Here, friendly encouragement and practical help await her (if necessary food also), and a shelter is found for her. No girl or woman is ever turned away unadvised or unrelieved. In many cases important results, spiritual as well as temporal, have followed. Many a girl is now earning an honest living, or being sheltered in a Home, who, but for timely assistance afforded by these means, would be an added unit to "the degraded sisterhood."

On Sundays and Thursdays in the summer we hold services in Hyde Park, and several girls and women have been induced thereby to join the Association. We encourage them to come and make friends with us, and let us help them. It is earnestly desired to engage quarters in close proximity to Hyde Park to enable the visitors and their assistants to work on the spot. For this object, help is asked, as well as for the continuance of the present premises where classes, &c., are held. If any readers of THE CHRISTIAN know of any suitable rooms, it would be esteemed a kindness if they would communicate with the Secretary of the London Y.W.C.A. at the Office, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W. We also ask the sympathy of God's people in our work, which in so many cases is that of prevention of evil and helping those who are without friends in this great City. Further details and reports of special cases helped will be gladly supplied on application to the Secretary as above.

M. L. PEARSE,
Hon. Secretary of the Park Mission.

PRAYER AND SELF-DENIAL.

THOUSANDS of Salvationists are pledging themselves to give up some article of food or clothing, or in some other way to deny themselves during the week ending October 4, 1890, so as to be able to help forward the glorious warfare of the Cross without lessening their usual gifts to the funds of their own Corps.

In commendation of this effort, leading men of every section of the Church have spoken warmly. The following are selected:—

Rev. R. W. DALE, M.A., LL.D., D.D., Birmingham, writes:—

May God give grace to the Soldiers of the Army in every part of the world to respond to your appeal for thanksgiving, prayer, and self-denial, so that every act of praise may come from a grateful heart, every prayer be a prayer of fervour and faith, and every abstinence an abstinence for Christ's sake!

Rev. ALEX. HANNAY, M.A., D.D., Secretary of the Congregational Union, writes:—

. . . I am deeply interested in the movement to which your letter refers in all its aspects, but especially in its call upon the "officers, soldiers, and friends" of the Army to bring to the service of Christ the fruits of specific personal self-denial for a definite period. I have no doubt that the response will be definite and generous, and that the Salvation Army will set a good and much needed example to all the churches. May they have grace to profit by it. . . .

Rev. Dr. DONALD FRASER, M.A., Marylebone Presbyterian Church, writes:—

I admire the manner in which your people are taught and trained to give for God's service, even out of their deep poverty; and I wish you well in your endeavours to inculcate the good old lesson of self-denial for the name of the Lord Jesus. It is a lesson much needed among present-day Christians of every degree.

Pastor THEO. MONOD, of Paris, writes:—

The Salvation Army again announces a week of universal thanksgiving, prayer, and self-denial, for the extension of the Work of God.

Thanksgiving, self-denial, and prayer fit in beautifully with one another. For the past, thanksgiving. For the present, self-denial, and its twin brother, self-abasement. [No capital letter to self, Mr. Printer, if you please.]

For the future, prayer. . . . Furthermore we are here furnished with a valuable object lesson, teaching us that we may procure wherewith to glorify God and assist our neighbour, not only by increasing our resources, but likewise by reducing our expenditure.

Rev. J. B. FIGGIS, M.A., Brighton, writes:—

I should like to see the friends of the Army so help its funds in "Self-Denial Week" that its hard-worked and hard-pressed officers might have no diminution of their not-too-many comforts. Their efforts put to shame. . . .

Rev. Dr. MACKENNAL, M.A., of Bowdon, writes:—

There are few aspects of the Salvation Army testimony more touching than its constant call on its soldiers for self-denial. And these special calls should be a witness to all of us, that even when we have laid out our lives for self-sacrificing service, new opportunities come for larger consecration; when we have done all, given all, we can do more, give more. I am heartily glad you have given me opportunity of saying that I sympathise sincerely with the purpose of your leaders in appointing the Week of Self-Denial, and with the courage and fidelity and generosity with which your people respond.

Rev. JOSEPH PARKER, D.D., Minister of the City Temple, writes:—

I hesitate to comply with your request, because I feel it to be so easy to applaud self-denial in others when I am not sufficiently practising it myself. With this reservation, however, how can I do other than wonder at the sacrifices which your people seem to be making day by day? Their action is not only good in itself, it is a powerful stimulus to others. This is not the least of the many influences which radiate from your movement. It tells in all directions. It is at once a rebuke and an encouragement. Going up and down the country I always enquire what the Army is doing, and in every instance, absolutely without exception, I hear that it is energetic, useful, and provocative of good works. I believe your coming Week of Self-Denial will surpass your whole record. If in any way I can co-operate let me know. I want only to work. The shadows fall on the upper hills, and will soon darken the plains; still there is time to fight and win. . . .

The Rev. Canon WILBERFORCE, M.A., writes:—

I think your scheme of the Week of Prayer and Self-Denial most touching and Christ-like. I think you will be able to quote 2 Cor. viii., and say, "I bear witness that beyond their power, they gave of their own accord; and first they gave their own selves to the Lord and to us, by the will of God."

I shall hope in some way to go along with you in act and spirit during that week.

The Rev. Dr. MOULTON, M.A., President Wesleyan Conference, writes:—

There is no doubt that in our Christian efforts the duty and benefits of personal self-denial are by all of us too much overlooked. I am thankful to hear of the measures taken by the Salvation Army to emphasise the obligation of self-denying service, and I heartily wish you God-speed.

Professor STUART, M.P., writes:—

I have received the papers you have sent me referring to the Week of Prayer and Self-Denial of the Salvation Army. The spirit of self-denial and self sacrifice, with a great and common end in view, which is a pervading characteristic of the Salvation Army, seems to me to embody one of the great elements requisite for success, and characteristic of religious and philanthropic movements when they are active and real, as your movement shows itself to be through so many manifestations.

W. S. Caine, Esq., writes:—

You ask me for my opinion about your annual Week of Self-Denial. What opinion but one can any true man give of such a movement? That a number of men and women whose lives are already one long act of self-denial for the sake of others—the foundation principle of Christianity—should strive to find fresh means of self-denial as yet unexplored, that they may help still further the salvation of the world, can only command the admiration and respect of everyone. You shame us all.

IN THE COMING YEAR,

In addition to maintaining our existing operations in 2,968 towns and cities, including Gospel Work among the poorest in 34 Nations, Rescue Work for the Fallen in 32 Homes, Shelters for the Outcast, Training for Men and Women for our Foreign Missions, all in the simplicity of scriptural teaching, practice, and example, and under the care of 9,260 consecrated evangelists or officers, we have, amongst other things, set our hearts upon the following, if the Lord permit:—

(1) To raise up and take out 4,000 new officers.

(2) To increase our War Cry circulation by 100,000—that is, to add to the sales one-fifth of the number at present sold.

(3) To carry on the War in the Argentine Republic, and open the State of Uruguay, South America.

(4) To establish a system of education for the children of our married officers.

(5) To carry on Salvation work in Belgium, where a commencement has already been made.

(6) To increase and more completely organise our efforts on behalf of our sick and wounded officers at home and abroad.

(7) To transform and thereby render more efficient our Junior Soldiers' War.

(8) To assist Commissioner Railton and his noble band of officers in Germany.

(9) To push forward the work for the Salvation of the native races of Africa.

(10) To assist our comrades in Finland, who wish to win their fellow countrymen to the favour and the service of God.

(11) To establish in a new and much more effective form our Village War.

(12) To meet the growing demands of the War in India and Ceylon.

For all this we feel we have a Divine claim upon your utmost help, your fervent prayer, your practical sympathy. These operations cannot be undertaken and carried on without funds, and we turn confidently to you to help us in prayer, in faith, in personal consecration, and in money to sustain and carry these purposes out.

The method of raising money by Self-Denial is a simple one; it blesses those who practise it and those who are benefited by it. No individual will suffer through generous concern for others. We have not heard of a single Friend who has regretted either his last year's gifts, or the inconvenience suffered in rendering us that help which not only kept the War going, but aided in bringing about the vast extensions which we are to-day able to report.

Once more, therefore, we call for your help to carry the tidings of Redeeming Love to the poor and the lost, to the uncleansed, and the unloved, and the uncared-for in "all the world." We claim that help in the great Master's Name.

RECENT TESTIMONIALS.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS WEAKNESS.

21, Waterloo Road, New Brighton, Cheshire, 15th September, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I have much pleasure in testifying to the great benefit I have received from your Galvanic Band in my case of weakness of the nerves and swelling of the neck. I feel so much stronger in myself in every way, and I shall always recommend your treatment to any one I know to be suffering from this complaint.—Yours truly, (Mrs.) E. J. MOON.

Messrs. J.L. Pulvermacher & Co., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUSNESS.

West Dulwich, near London, S.E. September 13, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I am very glad to give you a testimonial to the efficacy of your treatment. When I bought your Galvanic Belt I had been suffering for many months from a form of nervousness which rendered my life miserable. I had been under a very good doctor, but found no relief from following his directions. As a matter of fact, from the time I began to wear your Belt I grew better, and within three months all the worse symptoms of my nervousness had disappeared. I thoroughly believe in your treatment, and I attribute my recovery entirely to its efficacy. I do not wish my name published, but you may give it privately to anyone who may desire it.—Yours truly, D. D. P.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

Cærbrook, Castle-road, Newport, Isle of Wight, September 9, 1890.

Dear Sirs,—I have much pleasure in informing you that the Special Combined Band has been of great benefit to me. My nervous system has been strengthened, and I am feeling better in every respect. Through my recommendation two of my friends have obtained your Bands, and are deriving great advantage from the treatment.—Yours faithfully, H. W. HORAN,

Messrs. J. L. Pulvermacher & Co., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. WEAK HEART and NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

23, Linden-grove, Dewsbury-road, Leeds, September 8, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I am very pleased to be able to state that your Galvanic Belt has done me good beyond description, and it is my firm opinion that your treatment has given to me a kind of second life. My case was a very bad one, but now I am able to do a good day's work, and the action of the heart is very much stronger.—Yours very sincerely, B. WALKER.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, LOSS of MUSCULAR POWER, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of PULVERMACHER'S world-famed GALVANIC BELTS, which convey the electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of premature waste and decay.

ADVICE PERSONALLY, or by LETTER, free of charge.

Guy's Tonic

FOR

Indigestion & Nervousness.

It is prepared from the choicest vegetable ingredients, and is the very thing required when the general health is much affected. The highest medical authorities state "that for all weak and languid feelings caused by indigestion, sluggish liver, and nervousness, a tonic is the only remedy," and "that it is a complete waste of time and money to take anything else, for in this age of debility, complaints are of a weakening character, and therefore all food should be restorative, all medicines should be tonic."

IMPORTANT AND INTERESTING STATEMENTS.

A SAD SUFFERER.

"For indigestion, bile, and nervousness, I consider Guy's Tonic wonderful. The recovery of my sister, who has been a sad sufferer, was very speedy. Her restoration astonished not only her friends, but her medical adviser, who considered that her case was a chronic one. Her cure was watched with peculiar interest by the whole neighbourhood here. I am pleased to say that her return to health is as permanent as it was rapid."

JOHN COLES.

OBSTINATE INDIGESTION.

"For twenty-five years I have suffered agonies from a most violent and obstinate form of indigestion; the nerves were also much depressed. I have been an out-patient at nearly every hospital in London, consequently have been under the most eminent of the medical profession. In almost every case they prescribed tonics, but none suited me until I tried your most agreeable and reliable preparation—Guy's Tonic."

ELIZABETH HUMPHREY.

Guy's Tonic is for sale by all Chemists at 2s. 9d. per bottle. Insist upon having Guy's Tonic. No substitute whatever should be accepted. If you cannot obtain it promptly, remit the amount (2s. 9d.) to Guy's Tonic Co., 4, Ludgate Circus, London, and it will be sent by return, post paid.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

CONSUMPTION — HÆMORRHAGE — RIGHT LUNG DISEASED—CASE in Co. TYRONE.

Nearly three years ago, Mr. JOHN COULTER, a farmer, residing then at MULLANBOY, FINTONIA, Co. TYRONE, applied to me. His case was considered hopeless.

His father and brother had died of Consumption at a little over his age. In his own case, a cough first came on, 9 months before writing to me, and without any apparent cause. This increased, with profuse expectoration of purulent character, and occasionally bleeding from the lungs. Pains in the upper chest, oppressed breathing, profuse night sweats were also prevailing symptoms. The patient dates his letter, by saying, "I had a bad night last night, and when I awoke, I coughed, and the blood came from my mouth as fast as I could cough it up for ten minutes. I write you through seeing your cases of cure in the "Christian Advocate."

From the day in which this particular hæmorrhage occurred to the time his letter reached me, and my reply with medicine was sent, the patient lay prostrate on his bed, and (to use his own words), "life was flickering like a candle about to burn out."

"The Presbyterian Minister of the Church to which I belong—Rev. M. McCay, came to see me, and gave me two or three days to live, and considered it his duty to tell me I could not recover."

"But, in the course of a week, after the medicine arrived, I was able to leave my bed. My appetite returned a little, and my breathing improved."

Within three months from the time he first wrote to me, he says:—"I am now able to go to church every Sunday, walking two miles there, and two miles back, and my sleep is as sweet as when I was a boy of 14, and my spirits are lively. I consider it my duty to spread the fame of your treatment everywhere."

I had a letter from him on March 13th last, in which he says:—"I have been quite strong since I last wrote you, and in good health." JOHN COULTER, care of Miss Stout, 158, Causeway-side, Edinburgh.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR is a Household Requisite of Constant Utility.

That BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR possesses very valuable qualities as a food for all classes, at all periods of life except earliest infancy, has been attested by eminent dietetic authorities, as well as by universal public experience during over thirty years.

Interested attempts to set aside these facts in favour of other foods can only appeal to ignorance and prejudice, and it remains true that no other kind of food can serve the special purposes of Corn Flour.

"The Christian" Bible Readings.

BEING NOTES AND READINGS ON THE FIVE BOOKS OF MOSES.

"This remarkably cheap volume is a reprint of 'Notes and Readings,' which appeared in the pages of 'THE CHRISTIAN.' For Sunday School Teachers who have little time and less money, nothing could be more welcome. A commentary of this sort is within the reach of every teacher."—General Baptist Magazine.

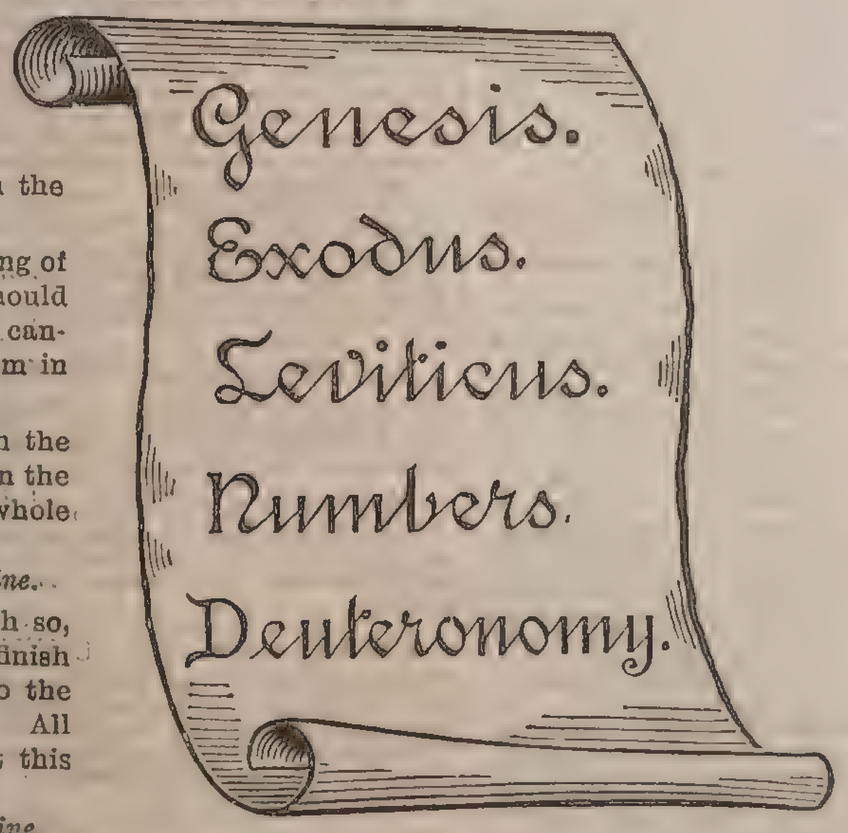
"A series of useful notes to accompany the reading of the Pentateuch. If any of our Bible-class friends should be thinking of studying this part of God's Word, they cannot do better than accept the guidance proffered them in this volume."—The Quiver.

"Industry and skill are evident on every page in the selection of the salient incidents for comment, and in the marshalling of really important information; while the whole is suffused with the evangelical spirit."

Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

"We are quite charmed with this volume: so much so, that when we commenced to read it we were obliged to finish it; it was so fascinating. It is a valuable addition to the literature already published on the Old Testament. All who want to understand the Pentateuch should get this book and study it carefully."

Irish Congregational Magazine.



"The book is intended to be used by Bible readers as a work of reference, and appears to have been compiled with a good deal of thought."—The Bookseller.

"The 'Readings' are short, simple, and lucid helps to Bible study. Admirable comments for family worship and private devotion. Used well, they will give 'light on the daily path.'"

The Cambridgeshire Congregational Magazine.

"This book is the first instalment of a course of 'Notes and Readings,' which it is intended to continue through the whole Bible. This first part covers the five books of Moses. It combines the instructive with the practical, and while unpretentious in form, contains a great amount of information. . . . We can cordially recommend the work to preachers and teachers, and all who desire intelligently and profitably to study the Word of Life.—Primitive Methodist.

"Here we have gold-dust: 'and the gold of that land is good.' We hardly know a man more noteworthy for abounding grace and deep piety than ROBERT C. CHAPMAN. This name has never been sounded abroad, but those who know him value him beyond expression. Some of these brief 'SAYINGS' contain whole sermons. Personally we expect to gather many discourses while studying this little book. A dew from heaven rests upon Mr. CHAPMAN'S expositions."—Sword and Trowel.

"Our readers will recollect the intensely interesting story of 'LITTLE KATHLEEN.' Miss Butler has been able to obtain a considerable amount of information; and a sketch of the singularly beautiful life of this young friend of medical missions is published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott. We bespeak for the little book as wide a circulation as possible. It is one of the sweetest testimonies to the grace of God in the heart of a little child which has appeared in these days; and in its cloth edition at 1s. will be an attractive gift to readers, both old and young."

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS

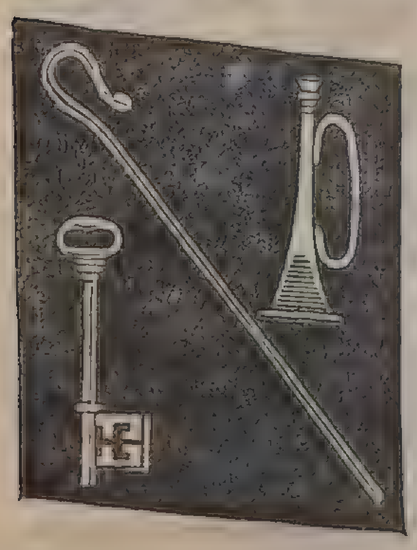
AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM.

BY LUCY J. RIDER AND NELLIE M. CARMAN.

CONTAINS

SIXTH THOUSAND.

Sixty Outline Lessons for the Class,
Forty-three Diagrams for the Black-board,
Twenty-five attractive Children's Hymns.



"A thoroughly practical book, by teachers who have learned by experience the best methods. Teachers will find it most helpful, especially in blackboard word-work. The Addresses are teachings—which very many Children's Addresses are not."—The Teacher at Work.

"We do not remember meeting with any better book than this for help in Children's Meetings. It is first-rate. There are objects to be drawn on the blackboard; but there are also capital lessons to go with them. Blackboards get very, very black; and the children are very bored, when it is all chalk and no sound sense. Many of these Addresses would make sermons of the first water—and what more can we say of Addresses?"
Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in
The Sword and Trowel.

"We have no hesitation in advising all who are engaged in the good work of teaching children and young people in Gospel principles, and the way of salvation, to possess themselves of a copy of this work. It will be found to be a very valuable and suggestive book, and helpful to the teacher of the Infant—as well as to the teacher of the Bible-class."—Baptist Messenger.

MODERN IDEAS OF EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO REVELATION AND SCIENCE. By Sir J. William Dawson, C.M.G., LL.D., F.R.S. Author of "Acadian Geology," "The Chain of Life in Geological Time," "Egypt and Syria: their Physical Features in Relation to Bible History," &c. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. 5s., cloth.

"It embodies the thoughts of an eminent geologist on some of the chief flaws and discrepancies in what he justly styles the 'hypothesis' of evolution. If there is anything calculated to arrest the cocksure young scientist, who is always the young man in a hurry, this book will do it. Perhaps nothing but a counterblast—and Sir Wm. Dawson's book is too well reasoned to deserve the term—can be expected to shake the unfaltering confidence of the middlemen of science, who purvey Darwinism, or what they consider to be Darwinism, to the intelligent multitude."—The Saturday Review.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. William Henry Goold, D.D., Minister of the Martyr's Church, Edinburgh, and secretary of the Bible Society of Scotland.

Many of our London readers will see these lines in time to profit by the reminder that a meeting will be held on Friday, this week, at 7.30 p.m., in the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, to bid farewell to Dr. Pentecost, and Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Stebbins, on their departure for India. Lord Kinnaird will take the chair, and there is sure to be a large attendance of such as in heart and soul will commend the outgoing workers to the grace of God, and pray for a rich blessing on their labours in our great Eastern dependency.

In the October number of Good Words Mr. Gladstone thus begins his article on corroborations of Scripture and Science:—

> We should dispel wholly from our minds those spectral notions of antagonism between religion and science which have been raised up by the action of prejudice on the one side, and perhaps of boasting on the other. Of religion and of science, as of man and wife, let us boldly say, "What God hath joined, let not man put asunder."

Mr. Gladstone argues that the materials of the Creation record, as found in Genesis, could not have been without preterhuman aid, and such aid settles the question of inspiration. Without such superhuman revelation there could, at the very dawn of history, have been no such story told of creation as that which tallies with the latest conclusions of modern science much more than interpretations of them differ. The article expects that astronomy will come to add its corroborations to the earlier portion of Genesis i., and the entire value of this line of reasoning can hardly be over-estimated.

The second part of the article sums up in a forceful manner the results of modern investigation in relation to the credit of the Bible as a truthful history. If what man now sees, as, for example, concerning the Sinaitic journey, and what the Bible says, wonderfully agree, the writer of the papers has done much to confirm his thesis of the Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture.

The following extract from the protest of the editor of The Fortnightly Review, who has lately returned from Oberammergau, may be quoted as an antidote to some of the panegyrics which have been lavished upon the performance of the "Passion Play":—

> As a Christian, as a believer in the God-Man and in his Divine mission among men, there is no place on earth I should so carefully avoid, no place where my deepest feelings and tenderest susceptibilities would be so put upon the rack, as in that bare boarded theatre at Oberammergau. Can a Christian bear to witness the crucifixion? bear to see a Roman soldier, dressed as for a Gothic pantomime, carefully insert the point of his spear into a bag of claret placed underneath the flesh-coloured shirt, while the dying man breathes forth the divinest words in any language, words of God-like pity and forgiveness? And yet English and American clergymen throng to Oberammergau to witness the degradation and abasement of their ideal, to assist at the vulgarisation of the world-drama.

The Passion Play was performed for the last time for 1890 on Sunday. We should be glad to have reason for hoping that, by the diffusion of a true sense of devotion to Christ, there will be no further repetition of proceedings whereby the holy is treated as common, and the spiritual depicted as if it were only natural. Last week's Record tersely said:—

> Even those who have lauded its merits as a spiritual agency begin to question the healthiness of its influence either upon natives or visitors. As to the former, even supposing that the play is not "run" by a company of Jew financiers, the stories of extortion so plentiful this year suggest a morality sadly commonplace and unspiritual. But contact with crowds of tourists could hardly have an elevating influence on all the villagers.

Dr. R. W. Dale's recommendation at the Birmingham Conference of the Y.M.C.A. has in it wisdom and danger. Evening classes for lectures on New Testament criticism, and on questions regarding the borderland between philosophy and religious faith, could only be in harmony with these Associations when conducted in an intensely devout spirit. It is by no means uncommon to find that from colleges, where such classes have been held, young men go forth whose doubts have been raised rather than their faith strengthened. The Bible-classes of the Y.M.C. Associations may usefully combine with other teaching the best scholarship; yet it is most desirable that they should not be officially conducted, but closely related to personal life. Christian faith in the heart and conscience will rule the intellectual life of the future rather than the reverse.

The Times' telegram from Calcutta of September 23 raises hope:—

> It is understood that the Government are now considering the age question in connection with Hindu marriages, and it is not unlikely that they will legislate shortly.

Grave difficulties are in the way, as the correspondent of The Times points out. It is a great matter, however, that our missionary brethren see advance in the yielding of Indian prejudices. And in the ordering of the Lord a right way appears when rulers and ruled become desirous of remedying a gigantic wrong.

Why do men like the editor of The Review of Reviews speak in all seriousness of the Pope as "the prisoner of the Vatican"? A writer of a paper on "The Modern Spirit in Rome" in Macmillan's Magazine for September, said: "No one can prevent His Holiness or any member of His Holiness's palace from leaving it, crossing the Tiber, and going wherever he pleases in the city, or indeed elsewhere." Ought sensible men to use a phrase that is employed by Rome simply as a misleading cry of policy?

Sunday newspapers in the United States are treated of in the recently issued number of The Universal Review. Originated during the civil war, these Sunday editions have enormously expanded, and attained, as the writer thinks, an impregnable position. They are of vast size, draw into them columns of advertisements, and pages are taken up with matters of personal gossip, silly tittle-tattle, and public scandals. The taste for this Sunday secular literature must be a serious anxiety to Christian men in America, for it spreads over smaller towns as well as large cities. But we in England need to be on our guard. A desperate purpose to lead men to forget God, the soul, and eternity, is working everywhere.

In consequence of representations made to the Chief Constable of Cumberland, drawing his attention to the fact that the county police at present work nine hours a day, and seven days a week, and that many of the men have not had a Sunday off for years, a circular has recently been issued to the superintendents throughout the division, asking them to arrange, so that the men may be able to attend Divine service at least once every Sunday. This incident suggests an inquiry as to what is the position of the police in other parts of the country with regard to Sunday labour.

"The force" are a most deserving body of men, the value of whose services, often performed at serious risk to life and limb, the public are somewhat prone to forget, and to whose welfare they are apt to be indifferent. Their claim to a fair allowance of time for physical rest, for the enjoyments of family life, and for spiritual refreshment, are as strong as that of any other body of toilers, and none respond more thankfully to efforts on their behalf. Would not the Sunday-closing of public-houses reduce almost to a minimum the Sunday work of the police?

It is to be hoped that the recent volume of illustrations, in which Mrs. H. M. Stanley has endeavoured to depict the life of the children of the streets, may serve a worthier and more enduring purpose than that of affording amusement for half an hour. To many the "street arab," with his rags and joyous recklessness, may be an object of amused curiosity, or, at the most, of a merely sentimental interest. But when it is remembered that these boys and girls, thrown upon the streets often when no more than three or four years old, and exposed to every form of evil, can hardly escape demoralisation, and that they will, unless rescued in time, drift into the ranks of crime or pauperism—then, surely, the picture assumes a more sober tint.

This is often the seed from which the dangerous classes are developed, and society should face the problem of reformation in earnest. Prevention is better and easier than cure. If Mrs. Stanley's book succeeds in awakening society ever so little to a sense of its responsibility for the "ragamuffins" who are being ruined by neglect, and if it induces people to take more interest in the work of rescuing and raising them, either by personal effort, or by assisting such worthy institutions as those of Dr. Barnardo, Mr. Fegan, and others, the artist's pencil will not have been wielded in vain.

The Anti-Slavery Conference held this week at Paris comes at an opportune moment, and it is hoped it will have the effect of stimulating the European Governments to continued efforts for the suppression of the commerce in human flesh. In this crusade considerations of national and commercial rivalry should be set aside, and there must not only be activity and vigilance, but complete accord and unity of action amongst the various Powers. It is therefore to be regretted that France has not yet seen her way to grant a right of search of vessels on the high seas—a process acknowledged to have been of very great service.

One of the speakers at the Conference advocated the establishment of a line of posts across Africa from West to East in order to stop the traffic to Morocco, said to be one of the busiest markets. And it may be noted that Mgr. Levinhac, just returned from twelve years residence in Uganda, testified to the strictness of the surveillance exercised by England by means of such a system of posts as she has established along the caravan routes. European nations may, however, be reminded that as regards one feeder of the slave trade they are somewhat in the position of accessories, for it is in order to obtain human carriers for the ivory which western luxury demands that many of the slave raids take place; and the horrors of these ivory-bearing expeditions on their way to the sea-coast Mr. Stanley and other travellers have pictured.

The Italian journal, the Gazzetta Officiale, has published the decree directing the General Direction of the Taxes in Italy to take possession of the property of the Roman confraternities, congregations, and other religious bodies, and to put the property into the hands of a Government administration. It is ordered, too, that the churches belonging to the various ecclesiastical bodies are to be closed, and held at the disposition of the Government. This certainly does not say much for the esteem in which Romanism is held in its headquarters, Italy.

Commenting upon the recent suicides in high life circles in Berlin, the Kreuz Zeitung, at the close of an excellent article dealing with the lax morality of the day, asserts that in Germany it is the materialistic conception of life that destroys moral consciousness. Unfortunately, the evil effect of the debasing theories of the present time is not confined to Prussia, and we have not to go far to trace the injurious results of the proclamation broadcast of doctrines which a few years ago were either unknown or were decently kept in the obscurity from which they ought never to have been lifted, and to which they will assuredly return.

MR. WILLIAM FORBES has held a sixteen days' mission at Hawick. God has greatly blessed the effort, conversions being witnessed at nearly every service.

Jonah the Prophet.

Interesting as it may be to examine the devious ways of the "Higher Criticism," it is important in the extreme to apprehend some of the logical consequences involved in the application of the much-vaunted scientific method. For ourselves, we find it impossible to reconcile the acceptance of many of the so-called "results" of criticism with loyalty to the Lord Jesus Christ. Canon Driver, Regius Professor of Hebrew at Oxford, has the distinction of occupying a place in the van of the destructive party. Where others have doubts, he has fully settled opinions; where others suspend their judgment, he speaks out with disturbing effect. While, however, he may make himself understood as a scholar, he finds it difficult to commend his attitude to those who regard Christ as the end of the Law and the Prophets. With these latter it is sufficient to realise Christ's position, and stand by Him therein; the Canon, on the other hand, refuses to allow New Testament statements to have any bearing upon Old Testament problems.

For some time the fight has been round the Pentateuch; now the Book of Jonah is the subject of hostile analysis. Without saying anything really new, Canon Driver, in a recent sermon, referred with approval to a well-worn sceptical theory as to the book. Mentioning Christ's allusion to Jonah having been three days and three nights in the belly of the great fish, he said:—

> Christ accepted it as a story found in Jewish sacred literature, and with which all his hearers might be expected to be familiar, and was pleased to use it in illustration of his resurrection. But it would be straining his words unduly to regard them as indicating that the story had any historical basis.

Now this is not a question of scholarship and erudition, but rather of fact and common sense. The Jews in the time of Christ regarded the Book of Jonah as a chapter of their wonderful history; so, if we are not to "strain" our Lord's words, we must allow that his reference amounts to a complete authentication of the book. Either Christ held with his contemporaries that the book with its marvels had an "historical basis," or He deceived those in whose hearing He solemnly said: "As Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the sea monster, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (Matt. xii. 40, R.V. mar.). We must, if we would be loyal to Christ, hold the fact embodied in the illustration to be no less real than his death and resurrection from the dead.

Let us not overlook the fact, however, that the Book of Jonah records two great miracles. There was not only the preservation of the prophet in the belly of the fish, but also the repentance of the idolatrous Ninevites when the message of Jehovah's impending judgment was proclaimed to them by the Hebrew stranger. Has this latter fact no "historical basis"? He who was emphatically the Truth declares the narrative historical. Rebuking the men of his generation, our Lord said: "The men of Nineveh shall stand up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: for they repented at the preaching of Jonah; and behold a greater than Jonah is here" (Matt. xii. 24). These are weighty words. A proud criticism, however, says in effect: "It's all a tale: probabilities are against the historicity of the story." This is the spirit which refuses to believe in any miracle at any time. He concerning whose coming as Saviour and Judge all the prophets bore witness, has given his word for the truth of the book. What need have we of further testimony? The prophet was "a sign," because his experience was typical of Christ's death and rising again; the people of Nineveh were "a sign" as standing out in sharp contrast with those who were heedless of the preaching of the "Greater than Jonah." So it comes to pass that the book is eloquent alike of resurrection as regards "Christ the firstfruits," and eternal judgment as regards those who reject Him.

If those who talk so flippantly about Old Testament credentials would read the book, rather than the many discussions about it, a more reverent spirit would speedily prevail. A better acquaintance with Jonah would exorcise the demon of doubt. Those who give thought to the subject will find, not only that the prophet was a type of Christ, but that his mission was prophetic of blessings yet to come. His preaching exemplified the Divine mercy to a heathen city, bringing the Ninevites to know "a gracious God, and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness" (Jonah iv. 2). It foreshadowed the Gospel in setting before the world at large the need of repentance and the offer of pardon. In fact, in his mission to Nineveh Jonah was representative of his nation in its vocation. He endeavoured to evade his duty, but God punished him, and brought him to obedience. Israel, in like manner, became unfaithful to its mission, and was scattered among the nations. In due course, however, Israel shall be brought back to God and his service, and discharge a blessed ministry among the nations of the earth.

The "higher criticism" involves disastrous consequences, little imagined by many who have affected a sympathy with it. What sort of a "sacred literature" is that which is made up of "stories" and "tales," having no "historical basis," though ostensibly true narratives of fact? Can such "sacred literature" be "inspired of God," and be "profitable for teaching, for reproof, for instruction which is in righteousness, that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work?" (2 Tim. iii. 16). We know for certain that the Book of Jonah was in the collection of sacred writings which the Apostle Paul thus described. Not by fiction, but by Scriptures of Truth, are we "made wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." Therefore, we must not leave the Book of Jonah out of mind when, glorying in the miraculous element which rightly characterises the entire scheme of human redemption, we confidently exclaim: "Thy Word is true from the beginning—the sum of Thy Word is truth" (Ps. cxix. 160, A.V. and R.V.).

SISTER ROSE GERTRUDE, who some time ago joined the leper settlement at the Hawaiian Islands, has resigned her self-imposed task. She went out as an independent volunteer worker, and had a very cold reception by the Romanist hierarchy. Her resignation became a foregone conclusion, and now that it is a fact, many will regret that her devotion and energy should not be utilized.

A CITY JUDGE AS OPEN-AIR PREACHER.—On Wednesday last week, in the dinner hour, Sir William Charley, the Common Sergeant, addressed about a thousand brewers and working men in the ancient churchyard of St. Botolph, Aldersgate. For three quarters of an hour he discoursed upon the Divine law of substitution, tracing its thread through the Old Testament, and showing it to culminate in the death of Christ, the Lamb of God. The attention paid to Sir William Charley's address was unexceptionable.

For the Young.

LITTLE KATHLEEN;

OR, SUNNY MEMORIES OF A CHILD-WORKER.

By Annie R. Butler,

Author of "Stepping-stones to Bible History" (I. and II.); "Glimpses of Maori Land"; &c., &c.

I.—Sunny Days in Paris.

Tuesday, September 3, 1878, dawned brightly enough upon London; yet its sun set upon a city of mourners, for on that day the Princess Alice went down in the Thames, and with her several hundreds of her passengers.

But to Harley House, Bow, that day, the Angel of Life brought joy in the form of a sweet baby daughter, the first-born of her parents, and from that time forward the very light of their eyes.

When little Kathleen Amy Webber was thirteen months old, her father and mother exchanged mission work in London for similar evangelistic work in Paris; and in Paris, with one short interval at Meaux, the little one's life was spent till she was about six and a half years of age.

One day, when she was about two years old, the late Archbishop of Canterbury went to see Miss de Broen's Mission at Belleville, in Paris. He visited a poor dying man; knelt by his humble bedside to commend his spirit to God; and then came on to the Mission House. Little Kathie was there, now a prattling, golden-haired, smiling darling. The good old Archbishop took her on his knee and held her long and tenderly, as though he could not part from her. She reminded him so much, he said, of his own first-born, dearly-loved Catty, who died at the age of ten, and had been for just twenty-four years in heaven.

Little doubt that, in the silent moments during which he had kept the little one in his arms, his heart went out for her in prayer and blessing—prayer which was to be abundantly answered, and blessing which was to be abundantly confirmed; for, from the very first, the little soul seemed in harmony with all that was loving and lovely in life, and to possess above all the true child-spirit which discerns readily the things that belong to the kingdom of God.

When Kathie was between three and four years of age, she was for the first time taken to see a Christmas Tree. She had never before been out after dark, and was evidently impressed by the strangeness of the appearance of earth and sky. When, however, asked the meaning of the stars, her reply was ready:

"Oh, papa, don't you know? They are holes in heaven for God to see us through."

Little Kathleen was now able to read simple words; and at the age of four she could read quite nicely. But she had already learned something better far than this—to bring all her childish wants to her Heavenly Father in prayer. As the merest infant, after repeating the simple form of prayer which she had been taught, she would often add an entreaty that her dollies, too, might be blessed; and though, as her intelligence grew, such requests ceased without any remark having been made, other unprompted petitions took their place.

When Kathie was about four years of age, Mr. Moody came to Paris, and she was taken one day to the afternoon meeting at the American Church. The weather was hot, and it was necessary to go early to get a seat; and the little one was very tired and exhausted before all was over. At night, after repeating her usual prayer, she added, with much fervour:—

"And, O Lord, we do thank Thee for the nice meeting we had this afternoon; and we do thank Thee for sending so many people; but, O Lord, when I go to-morrow, if I go, please don't let it be quite so long."

And, having thus unburdened her mind of its care, she went to sleep.

Broken bits of baby prayers—
Do we think them odd?
May-be, neither yours nor mine
Go more straight to God.

It may be remarked here that it was the exception, not the rule, to take Kathie to such a meeting at all.

The Bible was Kathie's first book of lessons. Its stories were told her without note or comment, save in answer to her questions; and from these stories, and from the beautiful "Line upon Line" series which she read and re-read, she gained a true view of God's love and mercy; and not only so, but also of his holiness, and of her own need of a Saviour.

One day, when Kathleen was between five and six years of age, she came to her mother with a shade of trouble on her sweet, thoughtful little face. She had been reading the passage which speaks of God visiting the sins of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation.

"But, mother, does God always do that?"

And then, suddenly, a smile of relief and assurance came over her face.

"Well," she said, "I know once when He didn't do it."

"When?" asked her mother.

"Why, you remember, mother, when the parents died in the wilderness, and He let the children go into the promised land."

About this time Kathie read or heard the story of Mary Jones and her Bible.* It interested her deeply: she made Mary Jones's delight in the possession of her treasure her own. It was lovely spring weather; and that afternoon, on the balcony of the room her parents occupied in Paris, the little one's heart seemed fairly overflowing with happiness.

"Oh, mother!" she said, "I do feel so happy; I feel just like Mary Jones when she got her Bible. And the sun is shining upon me; and it is all so beautiful."

She had no more words to express her feelings; but she looked the very ideal of innocence and joy.

Never, perhaps, was there a child who enjoyed life more than did Kathie. Nothing could depress her for long. She seemed to drink in happiness. Wherever she went she carried a ray of sunshine; such a bright, merry little darling she was. She drew all hearts to her; and those who saw her wished for her sake, to know her parents.

(To be continued.)

* Mary Jones was a Welsh girl whose earnest desire for the possession of a Bible of her own was the seed-corn whence sprang the British and Foreign Bible Society. See "From the Beginning," published by The British and Foreign Bible Society.

NORMAL SCHOOL, CALCUTTA.

Dear Sir,—Our school is a training institution to supply assistant missionaries and school teachers for the mission stations in the north of India, and we have the testimony of missionaries of all denominations as to the faithful, earnest work that is being done by those who have gone out from us year by year, among the women and children of their own country.

We feel it would be impossible to exaggerate the importance of this kind of work, especially at the present time; and as, of course, it is necessary that those who are to be teachers should be well taught themselves, we greatly need a teachers' library for the Calcutta Normal School—good books of reference, both theological and secular. Do you think any of our kind friends who read The Christian would help to supply this need.

Miss Cockle, Manor House, Leigh-road, Highbury, N., will kindly receive and forward any gifts of books; and money should be sent to Mrs. Stuart, Roxeth Lodge, Harrow.—Yours very truly,

Emily A. Hunt,
Church of England Zenana Missionary Society

MINNESOTA.—The Christian is as welcome as ever; yea, more so for the last four years since I have been in this country. It is also read by some of my parishioners from the Old Country, my present position being the Great Mining Camp on the Vermilion Range, in which many Cornishmen are employed. The reports of the Mildmay and Keswick Conventions have been wondrously blessed to me away here on the frontier. You will understand my isolation, when I tell you that Duluth, our nearest town off the Range, is a hundred miles away through the densest of forest. We have men from all the nations of Europe, Austrians predominating; they all profess the Roman Catholic faith. The Lord's day is a terrible time of drunkenness and crime with them. Only last Sunday, in a drunken brawl, one man was shot dead, another fatally injured, and whilst sitting round the table, after church, an English family were startled by a revolver shot which broke the window in the room where they sat. We need much prayer and patience here, but the Master is with us and the good cause wins.

LIFE, LIGHT, AND LOVE.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

THE WORD.—John i. 1.

How amazing is the opening of this Gospel! The writer does not stay to introduce himself, to mention his name, or give proofs of his trustworthiness! With singular abruptness, and with no attempt to substantiate his own claims or the claims of this marvellous tractlet, he casts it into the teeming world of human thought and life, as Jochebed launched the cradle on the bosom of the Nile.

Did he feel that the matter of the book would sufficiently vindicate its truthfulness? Did he feel that it would authenticate itself as bread and light and water and spring flowers do? Did he feel that the Spirit who inspired it might be left to care for it? To ask such questions is to suggest the answer. But is there not a marvellous audacity in the casting forth of this Gospel, unannounced, unauthenticated by the recommendations of great names? Yet the result has vindicated the Evangelist. For, as the experience of the Church grows—nay, as our own experience grows—new depths of beauty and truthfulness reveal themselves in this Gospel, and compel the belief of all who are pure enough in heart to recognise the Divine.

And our writer does not name the gross errors of his time, which were beginning to obscure the dawn of our holy faith, as clouds steal up over a too radiant sunrise. Why should he preserve these flies in amber? It is enough for him to announce, positively and dogmatically, the truth; sure that the conscience of man would not fail to recognise her face and the accents of her voice, and eventually turn from all other to cleave to her alone.

Nor can we wonder that the fisherman of Galilee was able thus to write for all the world to hear. Truths of universal importance are perceived less by the intellect, than by the heart. Things which are hidden from the wise and prudent are revealed to babes. An intense religious conviction will stimulate the action of the entire nature, as when a jar of oxygen quickens into brilliant coruscations the burning phosphorus. And how much must we not attribute to the teaching of that blessed Spirit, who found congenial work in glorifying our Lord through the pen of his dearest friend and aptest pupil! We are startled by the phrase with which he designates our Lord:—

The Word. We need not ask whence this term came. It may have been a pebble from the brook of Old Testament Scripture, or a phrase borrowed, as Neander suggests, from the current talk of Ephesus, where this Gospel was written about the year A.D. 97. But, whencesoever it came, it is here re minted by the Spirit of God, and is most significant.

As words utter thought, so does Christ utter God.—A man, newly arrived from the outer world, sits among his family, absorbed and wrapt in thought. Wife and child are hushed into a great stillness as they look upon his face, which tells a tale of inner conflict, as the surface of a mountain tarn reflects the silent processes of nature on its banks. They cannot even guess at what oppresses him until he opens his lips and speaks. The friends who gathered to the consecration of the angel-heralded boy had no idea by what name the aged priest would call him, till the trembling hand indented the wax of the writing-tablet with the Divinely appointed name of Christ's forerunner.

So man had not known God, unless Christ had uttered Him. An Egyptian temple bore this inscription on its portico: "I am He that is, and was, and shall be, and no mortal has ever lifted my veil." A profound Eastern thinker, in the very dawn of the world's life, cried: "Oh that I knew where I might find Him!...Behold, I go forward, but He is not there; and backward, but I cannot perceive Him." An altar in Athens, the brain of the world, was erected to the unknown God. But Christ uttered God. "No man hath seen God at any time, the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him."

There are three ways in which Christ has uttered God, as these introductory verses prove: in Creation; in his Teaching: and in his Incarnation.

God is Life.—Not simply living, in contrast to dead idols, but life-giving. The fountain of life ever rises from the depths of the abysmal Godhead. But that life had been an unknown quantity, had not the Word uttered it in creation, which his hands have wrought; so that the universe is a poem (in the strict meaning of that word) wrought out of the majestic substance of God's underived and eternal Being.

God is Light.—But the light had been undiscovered, because insufferable, unless the Word had shed it forth on created vision, revealing yet tempering its beauty, passing it through the luminous and yet shrouding veil of his words.

God is Love.—Love is the essence of his being, and all love everywhere is the far-travelled beam and ray of his heart (Eph. iii. 15, R.V.). But that love had never been realised, unless the Word had embodied it in a human life, with caresses for little children, tears for broken hearts, tender pity for the lost, agony unto death for mankind.

Lift up your eyes and hearts, and behold with devout rapture your glorious Lord, uttering the depths, the hidden depths of God (1 Cor. ii. 10, 16). And not only that He has done so, but that He will continue to do so through all ages, as we are able to bear it (John xvii. 26). We have only yet, at his feet, commenced to learn the alphabet, the first broken syllables of the Divine Science, but it is probable that the ages of eternity are to witness an eternal progression in this sublime theology. Our knowledge ever increasing our capacity to know; our capacity ever leading to fresh hunger; our hunger ever tasting the blessedness of the fourth Beatitude. Remember the majestic Apocalyptic vision, in which the seer beheld Christ riding forth on his snow-white steed, his eyes as flame, his head girt with many crowns, his vesture dipped in blood; but this is the name by which He is known—a name symbolic of his eternal ministry—his name is called the Word of God (Rev. xix. 13).

Before illustrating in detail our Lord's threefold utterance of the Father, there are one or two thoughts suggested by the sublime opening sentences of this Gospel which we do well to notice. "For," as was truly said by that great preacher whose remains were recently interred within the walls of the Metropolitan Cathedral, which for twenty years have rung with the musical and eloquent notes of a voice now for ever silent, "if there were nothing else to the purpose in the whole of the New Testament, the first fourteen verses of the fourth Gospel would suffice to persuade a believer in Holy Scripture that Jesus Christ is absolutely God."

(1) The Eternity of the Being of the Lord Jesus.—"In the beginning was the Word." We are instantly reminded of the opening words of the Book of Genesis, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." But what a contrast! At that moment, described as the beginning, and which may be pushed indefinitely back to include all the demands of modern geologists, you do not find the heavens and the earth, as yet they are not, but you do find the Word already in existence. The words in the one case expressly exclude the eternity of matter; but in the other they expressly include the eternity of the Word. Moses strikes the chord to descend the stream of Time, John strikes it to look out on the expanse of Eternity lying outside created things, but in which the Word is already existing.

"In the beginning God created" includes the beginning of time. But what will you say of a Being who before time is already in existence, and who is therefore fitly called the Father of the Ages (Isa. ix. 9, R.V.)? Evidently He cannot belong to the time-sphere, and that which is anterior to time must belong to eternity.

It is not so difficult to wend one's way slowly back into the past, or to imagine the successive ages during which the world was being prepared for man's inhabitation. But when we have got to the place where the links of the time-chain stop, and we stand at the first moment of the creation of time and matter, and look out into the void on the other side—it is then that thought staggers and gives way.

There is no light to guide us—sun, moon, and stars are not created. No spirit to lead us, cherubim have not begun to love, or seraphim to burn. No stepping-stone for our feet, for space is unoccupied save by the all-pervasive presence of God. No sufficient unit of measurement, since, when arithmetic has reached its uttermost, the mighty aggregate is but a mote floating in the sunshine of the Being of God. What shall we do then, as we learn the pre-existence of the Word, but worship Him?

That mind must indeed be slow to perceive which does not recognise that what is eternal must be Divine. If it be true that before the mountains were brought forth, or the earth was formed, that the Word was, then, from everlasting to everlasting, He must be God. Wherefore "unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory for ever and ever."

(2) The Personality of the Lord Jesus.—"He was with God." We may not at first perceive the significance of this clause, any more than the casual tourist sees the importance of every embrasure in the fortifications where sheep browse, and soldiers stand at ease. But if ever there should come again days of conflict, like those which swept across the early Church, in which men should assert that Word was but a momentary and impersonal manifestation of God, we should instantly revert to this significant clause, and cry, It cannot be—The Word was with God. The same was in the beginning with God.

The preposition selected by the Evangelist is very significant. It means communion with and movement towards. It denotes the intimate fellowship subsisting between two, and well befits the intercourse of the distinct Persons of the one and ever-blessed God. "The face of the everlasting Word was ever directed towards the face of the everlasting Father." He was in the bosom of the Father. "He makes the Divine glory shine outwardly because He is filled inwardly. He contemplates before He reflects. He receives before He gives."

We are not then surprised to hear the Divine colloquy: "Let us make man"; or to learn that Jesus knew the Father (x. 15). How could He do other, when, "trailing clouds of glory behind Him," He proceeded and came forth from God?

Let us never forget that our Saviour, who lived, and died, and rose, and is our familiar Friend, is a distinct personality, who was before all worlds, and will be unchanged for evermore. This is what we want. It is not enough to give us an abstraction, an ideal, a word. We want One, and, blessed be God, we have One who may be a living, bright reality to us.

More present to faith's vision keen,
Than any earthly object seen;
More dear, more intimately nigh,
Than e'en the dearest earthly tie.

The Deity of our Lord Jesus.—"The Word was God." He is not said to be the God, for that assertion would ascribe to the Son the totality of the Divine Being, and contradict the doctrine of the Holy Trinity. And He is not said to be Divine, which would lessen the emphasis. But He is said, distinctly and emphatically, to be God. "God manifest in the flesh."

He was born of a woman, but He made woman. He ate and hungered, drank and thirsted, but He made corn to grow on the mountains, and poured the rivers from his crystal chalices. He needed sleep, but He slumbers not, and needs not to repair his wasted energy. He wept, but He created the lachrymal duct. He died, but He is the ever-living Jehovah, and made the tree of his cross. He inherited all things by death, but they were his before by inherent right.

We shall learn more of this as we proceed. In the meanwhile, let it stand out clearly and emphatically before us, that the Word was God.

And what is the Word to us?—In his first Epistle, the holy Apostle tells us his intention in declaring that which he had seen and heard and handled of the Word: it was that others might share with him his fellowship with the Father and the Son. And fellowship means partnership, a common participation in a common stock; and, in this case, a blessed share in the very life and light and love of God.

But how may such things become ours? There is a sense in which the orator, the thinker, the friend is able to infuse himself into us by his fervid and quickening words. And is there not also a deep sense in which Jesus is the Word of God, because through Him God is ever pouring Himself into our hearts and lives? As a man puts himself into his words, and by them communicates himself to others. So has God put Himself into Jesus, and those who receive the Son receive the Father, who has sent Him (Matt. x. 40).

As the Father has put Himself into the Word, so has the Word put Himself into his words. "The words that I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life." Live then in meditation on the words of Jesus, so that his being may become infused into yours, and through the Word the eternal Father will come and make his abode within you (xiv. 23).

So shall you be inspired by the very life and indwelling of God, and be lifted increasingly out of the time-sphere into the eternal, into fellowship with all noble souls, with all saints and angels, with all who, through all worlds, live on Him, who is the Eternal and Divine Word, ever-blessed, ever to be adored.

DR. PENTECOST en route FOR INDIA.

As stated in our last issue, Dr. Pentecost with his family has arrived in this country from New York on his way to India where he is proceeding on an evangelistic mission to the resident Europeans and the English-speaking natives; of the latter class it is estimated that there is now not less than 5,000,000. Dr. Pentecost, together with Mr. and Mrs. George C. Stebbins, will sail (D.V.) on the P. & O. s.s. Khedive, direct for Calcutta, and will also, we understand, be accompanied by seven or eight ladies and gentlemen who are going out as volunteers to help in the work. There are, indeed, quite a goodly number, more especially in America, who are holding themselves in readiness to proceed to India, if, after the work is fairly inaugurated, it shall seem wise to send for them.

These all go at their own expense, or at least must themselves make their own provision for expense both travelling and personal. In this respect the mission is purely voluntary, no funds being asked for personal expenses or support; but if funds are voluntarily given for the incidental expenses of the mission, such as the rent of hall, printing, &c., it will be gladly received. These Christian friends, while going out under the auspices of no society, board, or committee, nevertheless have the hearty and even official commendation of some of the leading missionary boards on both sides of the sea, e.g., that of both the Free and Established Churches of Scotland, the American Board, and that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and others.

Dr. Pentecost recently addressed two large meetings in Glasgow. He was greeted by a mass of merchants who completely filled the Merchants' Hall at a mid-day gathering and gave him a most enthusiastic reception. He was introduced by Dr. Marshall Lang, of the Old Barony Parish Church, who, speaking for Glasgow, gave him a hearty welcome back to Scotland, and an earnest God-speed to India. At night he spoke again on his Indian mission, in the Christian Institute, to an audience completely filling the building, who were most cordial in their reception of the Doctor, and in their frequent expressions of sympathy and approval of his proposed mission.

On Sabbath week he spoke three times in Edinburgh; at both morning and afternoon diets in the Free St. George's Church (Dr. Alexander Whyte's) to audiences that not only filled the house but crowded it to the doors, occupying every available seat, including the pulpit stairs and standing-room. This gives some idea of the interest that is being manifested in the mission. At night he spoke again in the Free Assembly Hall to an audience that crowded it in every part long before the hour for service to begin. Certainly, if the Doctor was in any doubt as to the cordial goodwill of the Scotch friends, or the interest that his unique mission is awakening in the North, such doubts were dispelled.

The Doctor spoke in Dublin on Sabbath last. On the evening of Thursday this week a farewell meeting is held in Mildmay Conference Hall, when the London friends have an opportunity of hearing his address on India, her peculiar claims on British Christians, and the remarkable providences that point to a great and imminent outpouring of the Holy Spirit in that land.

Dedicated to Dr. Pentecost, on sailing for India.

Thou hast heard the Master calling,
And we dare not bid thee stay.
He hath said, "Go, preach my Gospel"
To the lost ones far away.
India now her hand is reaching
For thine own across the sea,
She is calling, pleading, crying,
In her darkness unto thee.

May the God of peace go with thee,
And his richest gifts be thine;
May He fill thy soul with wisdom
And the power of grace Divine;
And may those whom thou shalt gather,
On far distant India's shore,
Be as jewels that shall sparkle
In his kingdom ever more.

SWISS EVANGELICAL UNION.

Rev. Dr. J. Murray Mitchell, who has been staying at Lausanne, sends us the following translation of the invitation recently issued by the Swiss Evangelical Union, which consists of twelve societies:—

ANNUAL RELIGIOUS MEETINGS AT LAUSANNE.

Lausanne, September, 1890.

Brothers and Sisters in Jesus Christ,—A year has elapsed since we last invited you to unite with us in invoking on the different branches of our Christian work the blessing of the Lord and the quickening breath of his Spirit. We now ask you again to take part in our subjects of humiliation and thanksgiving, to encourage us by your counsels, and to sustain us by your prayers.

This year Lausanne has the privilege of bringing together the members of the Swiss Evangelical Union; and we hope that they will not only come in large numbers for the day which is specially assigned them in our programme, but that our other meetings also will have the benefit of their presence.

The times are serious: a number of minds, proceeding on the most diverse principles, are earnestly occupied in considering the material and moral condition of the labouring classes. In this matter it is of importance that Christians should not stand aloof in a lazy, selfish indifference, but that they should plant themselves in the breach, and prove a barrier stronger and stronger against the rising flood of infidelity; and therefore they should take part in the movement, with a view to direct it, and purify it from all irreligious elements. People have their eyes upon us, and will not tolerate any inconsistency on our part. To work, then; and from our united efforts may there arise a holy accord to struggle earnestly against evil in every form as a living band animated by the love of souls and the desire to save them! Let us close our ranks, let us not scatter our forces; let us not too readily abandon for new forms of work those which have been already proved, and which are still carried on in faith and love.

We also desire to bring our poor contribution to this centre (foyer) of life and light. Come to encourage us, brothers and sisters; and, in helping us to rekindle our zeal, may you also be able to draw from the days passed among us, with a fresh impulse, fresh and richest blessings. (Signed by twelve Committees.)

SCOTTISH CONFERENCES.

GLASGOW HOLINESS CONVENTION.

This annual assembly of Christians has now become one of the most important and influential of an over-extending series. The outwardly attractive and restful surroundings of Keswick are, of course, conspicuous by their absence, but this may not be altogether disadvantageous. The speakers are mainly the same as at Keswick, and the lines of teaching are identical. There are a few fresh voices, and some of these belong to deeply taught men. Though the truths proclaimed have not been new, they have come, in most cases, with a wonderful freshness and power, showing that the anointing oil of the Spirit's unction has been given for the daily need. There has been plenty of plain speaking, but the truth has been spoken in love; and where that is the case it cannot fail to tell. The addresses, twice a day from Tuesday to Friday, by Pastor Stockmayer have drawn and held many who have drunk in the words of life from the consecrated lips of our Swiss brother. Most of the principal gatherings in the Queen's Rooms at the West, and the City Hall in the East, have been presided over with much propriety by Mr. William Sloan.

It is manifestly an impossibility for us to report the proceedings with any fulness; we can but select what have seemed to our reporter to be the freshest and most practical of the utterances, so far as he had the opportunity of hearing them.

The speakers on the first day of such conventions are accustomed to clear the ground by dealing with hindrances to the full development of the spiritual life. On the Tuesday forenoon at Queen's Rooms, Dr. J. Elder Cumming spoke pointedly of some things that need to be taken out of the way, e.g., inconsistencies in the Christian walk; unwillingness to pay the price of full consecration; and prejudice. Brief and fitting words of counsel came from Rev. J. J. Luce and Rev. W. Haslam at the same meeting.

At the afternoon meeting, Dr. Pentecost was on the platform, and led the devotions of the assembly in most comprehensive and earnest petition. It was stated by the chairman that news had come to hand of the death of Mr. Ahok, in China, whose wife's biography is sketched in our columns this week. She was tenderly borne up before God in prayer in view of the sore bereavement that has befallen her.

"SPOTS AND WRINKLES."

In consonance with the searching character of the day's teaching, a very weighty word came from the venerable Dr. A. A. Bonar on some of the spots and wrinkles that too often mar the life of the believer. This subject of "Sinful Christians," he said, is a very awful one, and we who are in the habit of warning others about it need to give heed to our own admonitions. The thought of our failures ought to make us speak tremblingly on the subject. We are told that every fruit-bearing branch needs to be purged by the keeper of the vineyard that it may bring forth more fruit; so that every branch has excrescences that need to be taken away. We are exhorted also to lay aside every weight in running the Christian race; therefore every runner needs to find out the weight that hinders him. But let us remember that the Lord does not cast off his people because they have faults and blemishes. He bears with our failings and puts them away; but none the less He marks and condemns them.

Here is one "spot" in our Christian life. All spiritual blessing is ours in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. How much of that have we drawn upon? Rather I should say:

HOW LITTLE HAVE WE DRAWN?

"Open your mouth wide and I will fill it." What comes next? "But my people would not hearken to my word." How true that is to this day. Christ said to his disciples: "Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name." The stress might properly be laid here, not so much on the clause, "in my name," as on "ye have asked nothing." As if the Lord would say: "All that you have asked as yet amounts to nothing; it is not worth reckoning." How true this is of us. And we might have asked so much. Think of that word, "I would have you without carefulness." How few of us Christian people are entirely free from carefulness; yet we might be; and what glory it would bring to our Lord if we were. Our Saviour asks us in another place to abide in Him; implying that we might do so—always drawing out of his fulness and enjoying unbroken fellowship with Him. How few believers do you meet who have about them the savour of this unbroken fellowship! In Mecca they know exactly where a Moslem has been by the scent of the peculiar incense of the mosque which he has visited. So, if we had this unbroken communion with our Lord, others would discover it.

Another thing which the Lord often sees and condemns in us believers is

OUR WITHHOLDING.

Are we the cheerful givers that the Lord loves so much? Do we not withhold also in our doing? Then, is there not much land yet to be possessed in our study of the Word of God? A candidate for the mission field was lately examined, and it was discovered that there were whole books of the Bible which he had never read! Do we know every book in the Bible? Have we taken possession of the treasures hid in all its fields—sixty-six of them? If not, it is because we are withholding the time necessary for searching out these hidden treasures. I fear some of us Christian workers are so much taken up with work that we do not allow ourselves time to study; that is a great mistake. If the quantity of our work were sometimes less, the quality of it would be better.

After earnest counsel on restraining prayer, Dr. Bonar closed his searching message by an incident in the life of a minister well known in his young student days. This pastor was very evangelical in his teaching, but had been very mean and miserly in his dealings with his parishioners. He was taken ill, and fell into great darkness of soul for a time. By and by the Lord spoke words of comfort to him, but his last testimony was a shadowed one. One of his relatives said to him: "You will soon hear the 'Well done, good and faithful servant.'" He looked up, shook his head, and said: "I expect not to hear, 'Well done, good and faithful servant,' but I do expect to hear the Master say, 'Son, thy sins are forgiven thee; go in peace.'" Why was not that branch purged that it might have borne more fruit? Oh that each one of us may seek so to live that at the last we may hear, not simply "Go in peace," but "Well done."

THE LAODICEAN REBUKE.

An equally powerful and impressive exhortation came next from Rev. H. C. G. Moule, of Cambridge, founded on the message to the Laodicean Church, "Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked: I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see." The solemn word Laodicea (he said) seems to carry a sort of perpetual sigh and sorrow with it. In its promise of blessing there is no brighter portion of the Bible than this epistle to the Laodicean Church; but before that we read of much that God condemns in the Laodicean life. Let us not forget that these six epistles were primarily addressed to Christian teachers and ministers; for there can be no reasonable doubt that the "angels" of the churches were the pastors set over these churches. What was the matter at Laodicea? Not, so far as we know, any outrageous wickedness of life, or any wild errors of doctrine; and that was a great mercy. Its great failing was spiritual self-satisfaction. "I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing." This is not an out-of-date malady in the Christian life, in the Christian Church, and in what is sometimes strangely called the Christian world. Do not our own hearts know—it may be in bitter and abased retrospect, it may be in some unsuspected discovery of the present—that this spiritual self-satisfaction is not a thing out of date. We say to ourselves, "I have been a Christian for years. Nobody can find fault with the correctness of my creed, the regularity of my life, my contributions to the objects of the Church, the fair share I take in its work, or the example which, on the whole, I set in private, social, and public life. Jesus is adored by me as my Redeemer, and looked to by me as my hope; surely it is well enough with me. I thank God I am not as some other Christian people, at least." Perhaps we think we have found out deeper secrets of the life of Christ than others have found, and we take our stand on a higher pedestal. We say we are very sorry for them, and, perhaps, our sorrow sometimes takes the form of being very much pleased with ourselves. There are of the Laodicean spirit. How often it comes out in our unwillingness to be rebuked, even in the kindest possible way. May the Lord emancipate us from the Laodicean spirit, banishing from us the I, and the me, and the mine, and the our, and from all associations and ideas of Christian work. How tremendously the cause of Christ is discredited before outsiders, and often in the inner circles of Christian life, by jealousies among believers—sometimes in the pettiest of matters, but sometimes also in things that are important and far-reaching. Let us each search ourselves, or rather, open our whole lives that God may search us in this matter.

What does the Lord Christ say to this self-satisfied Church? He does not come with rebuke, but with counsel: "Buy of Me gold"—the riches of grace and glory in Christ Jesus. "Raiment," that precious covering of righteousness, which is not ours, but which is for us in Him. "Eyesalve"—the sight with which the Spirit makes a man to see himself, and to see the Lord as the facts represent us and Him to be. Without going into details, let me call attention to the words, "I counsel thee to buy of Me." And, first, "of Me." We must speak here with watchfulness and reverence, but I sometimes venture to say that the Lord Jesus Christ in his transactions with the soul employs no agents. Ministers, teachers, workers, are simply pointers of the way to Him—not agencies with whom the soul can do business as though it were with Him. In our life, in our work, in our defeats, and in our dangerous moments of success, of advance, and of prosperity, we are to deal with the Lord Jesus Christ personally. We must buy of Him. But we are to "buy"; what can we possibly buy with? We find the answer in an Old Testament passage: "Without money and without price." The Laodiceans thought to bring their fancied riches and self-possessions by way of exchange. That was

SELF PRAISING ITSELF.

Well, let us bring it all—that fancied riches, but quite real rubbish—let us bring it to the heavenly Merchantman, and put it down. From one point of view it is worth a great deal; from another point of view it is worth less than nothing. Bring it all to Christ; keep none of the price back. Lay it at the feet of Jesus Christ that it may be consumed, and into the void of your miserable Laodiceanism He will put and pay over his blessed gold, and raiment, and eyesalve.

One word as to what follows. You know how the result of this self-complacency was that there was no real communion with the Lord. There they were, with their fancied wealth, sitting destitute, miserable, blind, inside the locked door, and shut away from the peace and joy, the life and power of Jesus Christ. He was standing outside, knocking, while they were inside, saying, "We have need of nothing." If they would but let Him in, they would feast no longer on the defiled and polluted husks of spiritual self-esteem, but on Him their Saviour, their life, their glorious righteousness. And the end of it was that they were to sit down with Him on his throne, for that was where they were meant to sit.

On the second day, the possibilities of the Christian life, through the indwelling power of the Holy Ghost, were the theme of much earnest testimony.

REV. G. HILL DICK,

of Glasgow, said we ought to think of the maximum rather than of the minimum of the life of God in the soul. In being, suffering, doing, and dying, what has God not made possible for us? We have received an entire Christ, and God has engrafted into Christ an entire Christian. There must be, on our part, a glad submission to Christ's absolute mastership—simple and unflinching obedience to his well-understood commands. Settled patience in great distress is possible. A great sufferer, possessed by the words: "Ye are not your own," was kept not only in acquiescence, but in approval of the Lord's will, through nearly two years of sleeplessness and terrible agony from a tumour on the brain. "How can such a live be lived in the midst of worry and business?" asked one. We cannot do it, even by the force of our renewed will; but God can, and God will. It is possible, again, to be habitually trusting Christ to keep us clean or pure. The flesh—the sinful nature—remains, though we are transplanted into the Christ. How may a clean heart be got and kept? By exercising my faith on the liberating, gladdening, sanctifying vision of the crucified Christ, with whose grand purpose of making an end of sin I am in fullest sympathy. We stay and live at Calvary. By a close biding with the Lord Jesus Christ in the secret of his presence, we may become pure as He is pure. It is so wearisome to be standing afar off and saying, "I must make up my mind to do it." No, it is by standing always in front of Him and being transformed by Him. Only let Christ engross us, and fill us, and we shall live in a most real odour of holiness—very far removed from perfection (through the presence of the sinful nature), but very far removed also from indifference to our dear and sovereign Master. If we carry Christ with us, He will carry us with Him, and sweeten and empower us in our daily life.

REV. JAMES SOMERVILLE

spoke of Christ as the great Liberator (Isa. lxi. 1). If He set us free, we shall be free indeed (John viii. 36). From what does Christ set us free? These four great slave-holders and taskmasters—the law, Satan, sin, death. "Ye shall be free indeed," says the Apostle. Do we know the meaning of that strong word "indeed"? If not, we shall be and shall remain feeble and useless. There are many believers who are cast down and discouraged and ready to give up in despair. Christ came to deliver us from this present evil world; to redeem us from all iniquity—not from its curse, but from the thing itself. That is a part of the meaning of the "indeed." How to get and enjoy this liberty? It is "the Son" who does it. He delivers from the condemnation of sin by his cross; from the power of sin by his throne. He takes control of the heart and counteracts the evil power within and without. The thing for us to do is to let Him in, and to let Him reign. Believing in Christ as the Saviour brings life (1 John v. 1); believing in Him as the Son of God brings power to overcome and to serve (5). If we have been born of God we cannot be unborn; we live. To maintain that life there must be a continual laying hold on and grasping of Christ by faith.

PRIESTLY CONSECRATION.

An address on this subject on Wednesday forenoon, by a young minister, Rev. Charles Inwood, was one of the gems of the Conference for its expository power and its bearing on the daily life of the believer. Premising that he did not believe in any modern order of priesthood that intervened between the sinner or the believer and the Saviour, Mr. Inwood went on to expound and apply the consecration of Aaron (Exod. xxix.) as an Old Testament picture of the fully-consecrated life of the New Testament. Let us not overlook the minuteness of detail in the directions for Aaron's consecration. God believes in thoroughness and completeness of consecration, and not in a slipshod consecration that only touches a part of a man's life. Little things disclose character, and it is mostly in the little things of life that those who profess to be consecrated bring discredit upon consecration teaching and life, and make people to laugh at Christians, and say they do not believe in them.

NOTHING IS A TRIFLE

in God's sight which has the remotest bearing upon the personal holiness and power of his people.

In expounding ver. 4, where direction is given to wash Aaron and his sons with water, it was remarked by the speaker that, without spiritualising the words, we may say God wants a clean body for a consecrated soul. Holiness gives no licence to neglect or outrage any of the proprieties and decencies of life. Some Christian ladies seem to think that when they are consecrated they may give up habits of tidiness and become "dowdy"—the very thing to make young Christians say: "If that is consecration, I do not want it." At a meeting where there had been a great many hallelujahs and amens, there was but a solitary, weary amen, in response to the sentiment that God wants a clean body for a consecrated soul, and that sometimes means a breath rendered offensive by smoking or drinking. (Hear, hear.) Such things make us believers to stink in the noses of many persons. A godly soul once said: "So and so came round to talk to me about consecration; his breath was so full of the odour of smoke that I wished him a thousand miles away."

In ver. 5 we have the unrobing and the robing of the priests. Everything that is a badge of the unconsecrated life must be put off to make way for that which expresses and fits into, and is the uniform or badge of the consecrated life. Our anointing cannot take place

IN OUR OLD CLOTHES.

Much so-called consecration is worthless and leads to failure and disappointment, because we are wrong here. These old clothes may sometimes drop off like old leaves, or vanish like sneaking shadows; but usually they are parted with in awful agony. Worldly, idolatrous preferences or alliances are often thrown away only after the keenest struggle.

Vv. 10-14 speak of the marvellous provision of the sin offering. This relates to reconciliation with God on the basis of atonement. True holiness teaching never ignores or undervalues the atoning sacrifice of Christ. It comes first, and must be kept first in all our life of consecration. It is always needed, and, thank God, it is always available. Then the burnt offering (ver. 15-18) denotes conscious, willing devotement of one's whole self to God—the placing of the inner life upon the altar, never to be taken back.

In ver. 19-21 we have another offering, the ram of consecration. Why the blood again? Because, in addition to shelter against the Divine wrath, in view of a broken law, we need cleansing and purity. Notice that the use of the blood here is the very same as that commanded for the cleansing of the leper. So we have to regard sin as a leprosy—not a superficial defilement, but something that has gone DOWN INTO THE VERY NATURE.

The blood is first to be put on the right ear—the faculty through which God's command is made known to us. Our efficiency in service will depend largely on the readiness, the accuracy, and the quickness with which we hear God's message. We need to have the ear purged, that it may recognise God's voice; also that it may discriminate that voice amid the Babel voices of this talking world; ay, that we may recognise God's voice even in the voices that are heard at our holiness conventions. And not only to hear, but to understand, and to interpret the message when it comes. Anybody can hear God's thunders; but it needs a purged ear to catch the whispers with which some of his richest messages are spoken, and to get all the charm, and sweetness, and music of that voice.

The purged hand represents the faculties by which we touch sacred things. In the Old Testament there are two words that relate to consecration; one means giving the empty hand to God, and the other means the hand filled by God for others. If we have not a purged and clean hand, the Lord will not fill it with the overflowing blessing He desires us to have. There are many who suffer in this matter. Nothing but the blood of Jesus Christ will open the hand and keep it open, and make it clean, so that it may be filled with blessing to others.

Then comes the purging of the foot. The ear is the Godward faculty; the hand the manward faculty; the foot may be termed the earthward faculty—that part of us which comes into direct contact every hour with what is secular and earthly and material; and there is so much to stain the foot in this dirty world through which we have to walk. We cannot but touch the world. We do not believe in an ascetic hermit life; holiness does not mean shutting ourselves up in nunneries and monasteries. We believe in that holiness which keeps in touch with all the sins and sorrows of the world round about us. But we are in constant danger of being defiled, and nothing but constant washing in the blood of Jesus Christ can keep our feet clean in this dirty world.

Over and above all there was the sprinkling of the blood on the new robe—our consecrated life and service; and also on the whole man—full and unreserved consecration. Further, there was the oil with the blood—the anointing of the Holy Spirit, completing and crowning the preparation for service. And all this was at the door of the tabernacle—on the very threshold of service; and before the priest might even touch the very smallest part of the priestly life. How many of us are working, alas, without this preparation. No wonder there is so much work that has so little result. "Seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent to be found of Him in peace, without spot and blameless."

TRIALS OF THE LIFE OF FAITH.

This was the general subject of Conference on Thursday. At the forenoon meeting in Queen's Rooms, Rev. W. Haslam discoursed, in his characteristic free and easy fashion, on the important function of trial and temptation in the Christian life, as illustrated by the action of the disciples in the lake storm, with Jesus in the boat. Some of his spiritualising might have been open to the charge of being "far fetched," but his exhortations were intensely practical. The moral of the whole was that trial and temptation are sent to the Christian, not to discourage, but to drive Him all the more to Christ, whose power is equal to any emergency. Another point that the speaker emphasised (as he is continually doing) was that everything the believer has or suffers is not merely for himself, but to enable him the better to witness for his Master. He expressed much thankfulness that through these Conventions God is stirring up multitudes of Christians to a life of consecrated service on behalf of others. We may give a few of the striking sentences that occurred in the address, each containing some valuable seed-thought of truth:—

Temptations are so many opportunities for the Lord to work.

Let us put ourselves into God's hand to be guided and governed one day at a time.

So many of us are babes who care for nothing but milk and perambulators.

Moses began his career by killing an Egyptian; God had to send him to school in the desert for forty years to show him a different method.

If we have a large sense of our own sufficiency, God will not reject us; but He will have a great deal to do with us before He can do any work by us.

The act of consecration is a very good thing; but it is not Christ.

Many people lose their sanctification because they make no use of it.

Never put the stone of unbelief on the grave of any unsaved soul, however bad he may be.

Let us be ashamed of continually making God to serve us, while we do no service for Him.

An exceedingly helpful exposition followed from Rev. F. B. Meyer, on the objective truths relating to Christ as the believer's life, and to our life in Him. He gave a golden chain of texts, chiefly from the writings of John, that, taken together, embody one of the most profound and profitable Bible-readings we have ever listened to. Detailed notes must, in the meantime, be deferred. At the close, many friends crowded around the speaker (who had only arrived from the Wakefield Conference the evening before), and thanked him for the help received from time to time through his written or spoken words.

A very crowded meeting, on Thursday afternoon, was presided over by Mr. Robert Wilson, of Carlisle, in the absence of Mr. Sloan. His burly form, and the grave, measured tones of his voice, as he read a portion of Scripture, awoke many pleasant memories of the Keswick tent.

REV. E. H. HOPKINS

read 2 Cor. xii. 1-10, which gives a glimpse into an episode in the spiritual history of the Apostle—his wondrous vision of glory and the thorn in the flesh that kept him from undue exaltation. The story, said the speaker, is primarily a record of a remarkable experience—exaltation, humbling, suspense, prayer, and restful relief. This experience was, we gather, nine years after conversion, so that a definite crisis in spiritual history, after that history begins, is not impossible or wonderful. Even Paul was open to the temptation to pride, and, when the cure was administered, he was kept from depression by the promise of sufficient grace. So a rejoicing life does not depend on circumstances. Here again we see a law of the spiritual life. This "thorn" was a weakness, but not a sin. We are in danger of mistaking sins for thorns in the flesh. If it is something in which we can glory, we can easily tell. Learn, too, that Divine strength finds its fullest development in human weakness. "When I am weak, then am I strong"—the spiritual paradox. There is all the difference between holding a doctrine and having the experience of it. Notice the steps of progress. First the cry of distress that led to the prayer of faith. What reality and simplicity marked the prayer of the Apostle! Then came the Divine answer of sufficiency. We know not how it came; it matters not. God still speaks to us through his Word and by his Spirit. The answer was not a promise merely, but the expression of a present fact. Seeking faith becomes resting faith, based on a fact that is true even before we begin to believe it. It is always now, and Jesus is always the same. The Apostle ceased striving and rested calmly, joyfully in the revelation of the will of God. We may submit and even acquiesce in that will; do we, like Paul, rejoice in it, though it be also a revelation of our infirmity? Let us look away from sensations and feelings and experiences and attainments to the eternal facts of God's truth. He says to us to-day: Whatever our surroundings and besetments, his grace is sufficient, and his power is perfected in our weakness. Are we thus willing to be nothing that God's power may rest upon us and use us?

REV. J. B. FIGGIS

recurred to the subject of the special temptation and trials of the life of faith. "Watch and pray" is the counsel of our Lord to his disciples. Temptation, he said, is a dangerous thing; it is always with us. Some temptations are peculiarly ours at certain periods of our spiritual history; we may have more of them rather than fewer. A pastor of long experience said he had seldom known a Christian who had quite got rid of his old besetting sin. Satan may have been defeated, but he will continue to send his arrows to the very spot where they fell before with such effect. Only the other day he heard of a minister of Jesus Christ in Scotland who has gone down into a dishonoured grave through a sin often repented of. New temptations will come to self-consciousness, perhaps. Critics of this movement say one great danger is too much self-introspection; let us be on the watch. We are apt to think too well as well as too much of ourselves. Another temptation is to self-confidence. Peter asseverated that he at any rate would never deny his Lord; yet he soon denied Him three times over. Changes in circumstance may bring new trials; let us ever lay hold of the grace that is provided.

Have we the "willing spirit" that our Lord saw in the disciples in the garden. The potter can only mould the pliable clay, not the hardened stone. Are our wills pliable in the Father's hand, though his will for us may bring poverty and breavement? We will still have that troublesome thing, "weak flesh." Would to God it were only the flesh in the sense of the body that is troublesome to us. But we have a worse thing—the law of sin in our members—and it will cause us many a fall if we have not a care. As one has said, though we have gained the victory, our heart is capable of it still. There may be fighting all along the line, but there will also be victory all along the line, because Christ is with us and in us.

TWO HELPFUL COUNSELS.

"Watch and pray." What does watch mean in the New Testament? "Whether we wake or sleep"—the same word precisely as that for "wake." So it is "stay awake." "Be vigilant"—same word. We must look out for the approach of the enemy, and that at some spot supposed to be strong. "Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments." Let us be wide awake, challenging anything that comes to ear-gate, or eye-gate, or lip-gate that does not give the password of the Master. The counsel "to pray" is an old and familiar one that we have heard so often. "Get a time of stillness with your God every day," said Tauler. We may have Christ with us in the market and in the home. The spirit of prayer, said Tauler, was the best of all "convent walls." Though God may have come into our souls in a special manner, we cannot be indifferent to such common things as prayer in secret, in the family, and in the meeting. Be instant in prayer. Pray and believe; pray and expect; pray and receive. Ask, and ask on, and ask ever, and be filled with the Spirit. Then temptation, though it come, will find you preoccupied, and it will return again.

REV. J. GELSON GREGSON gave two closely argued and impressive addresses in the Queen's Rooms on Friday, the last day of the Convention. In the forenoon he invited the large and very attentive audience to seek for such a definite vision of God Himself in all the perfections of his Divine glory, as would awaken in them the resolue that henceforth "pleasing God" would be the absolute motto of life. A great host were moved by his words to indicate that this resolve had taken possession of them. At the afternoon and final meeting, Mr. Gregson spoke again, taking up various points of practical moment in connection with the consecrated life. We cannot apprehend or grasp the Divine through the mental faculties; let us be content to have God reveal Himself to us by the Spirit through the Word. By this channel we can commune with Him, and He will communicate to us of his life and power, In the spiritual region we are not to speculate, but to obey. If we neglect the study of the Word, the Spirit will have nothing to work upon, and nothing to bring to our remembrance concerning Christ Jesus our Lord. In the matter of service, the only way to avoid disappointment and failure is to submit ourselves to the unceasing teaching and guidance of the Holy Ghost. The only hindrance to our possessing fulness of power is our unbelief. If we are truly obedient, all difficult questions will be settled as they arise.

The very last words of admonition, and awfully searching they were, came from

REV. F. B. MEYER.

He feared, he said, to give any prepared address, lest God's voice should be stifled. One might as much miss God in a convention as in a ball-room. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews speaks of those who seem to "come short," because they will not let God's sharp sword do its work. Before faith there must be obedience. Is there anything in our life that God lays his hand upon? Do not let us invent any such thing, but wait for God to detect and reveal it. No need to go back to the far past; the growing light of the present must have revealed much that is wrong. What about a surrendered will? Our Father's will is surely the very best for us, whatever it may seem. In the matter of our affections, do we let our love go out in ways that God does not approve? What are our motives in Christian work? Are we in our personal habits doing things that we would condemn in others? Have any gone back because they thought the impulses of a convention were going to carry them on all the time? If we neglect the daily sustenance of the soul, no convention can do more than galvanise us into spasmodic effort. Perhaps we thought the subsidence of emotion after the convention had gone meant a change of attitude towards God in our soul. Remember that the will and not the feeling is the index of our true Christian character.

Amid an almost supernal hush Mr. Meyer brought his appeal to a focus. He gave a most affectionate and beseeching invitation to any unsaved ones at once to look to Jesus and live. A few indicated their desire to do so. Then he passed on to ask those who would make a full surrender of being and life to show it by a lifting of the hand, and there were not a few responses. Others who had backslidden were invited to return; and last of all those who had need of searching for some hidden evil to be revealed or some idol to be cast out, were entreated to have dealings with God, in the secret of their hearts, and in his presence. Then a parting stanza of praise and personal recognition of blessing received, and the awed company passed out, and the Conference of 1890, so far as its testimony in the West End was concerned, had closed its message.

[Some notes of the evening meetings in the City Hall, the missionary meeting, and also of Pastor Stockmayer's addresses, must be postponed to our next issue.]

THE BRITISH FLEET AT NAPLES.—During the stay of Her Majesty's ships at Naples, an excursion to Pompeii was arranged by Mr. Stephen Burrows, superintendent of the Sailors' Rest. The remaining few days the fleet remained, services were held at the Rest, and souls saved. The insufficiency of the accommodation of the Rest is felt on all such occasions as this.

BLACK AUSTRALIANS AND THEIR NEEDS.

Again I crave a little space to plead the cause of the tens of thousands of poor aborigines of this great southern land, who have never yet heard of the great and loving God, or of Jesus Christ, whom He has sent into this world to bless and save black as well as white. Anywhere and everywhere of late years lively interest has been kindled in the welfare of heathen races; but, alas! the dark-skinned tribes of this island continent have been largely passed by, especially by colonists themselves. Had these poor benighted creatures only lived and moved and had their being at some distance from our shores, then far more sympathy would have been manifested for them by the colonists. But, coming into contact with them as they do in all their social and moral repulsiveness, they regard them more as vermin to be destroyed, than as human beings to be enlightened and saved.

In Tasmania the native tribes are extinct. In Victoria they number only about 800. Here in New South Wales year by year they are rapidly decreasing, so that at present we have 7000 left, while a few years ago they numbered tens of thousands. In the other colonies, especially in Queensland and Western Australia, their numbers are still comparatively large, though, sad to say, wherever the white settler or gold-digger sets his foot, the native tribes begin to vanish. Approximately, there are from 200,000 to 300,000 aborigines in Australia, and of that large number there are not more than 2400 receiving instruction of any kind. In this vast field the labourers number about thirty, inclusive of assistants. The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are very few.

The question naturally arises, "Can nothing be done to increase the number of workers?" Yes, in God's name, and with his help, something can be done. What is needed is, first, a thorough Christian recognition of the claims of Australia's perishing thousands; and, secondly, a real consecration of heart and life for this very service on the part of Christian men and women whom God Himself shall convince of the necessity for such service. As regards means, God would most assuredly supply them in his own time and way. When, ten years ago, with my wife and children, I settled amid the pine trees of the Murrumbidgee River, without house or appliances, and entirely destitute of human aid in the shape of Board or committee, our funds amounted to £6 15s. only, and yet, trusting in the faithfulness of God, we went forward in duty and love's path, and in less than three years a large native settlement was formed which is holding on its way to this day. The Government, which at first regarded the work with coldness, and even suspicion, in course of time came to a different conclusion, and now, year after year, subsidises the enterprise.

We need a comprehensive scheme. We need men and women prepared to go forth and do or suffer, if need be, to save Australia's dusky children. My brother missionary, Mr. Daniel Matthews, has just returned from England, where for a year he has been pleading the cause of our poor blacks; and we are now waiting upon God to teach us and guide us in the formulation of such a scheme as shall, under his blessing, result in conveying the benefits of the glorious Gospel to tens of thousands of those who, in this sunny land, are still sitting in the shadow of spiritual death. Our hope is to found at first a number of mission schools in places where the blacks most do congregate, settle teachers as we proceed, and by and by, as means allow, develop the simple school method into full mission station operation. I have thus hastily sketched the condition and needs of "God's image in ebony" in this land, as well as hinted at what is really in our hearts to do. If any of your many readers are drawn towards this corner of the Lord's great vineyard, either in the way of prayer, practical sympathy, or self-consecration, I shall be most happy to hear from them. Communications addressed to the care of the Bishop of Goulburn, Bishopthorpe, Goulburn, N.S.W., would reach me direct, while in London Mr. George Williams, of St. Paul's-churchyard, would kindly, as in days gone by, receive and acknowledge letters for me.

(Rev.) J. B. Gribble.

St. Paul's, Temora, N.S.W.

Mr. Daniel Matthews writes to us from Maloga, Echuca, Victoria:—

"Our dear blacks were glad to see me back. They are clamouring for me to be their leader again. I mean those who are under the management of the Aborigines Protection Association of Sydney. A good many have relapsed into their old mode of life and evil practices, and they feel the loss of our teaching and discipline. From Queensland good news reaches us, and we are hoping for great blessing upon the mass of natives who are wild wanderers in that great colony. I should like to ask for the prayers of the Lord's people on our behalf, and on behalf of those who, with us, are giving their lives for this great work."

RUSSIAN PRISONS.

Few travellers have visited Siberia, nor have most persons an adequate idea of its extent. It may surprise many to be told that you could put the whole of the United States, and all Europe, into Siberia, and then have an immense area untouched; but it is true nevertheless. Russia owns two-thirds of Europe, and half of Asia, and the prisons of this vast Empire are overcrowded with thousands of prisoners, and exiles almost beyond number (who have never been tried, but who have been exiled by "administrative process"). For the most part, these prisoners and exiles are without the knowledge of the true God, and have not the written Word in their possession. Dr. Baedeker is now in Siberia with a little over 5000 Testaments, but "what are these among so many?" I have myself been through one prison where there were considerably over 3000 men immured. Will the readers of The Christian pray that the Lord of the harvest will thrust out labourers into this almost untrodden field? Otherwise I see not how the Scripture command can be fulfilled, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

Whilst at Moscow recently, a Christian at whose house I was staying said, "I missed one of my friends whom I generally saw every morning, and it was not till after two years had elapsed that he again entered my office, having in appearance aged quite twenty years. He told me the following story:—"I was arrested one morning, taken to the fortress on the Neva, put into a cell which measured 3 asheens by 2—that is 7 feet by 4 feet 8—very damp, and having a small window above my head. For the first three months I was able to climb up to the window to get a little air, but afterwards I became too weak to do so. Here I was kept for two years without leaving my dungeon, and now I am permitted to come home for three days previous to being exiled to Siberia. The horrors of those two years are still with me, and whilst in my cell I could hear every hour the bells of the fortress ringing out 'God save the Emperor.' I know no reason why I was thus imprisoned, and know not why I am thus exiled."

The brother of this exile, I also learned, was about to be married, but on the eve of his wedding was arrested, without trial, thrown into the fortress, kept there for some time, and then also exiled to Siberia. My friend Mr. G—— asked if he knew any reason why he had been arrested. He said, "No, unless it was that about twenty years ago I was in a University riot."

Irkutsk, one of the principal prisons of Siberia, was built to hold 450, but it is a well-known fact it has often contained 1700 prisoners. One shirt is given to each man every six months, and a great-coat every year. Exiles on the march have to mix with the criminals and sleep in the same prisons.

One such exile with his wife—a cultured lady—and baby boy twelve months old, were marching to Irkutsk in a terribly cold storm, and reached the prison only to find the child frozen to death in the mother's arms. The wife, at the sight of the dead babe, went raving mad, "and yet," said the husband, "though my wife was mad, and my child dead, they left me in the courtyard of Irkutsk prison with the thermometer at thirty degrees below zero, waiting for half an hour to be officially received." These are but drops in the ocean of human misery endured by exiles and prisoners in the vast Russian Empire. Add to such sorrows, the fact that they seldom, if ever, hear of the love of Jesus, and, unless God's Word is sent them, they will die without ever reading of Him who came "to give deliverance to the captive." Let the Church of God be found at least praying, "Let the sighing of the prisoners come before Thee," and those who are able, say, "I have given them thy Word."

THE VICTORIA READING CIRCLE, started four years ago by the Council of the Sunday School Union on the lines of the American Chautauquan Literary Circle, with the object of uniting intelligent persons in a movement for self-culture, has proved a manifest success. More than 4000 persons have availed themselves of the advantages of the course of study. At the completion of the course certificates, diplomas, and prizes were awarded, and altogether a very successful scheme for reading ancient and modern literature was carried out. The Council are about to start a three years' course of reading. A nominal annual fee is charged, and well-known gentlemen approve the plan. The hon. sec. is Mr. J. L. Nye, 56, Old Bailey, E.C.

CONVENTION AT HANDSWORTH.—A Convention for the deepening of spiritual life was held in the Handsworth Congregational Church, September 22, 23 and 24. The speakers were Revs. J. McCaid, J. G. Mantle, W. Searle, and G. C. Postans, the pastor of the church. Several vigorous addresses were delivered, a practical and honest Christian life being insisted upon. Mr. Mantle urged the appropriation of ourselves to Christ and Christ to us. By way of illustration he told of a sailor who jumped into the sea to save a man who could not swim. Instead of catching hold of the man at once, he swam round and round him until the man was unconscious, and so rescued him. So Christ leaves us as long as we strive to save ourselves, but directly we feel our weakness and inability He comes for us to lean on Him, and to yield ourselves wholly to Him—"for," as He says, "without Me ye can do nothing." On Wednesday afternoon Mrs. Searle gave an address special to women only.

THE GOSPEL IN IRELAND.

The annual reports of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland are always deeply interesting reading; and the sixty-ninth, just issued, is quite up to the accustomed standard. The pages show that a large amount of evangelistic work is being done in a spirit of true dependence upon God. They also afford abundant evidence that God is blessing faithful service among the warm-hearted Irish people. Maintaining that the great remedy for Ireland's woes is to be found in the diffusion of the Word of God, the Society provides for making known the teachings of that Word, its agents reading the Scriptures from house to house where permitted, and distributing Gospel portions and other helpful books wherever opportunity is afforded.

We rejoice to learn that many new districts have been opened up during the year, and that there are signs of increased desire to hear the Bible read and expounded. During the past few years it has been laid on the heart of the Secretary, and many of the Lord's servants, to send some of the most experienced Scripture-readers to itinerate through several very needy districts of Ireland. In many places thus visited great good has been accomplished, and the agents have returned with the encouraging report that in nearly all their visits they were permitted to read God's Word, and on many occasions to kneel with the people in prayer. One of these readers writes:—"We found some who never attended any place of worship, and seemed to be living careless and unconcerned about eternity. I have reason to hope that we were used of God to show them the error of their ways. The news had been spread amongst the Roman Catholics that we had come to convert them by condemning the doctrines of their Church; and they had received orders not to have anything to say to us. I am thankful to say that they found out that they had been misinformed, and many of them became very friendly, and to and speak of the love of God for a lost world. A good work may be done among them, if carried on in the spirit of love."

One of the readers who made a tour into a distant part of the island writes:—"We were kindly received in every house we entered. The people listened attentively, especially when I explained the Gospel in the Irish language, for many of them could scarcely understand English." Another reader thus describes his work:—"One poor woman and her children, who were ill with influenza, knelt with us in prayer; I read to them John xix. The woman said, 'That is a good book, sir.' I said, 'Yes; you can have it.' She said she had no money to spare, or she would buy it. Believing her to be telling the truth, I said, 'I will leave you the book.' She thanked me for it, as she would like her daughter to read it to her. A man asked me if there was ever anyone born without sin? I said, 'Yes, the Lord Jesus.' He added, 'Yes, and the Blessed Virgin.' I said if that were so, she would have no need of a Saviour. 'Neither had she,' said he. I opened the Bible, Luke i., and read from verse 46-48, saying, 'You see her own words here, that she acknowledges God as her Saviour. But,' I observed, 'let us look a little further,' and I read Rom. v. 12, showing that all were sinners by nature; that she must have inherited her parents' sinful nature, and so needed a Saviour. He got quite angry at this, and said, 'We don't want you here.' We then left him, praying that God the Holy Spirit might open their eyes to see the truth as it is in Jesus. The controversial element was very strong in this district, and some of them thought that we desired to engage in it; but we set ourselves directly against controversy, except in reply to questions raised by the people, and then answered their questions from the Word of God, our desire being to read and speak of the love of God as it is in Jesus."

We trust this good work will continue to enjoy God's blessing. The secretary is Captain James Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

WEST END "SHELTER" WORK.

As one looks at the rough, beer-marked faces of the "dossers" who frequent the Salvation shelter at Westminster, noticing their ragged, threadbare garments and poorly clad feet, one cannot but conclude that to many a "West-end" resident life is a dreary, weary struggle against starvation. Under the leadership of Captain Ayers, the work of the Salvation Army has gone forward in the district, and during the past six months topers have given up their drink, lazy men their idleness, burglars their thieving, pugilists their ruffianism, atheists their free-thought, and vagrants and mendicants their old-time "profession." Should any think this exaggerated or far-stretched, let them visit the shelters and listen to the testimonies given by converts.

On a recent evening there was a social gathering to bid farewell to a convert leaving for America. At the commencement of the proceedings the "dossers" and visitors were regaled with what was termed a "converts' tea." It must have cheered the hearts of the workers to meet so many who have been rescued from the quagmires and depths of degradation, and are now in employment gained for them through the instrumentality of this new department of the Army.

As the men got up, one after another, in the presence of friends, and told what God had done for them, Captain Ayers could not but think of the wonderful nature of some of the cases of rescue. Here was one who had been a minister of the Gospel, but who had sunk so low that he tried to commit suicide. There was a notorious housebreaker and pickpocket, who had learned to conquer his knavery and live honestly. There, again, was also a young light of the atheists—a pamphleteer, of no mean ability—whose negative creed had crumbled away, and who certainly seemed happy in his surroundings. The cases of reclaimed drunkards and runaway husbands and sons were many. Late vagrants, now on the high-road to prosperity, added earnestly their quota to the evening's proceedings; it seemed difficult to believe that these men were once "homeless nomads," bereft of hope, and whose beggary was once a source of discord to our social life.

Among the friends who gave an earnest word of advice, was Mr. Davis, a guardian of the Strand Union. Many of the visitors inspected critically the kitchen and bedding arrangements, and expressed themselves as highly pleased with the convenience and cleanliness of the shelter. The value of this praise will be recognised when we consider that there is accommodation for over 200 men. An enjoyable evening was brought to a close with a farewell to a young convert. G. J. Day.

THE PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS.

It was my painful lot to witness some of the sufferings of my Jewish brethren on my way to Jerusalem. Being obliged to change steamers at Alexandria, I embarked on a Russian steamer, where I found the deck packed with Russian Jews—above 200 in number—who were being driven away from their own country. It was an appalling sight—men, women, and children in the greatest distress, and being pushed about by the rough Russian sailors.

As I entered into conversation with some of them, they came round me and many had lamentable tales to tell. Some more fortunate than others had been able to save a portion of their property, and so were on their way to the Promised Land, thus to help in colonising it and to settle down in the country of their fathers. Some said, "Ask the Christians of England to help the influential Jews in undertaking for their brethren, and God will reward them."

Then, too, on landing in Jaffa, the Jew meets with as bad treatment at the hands of the barbarian Arab. Some one in authority should be appointed to meet the steamers, bring the poor Hebrews ashore, and so save them from the Arab boatmen; also in the Custom House, to prevent the officers from maltreating them. I was myself very roughly treated on landing at Jaffa by a Custom House official, and should have suffered still further indignity had not another officer who knew me come upon the scene in time to prevent him. Having informed the English Consul in Jaffa about it, his only answer was "I cannot help it." Oh! will the Lord's children pray earnestly about it? And, if any will send us Hebrew and Arabic Scriptures for the Mission, it would be to the glory of his name. D. C. Joseph.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

Mr. James B. Wookey, accompanied by Dr. Barnardo's musical boys, have been conducting a series of successful meetings at Windsor, Wincanton, Sherborne, Yeovil, Weymouth, and Channel Islands.

At Weymouth a very pleasing incident occurred. Mr. Wookey appealed to any beneficent person present to defray the cost of the hall (£4 4s.), so that the collection might go in its entirety to aid the work of the Homes. After the suggestion was made a local clergyman rose, and in seconding the appeal stated that some years ago there was on the streets of Weymouth a poor, friendless lad, who appeared to be drifting fast towards a criminal career. Through a clergyman's instrumentality the boy was admitted as an inmate to Dr. Barnardo's Homes, and was ultimately sent to Canada. The speaker had just returned from a visit to Canada, and made it his business to search out the rescued boy, whom he found engaged by a Christian farmer, who spoke in the highest terms of his industry and Christian character.

The Mayor of Weymouth, who was present at the meeting, next rose, and expressed his great delight in listening to the above story, and marked his high appreciation of the work accomplished in the rescue of that one boy that he at once subscribed the four guineas.

Mr. Wookey is now visiting High Wycombe, Aylesbury, Thame, Watlington, Berkhampsted, Northampton, and Bedford.

SOUTHERN STATES.—The Bible and Gospel Van is now put up for the winter, and I am, along with my wife, sailing in the Majestic on October 15 for my usual work among the freedmen of the Southern States. I am hoping to visit all the large cities and towns where I have laboured more or less the last fourteen years, believing from reports to hand we shall have more blessing than hithertofore. MRS. AHOK,

A Devoted Chinese Christian.

THIS week we introduce to notice a Chinese lady who, for Christian devotion and strength of purpose, deserves to be held in high honour in the Church of Christ. That a lady of rank in the million-peopled empire should confess Christ and serve Him among her idolatrous neighbours is a notable thing; that out of a yearning desire for the salvation of her people she should make a journey to Europe, and beg those who fear God to send, without delay, other heralds of the light of life, is more remarkable still. Such a lady, however, is the subject of our present sketch.

Mrs. AHOK is the wife of a mandarin who has just fallen asleep at Foochow. Brought up in heathen darkness and superstition, they early knew what it is to serve false gods. Ten years ago, however, they came to a knowledge of Christ. The first English lady who spoke to Mrs. Ahok was Miss Foster, of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East. The mandarin desired his wife to learn something of the English language, and, after hesitation, it was arranged that Miss Foster should give her instruction, notwithstanding the fact, at first unpleasant, that the Bible was one of the books to be read. When Miss Foster could not give the lessons, Mrs. R. W. Stewart, of the Church Missionary Society, did so. The Chinese lady showed, for a time, the same firm attachment as formerly to the idols which filled her house, and the missionaries were tempted to despair of Divine truth ever finding a lodgment in her heart. Light comes from God, however, and when the day of Divine enlightenment arrived, the darkness rolled from the lady's mind, and all was "Light in the Lord."

Having confessed Christ, Mrs. Ahok became, to the utmost of her power, a home missionary among her people. For some years she has visited in the city of Foochow, and has introduced English missionaries into the households of many rich mandarins, where otherwise they could not possibly have obtained entrance. Her husband, until his death in August last, was one with her in heart and soul, and, as well as working himself, did much to facilitate Mrs. Ahok's labours for the Lord.

Women of the higher social classes in China are, as is well known, in a very sad case. Their crippled little feet render them to a large extent prisoners in their houses; custom and ignorance do much to make their lives tedious and miserable. Life has no serious purpose with them, so that their days are passed in trivial occupations and unprofitable entertainment. Mrs. Ahok had grace given her to rise above these sad surroundings, and though her tiny feet made travelling burdensome, and the confinement of her past life fostered fear and timidity, she boldly responded to the call of duty, and, as already intimated, came to England to give emphatic expression to her heart's prayer, "Come over and help us." She had never before been more than three miles away from her home, yet she did not quail before a journey of several thousand miles. She is the first Chinese Christian lady who has ever visited Europe on such an errand.

Early in the present year Miss Bradshaw, of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, came home to England to recruit her health. Mr. Ahok had for some time been burdened with a desire to visit England or America in order to impress upon Christian people the need for more missionaries. So he proposed to his wife to accompany Miss Bradshaw, and in two days the brave little lady had made up her mind to come and plead with the women of England to have mercy upon the women of China. She said: "I cannot think why more Christians do not come to China; it must be because they do not know how our women are dying." At Mildmay Conference in June last Mrs. Ahok admirably formulated the appeal which she delivered on many platforms in the United Kingdom, as follows:—

> Suppose our Lord had said He loved this world, but had never left heaven to lay down his life for us, would his pity have done us any good? We should have been without hope. But Christ gave the greatest proof of his love by coming and laying down his life for us. So, when we say by our lips that we know Him, we should give proof by our lives that what we say is true. She had not come all this way from home and country for pleasure or amusement. She was sitting in her house in quietness and peace, and thought of the coming of the Lord. She felt she dare not meet Him, and look in his face, having herself known the Saviour's love and pity, without having done anything for the salvation of her brothers and sisters in China. She asked Christians to give themselves for work in China. There is a Chinese proverb: "While the stone is hot, put the cakes on"; so she begged her hearers to make no delay in putting their resolves into execution.

Needless to say, these earnest words were listened to with rapt attention. At nearly a hundred meetings the appeal was presented, being interpreted from Chinese by Mrs. Stewart. Being, as already stated, a victim of the foot-binding custom of her country, Mrs. Ahok had to endure much during her travels. At the annual meeting of the C.E.Z.M.S. she referred to the difficulties of the way as follows:—

> I have heard some people say that I have come to England for pleasure. I do not think there can be any pleasure in coming as I have done. That long journey alone is enough to make one cry. My one thought is to get back to my own country as quickly as I can, after doing the duty which God has called me to do.

There was holy daring in the undertaking. At Hong Kong Mrs. Ahok was told, in the language of the people, "There are a thousand miseries before you." Her reply was: "If there are a thousand more, I will go." She came, and endured many hardships, deriving strength and comfort from the words of Christ: "If any man serve Me, let him follow Me. If any man serve Me, him will my Father honour."

The pity of the audiences that listened to Mrs. Ahok was always stirred by her references to the sad deaths of the women of China. As in India, females are unwelcome at their birth and despised in their life. When death comes, however, their experiences are grievous in the extreme. Mrs. Ahok said:—

I have myself been with those who were passing away. They murmur that they see evil spirits coming for them, and they say they see this and that spirit. One attendant cannot stay in the room alone with them; there must be five or six people. They say the evil spirits are filling the room, and coming to take away their poor soul. The reason of this terrible dread and anguish of mind is that they do not know the love of God, but worship evil spirits.

Some years ago I worshipped idols, just as these poor women do. I seemed to be quite under the power of the idols; but now, thanks be to God, I am delivered. My husband's mother, who had also become a Christian, died about two years ago. Her death was perfect peace, so different from the death of the heathen. As we sat in the room with her, we asked whether she was afraid, and her answer was, "It is all peace." And so she passed away to be with the Saviour. If Miss Foster had not come to teach me, I should have been in as deep darkness as any of my people. So I want some of you to come out and teach them.

During four months Mrs. Ahok pleaded the cause of her sisters. She told us that Miss Davies was alone in Foochow—a great city surrounded by many smaller places, with hundreds of thousands of women. Once the attention of these benighted people is arrested, it is surprising to notice their experiences in heart and mind. To think that God loves them is at first quite ridiculous. Becoming reassured, however, they are amazed at the story of the Cross, and among those who have confessed Christ are some of whom Mrs. Ahok is a very worthy representative; they are earnest and devoted followers of the Lord that bought them.

Our Chinese friend was a most interesting guest wherever she went in Great Britain and Ireland. She enforced her appeal by one sentence spoken in excellent English, namely, "Come over and help us; it is very important." How the words did touch many who heard them! We cannot say that many responded. We trust some will yet cheer her heart and "go over." Mrs. Ahok left England for China viâ America, June 27. One English lady, Miss Florence Mead, sailed with her, giving her life to missionary work. We may fittingly conclude our sketch with words taken from Regions Beyond for August: "A thousand Miss Meads are wanted! At least a thousand such, if China's women are to be reached in this generation."

Mrs. Ahok's return home was precipitated by intelligence of the serious illness of her husband. She did not arrive at Foochow until several days after his death. We sincerely trust that, resigned to the dispensations of Providence, Mrs. Ahok will find her path lightened before her with a brightness shining "more and more unto the perfect day."

BARNAVE, DROME, FRANCE.—Madame Marzials continues the work which her late husband began, but her path has been beset by not a little difficulty and anxiety. The Home takes destitue children, Roman Catholics as well as Protestants. There will be periodical reports by a public accountant; and it is hoped by this and other measures to reassure the benevolent, and increase the practical usefulness of the Home. Madame Marzials would be glad to receive into her house ladies desirous of learning French or Italian, and to engage in mission work, for which there are many openings. She will be assisted by a devoted Christian lady diplomée. Miss Jackson, The Acacias, Merton-road, Tooting, who spent three months at Barnave at the beginning of the year, will be glad to answer any inquiries.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

These evangelists conducted a most successful mission in Bradford from September 6 to 21, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. Although the two largest halls in the town were engaged for the mission, at several of the meetings the accommodation was much too small for the crowds who attended.

On the first Sunday afternoon a children's service was held in St. George's Hall by Mr. Smith, the hall being completely filled with Sunday-school children and teachers, numbering about 5000. The service was most impressive. Evangelistic services were held each Sunday evening in St. George's Hall, and on four evenings each week in the Mechanics' Institute. "An Hour with the Bible" was the name given to a series of six afternoon meetings, specially for Christians. Mr. Fullerton's searching applications of Bible truth, and earnest appeals for a full consecration of heart and life to the Master's service, were made a blessing to many.

Meetings for women only were conducted with much acceptance by Mrs. Fullerton on the second and closing Sunday afternoons in the Mechanics' Institute. Many being unable to gain admission, overflow meetings were held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, and addressed by Miss Fanny Gregson, Miss Garnett, and others.

Crowded meetings of men only were held at the same time in St. George's Hall, and powerful addresses on the evils of intemperance, gambling, impurity, and other vices were given by Mr. Fullerton. An early morning service for Christian workers was held on the closing Sunday. Mr. Fullerton preached on Sunday mornings to large congregations in Muff Field Wesleyan Reform Chapel, Salem Congregational Chapel, and Zion Baptist Chapel.

The presence and power of the Holy Spirit were graciously manifested throughout the mission, and at the after-meetings for anxious inquirers 350 cases were personally dealt with, and many were led to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour.

The mission was heartily supported by the Y.M.C.A. workers, and by ministers and Christian friends of various denominations, several of whom took part in the services and assisted in the inquiry meetings. The singing was ably led by Mr. Smith, whose gift of song and touching anecdotes endeared him to many. A voluntary choir, under the leadership of Mr. Alfred Liversedge, rendered valuable assistance.

The arrangements for the mission, which worked harmoniously throughout, were in the hands of a representative committee, composed of the members of the Y.M.C.A. committee and leading Christian workers in the town. The voluntary contributions received at the doors were found sufficient to cover all expenses, and to enable the committee to send a thankoffering to Mr. Spurgeon.

GOSPEL WORK IN MEXICO.

After Mr. Pascoe's lamented death, it seemed probable that someone would be raised up from amongst the believers in Mexico to act in co-operation with the family in carrying on the work. Mr. John Mercer, of Southport, writes:—After various attempts to sustain and encourage workers, we began to feel anxious, until we were led into correspondence with Mr. Bright, of Venezuela, and formerly of Mexico, an English Christian gentleman, known in this country, and well reported of.

Mr. Bright's chief motive for returning to Mexico was to follow up the work of the late Mr. Pascoe, whom he knew personally. Not at first, however, did the widow of the deceased fall in with the arrangement for the work to pass into other hands. Mr. Bright, in the meantime, took up his residence at Morelia, where there were many believers whom he desired to organise into a mission, and to whom he hoped to preach the word of God.

Writing recently, Mr. Bright reports that Mrs. Pascoe has welcomed his operation in the Mission. He says:—"We now have the use of a fine steam press, a sufficient quantity of type for printing, not only our Spanish monthly, but also tracts, wall texts, hymn-book, &c. I am specially rejoiced to find a quantity of new wood type, for in Hurtamo I saw what a good testimony of the Gospel is given by the large texts that Don Emilio has stuck round the walls of his house, where they can be read by all who pass by; and this, in a village where few ever see a Bible, is of no little importance. We shall be able to send forth a river of living waters of the precious Word of God, the testimony of his grace to a lost world!"

Having taken possession, Mr. Bright has begun printing. He says:—"When I think of the much labour dear Pascoe bestowed upon the press (and, too, undoubtedly, many prayers), and of the important service it already has rendered under his hands—when I think of all this, I feel I shall be best interpreting the wishes of our sympathisers and fellow labourers at home, if I keep it and use it to spread throughout all these dark lands of Spanish America the soul-liberating Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Communications regarding the Mission may be addressed to Mr. John Mercer, 29, Queen's-road, Southport.

REST AT MENTONE.—"Villa Helvetia" is a very useful Home for invalid ladies. The latest report states that the inmates of the Home mostly escaped last year's epidemic. The greater number of them, fifteen in all, derived benefit from their winter's sojourn; about half being English, the remainder German, Dutch, Swiss, and Alsatian. Ladies desiring to be admitted into the Home should write to Miss Dudgeon, Les Grottes, Mentone. The age of admission is limited from 18 to 40, and only such as would otherwise be unable to winter in the South are received as inmates. The Home is not self-supporting, and among the ladies in England who have its interests at heart is Mrs. Seton-Carr, Atherton Grange, Wimbledon.

NEWPORT, MONMOUTHSHIRE.—The Nonconformist churches of Newport, are holding a united mission, conducted by Rev. Robert Balgarnie, late of Scarborough. It commenced on Saturday, September 20, by a meeting of workers for conference and prayer. About twenty congregations are thus united in Christian work. On Sunday, the 21st, three services were held. During the week, all the evening meetings have been conducted in Stroud-street Baptist Chapel, which have been largely attended. At the after-meetings, a goodly number have accepted Christ. Mr. Balgarnie has had special meetings for police, young men and women in business, mothers, and children, which are to be repeated next week. Newport has long been the scene of earnest evangelical work, both in the Church of England and Nonconformist bodies. All are longing for times of refreshing and reaping, and the first fruits have already been gathered, with a hopeful expectation of "more to follow."

IN THE HOP-YARDS.

have once more had the joy of visiting the p-yards of Hereford and Worcester, in com- ny with Mr. T. S. Heley, of Wing, Leighton zzard. Besides distributing tracts and aching in about seventy villages, we worked one hundred farms, where pickers were em- yed, thus reaching nearly three thousand rsons engaged in this particular industry.

The first hop-bin that we went to was being ed by two Salvation Army lassies, who were t afraid to wear their colours in the midst of e foe. As we left another yard, a gipsy girl me after us, sent by her mother, to know if could not be with them on the following bbath. As we expected to be many miles ay, this was impossible; but it showed the en door for more workers.

In one yard, some of the pickers started a mn about bringing the wanderers in. This ened the way for a short address, telling em how willing God was that we should bring hers with us to the Gospel Feast. "If the eat man of the neighbourhood invited me to s house," said the speaker, "he would not pect me to bring a hundred of you with me; t God does, so you are right in singing 'Bring em in.'"

The singing is quite a feature of this work. ne of our friends, standing up in the trap, oted the well-known hymn, "I heard the ice of Jesus say." As soon as he finished eaking, a woman started the tune and sang e beautiful words. The responses of these oor people are most cheering. One evening, a roup were gathered round the fire, when we oted "Christ Jesus came into this world to ave—" We paused for an answer. "Sinners," aid a woman. But a boy seemed to think that as not quite personal enough, so inserted the ord "hop-pickers." "Christ Jesus came into he world to save hop-pickers." As this shut s preachers out of the text, we suggested that hat they had better make it still more personal y saying, "Christ Jesus came into the world to ave me."

Roman Catholics are the most difficult o deal with; but one of our friends got a ood hearing and thanks even from these, by uoting three texts from their own version of he Scriptures, "Made nigh by the blood"; 'redeemed by the blood"; "before the throne vashed by the blood." Events often open up he way for God's Word, and thus in one large op-yard a man had received a telegram to say is brother had been killed in a colliery. He ad left his work, and his vacant place, gave s a capital chance of enforcing the words, 'Now is the accepted time."

One of our friends took advantage of his position beside a hop-pole, left standing in the field, to preach about Moses lifting up the serpent in the wilderness. As he stood with his hand upon that solitary pole, and the people around him, the text seemed beautifully illustrated, "So must the Son of Man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life." Sometimes the conversation had to be with individuals. A picker was going home with her children. The latter were straying, when she called out in angry tones, "Where are you going?" We were the other side of the hedge, and took up her words, telling her the question was most important as to heaven or hell. Without answering us, she screamed to the child, "This is the way." "Quite right, madam, you are preaching a good sermon," we continued as we joined her in the road, "This is the way, walk ye in it. Jesus is the way; and if we want to get home to heaven, we must come to Him."

It was encouraging to find so many who knew us from past years, many of whom told us they had the tracts given last season, some even remembering the titles. One young girl told us she had sent books given to her the year before to Australia. Who knows the far-reaching influence of this work? We were much pleased to find others taking up this effort, especially the young men of the Leominster Y.M.C.A. From this centre, a band of workers are going forth, two and two, into the gardens around. We spent a bright evening with them at their rooms, and were very cheered to hear of one case of direct conversion through their efforts. A hop-picker, who at first was anything but friendly, had taken a tract, and the following year was in heaven; but not without sending a message of thanks for good received in the hop-yard. Will all who read of this special work offer a special prayer that special blessing may follow?

WILLIAM LUFF.

During the past three weeks we have visited the hopyards in this district, and have met with much encouragement. Many tears have fallen as we have told of the Saviour's dying love. Tracts have been freely distributed and eagerly sought after. We pray that God will add the increase, and that from the sowing there will come a glorious reaping.

Ledbury. GEORGE NEIGHBOUR.

REV. J. B. DALY, now on a visit to England, is commended to British Christians by Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, who writes: "Rev. J. B. Daly is one of a great company of priests who have recently become obedient to the faith. Since leaving the Church of Rome he has preached in several Baptist Churches, and has done excellent service in turning Roman Catholics to Christ. Any assistance you may render him in the same work will be gratefully acknowledged." Letters to Mr. Daly may be addressed to 18, Paternoster-row.

THE CHILDREN'S MEDICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY is an auxiliary to the Medical Mission Association. The fifteenth report, just published, is a gem with its poetical quotations and evidences of merciful solicitude on the part of children who are evidently grateful that their lot was cast in our highly-favoured land. The brief account of children's working parties is delightful, and many missions in various parts of the world have been aided by grants from the total sum raised, just £150. We should be glad to hear of new branches of the Society being formed through perusal of this report, copies of which may be had from the hon. secretary, Miss Annie R. Butler, Medical Mission House, 49, Highbury Park, N.

WINCHESTER CENTRAL EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.—This Association was formed last May under the presidency of Dr. T. H. White. During the summer months open-air services have been carried on in several parts of the city, and it is trusted that the seed of truth has been sown in many hearts. Quarterly gatherings of Christian workers are convened, one object of the Association being to promote unity and fellowship amongst Christians of all denominations. Arrangements have been made to hold a fortnight's mission at St. John's Rooms, commencing October 12, to be followed by special services on Sunday evenings as the Lord may open the way. Mr. Edward Hurditch, of the Evangelistic Mission, will (D.V.) conduct the mission, and the interest and prayers of God's people are asked that much blessing may follow the word spoken. Communications can be addressed to Mr. G. F. Gibbs, hon. sec., 14, Ranelagh-road, Winchester.

TO THE CONGO.—DEAR SIR,—When your readers have this week's CHRISTIAN in hand, Mrs. Ricketts will be on her way to Africa. She sailed on October 1. In response to my appeal all the money needed has come in—and more, so that I not only have paid her passage out, but have also handed her £10 for her expenses on landing at Banana, and her further voyage up the Congo to Lukanga. She is very much obliged to all who have helped her by money, and also by the gifts for her school, which almost overpowered her by their abundance. All the donations have been acknowledged direct, except the following anonymous contributions:—Sheffield (Postmark), £1; Reader of THE CHRISTIAN, £1; "A Widow's Mite," 5s.; "A trifle, from one who loves Jesus" (Bromley), 9d.; Burton (Postmark), 10s.; Westbourne Park (Postmark), 2s.; M. K. (Kensington) (Postmark), 2s.; A Lover of Missions in Africa and reader of THE CHRISTIAN, 5s.; Aigburth (Postmark), 5s.—Yours, R. S. HIND-SMITH.

MR. VICARY'S GOSPEL TENT WORK.

WE have just closed our seventeenth summers Gospel tent campaign. Our first tent this season was pitched on May 24, at Bishopsworth, where for a fortnight the Gospel was faithfully proclaimed, to the joy and salvation of many souls.

A second tent was erected in the village of Limpley Stoke. Great was the interest awakened, many coming from the neighbouring hamlets, and some even from Bath. For fifteen days the services continued, including special meetings for the young. Not a few praise God for the blessing received.

At Combe-Down and Horfield Common we had tents, likewise one in the Pontypool district, under the superintendency of Mr. T. M. Wintle (the latter still continuing with much encouragement).

Weston-super-Mare was again visited for the fifteenth summer, and for over eleven weeks the 174 services under canvas were sustained with unabating interest. Many were the visitors who came to this increasingly popular seaside resort for mere change of air, and blessedly experienced a change of heart. Not a few expressed thanks, both by note and voice, for spiritual reviving and restoration of soul-communion as the result of the noonday Bible-readings. The labours of Mr. F. S. Ball (from the Evangelisation Society) during the month of August were greatly owned of God. During the season we were privileged to have the fellowship in service of Mr. Thomas Newberry, Capt. Dennis, General Rice, Mr. Douglas Russell, Rev. H. Dening, and Rev. Colin Campbell, each of whom contributed happily to the edification of their hearers.

We closed a very fruitful season on Sept. 22, with a social tea-meeting, under canvas, when over 150 of the converts and friends were present; after which short practical addresses followed, closing with the usual favourite hymn, "God be with you till we meet again."

JAS. A. VICARY.

Wellington Lodge, Ashley-road, Bristol.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH has arrived in the United States. Her health is improved. After spending some time with her daughter in Baltimore she hopes to winter in California. Letters to her may be addressed to the care of Mrs. Rodne, 71, Deane-street, Brooklyn, New York.

WEST NORWOOD CONVALESCENT HOME, supported by Mr. and Mrs. Scott and friends, was closed during the months of July and August for repairs and addition to the building, and reopened September 8. Miss Ellis and Miss Bamber, whose Christian work has been so well known amongst young woman at Tryon House, Chelsea, have kindly undertaken the charge of the Home as honorary superintendents, and with their experience, and loving interest in the patients, much blessing and success will, it is hoped, be the result. The Home makes up thirteen beds, which are now full. Any who may desire admission should apply to Miss Ellis, Convalescent Home, Gipsy-road, West Norwood, S.E.

THE OPERATIVE JEWISH CONVERTS' Institution exists to facilitate acts of mercy and pity on behalf of Hebrews desirous of confessing Christ before the world. During the whole or part of last year twenty-six young men enjoyed the advantages of a Christian home and regular employment. Of these ten are still in the Institution, and there are ten others regularly employed as journeymen or otherwise. The position of a Jewish convert is still, as of old, one of difficulty and trial. No sooner does he renounce Judaism, than he is cut off, disowned, and despised, even by his nearest and dearest friends. Christians cannot do less than offer shelter and help to such. This Institution enables them to help themselves, but the support it receives is so limited that comparatively little practical compassion can be shown. The inmates turn out good work in printing, &c. The Institution is in Palestine-place, Cambridge Heath, the principal being Rev. H. Oliver Allbrook.

Wakefield Convention.

The annual Convention at Wakefield was held September 23, 24, and 25. Prayer-meetings, which ensured blessing, were held at the rooms of the Y.M. and Y.W.C.A. during the previous week. At a meeting for men only, very plain words on personal purity, spoken by Mr. Lane, were listened to with close and riveted attention. Mr. Lane's Gospel preaching at night led many to professed decision for Christ. The growing interest in the Convention was manifested by the presence of two-thirds of the Church of England and Nonconformist ministers at a luncheon given on the first day by Mr. Haley, who is the moving spirit of this Convention. He is a manufacturer, who opened business here six or seven years ago, under evident providential leading, and whose subsequent experiences have proved that "them that honour Me I will honour." A preliminary service was held in the Cathedral Church, the preacher being Rev. J. T. Butlin, B.A., of Birmingham.

The subjects were some of the grandest that can exercise the mind—the exceeding riches of God's grace in his purpose towards us and in our salvation; the greatness of his power in our sanctification; his perfect will concerning us; his sufficiency for us in service; the eternal glory in reserve for us. On the third day a consecration meeting, and two sessions regarding the claims of the heathen, gave a very practical termination to a series of meditations which were at once heart-searching and stimulating in a high degree.

Mr. Lane presided at the first meeting, and gave a preliminary address on 2 Kings iii. 16, 17. Here were three kings with their armies in danger of perishing for want of water. "Make this valley full of ditches," said the prophet. It is a humiliating thing for soldiers to exchange their swords for spades, and it seemed a foolish thing to dig trenches when there was no water. But the valley is the humbled place; and by making it full of trenches, they showed the utterness of their need, and prepared for its abundant supply. They remembered that in Elijah's day, at Carmel, the drought was ended by clouds, and wind, and rain; but God's resources are infinite; He does not repeat Himself; without wind or rain the valley was filled with water. Let us confess our need, and make room in our hearts for his Spirit, and He will bless us, if not as we may anticipate, yet in his own wise way. The water came in the morning, at the time of sacrifice. Every deliverance comes to us through the Cross. And the country was filled with water, which, while it brought refreshment and victory to Israel, brought disaster and defeat to their enemies. That the lesson was understood by the hearers was evidenced by repeated allusions to the trenches from other speakers during subsequent sessions.

The audience was stilled and stirred by the words which followed from Rev. F. B. Meyer, based on the Gospel of John; they will doubtless be embodied in his papers on the Gospel of "Life, Light, Love," the first of which we publish to-day.

Rev. F. E. Marsh, Sunderland, asked: Have we all believed in the Lord Jesus Christ—Jesus for us, Christ in us, Lord over us? God gives us every blessing in Christ. He does not give us power, but Himself; He is the power.

We have not space to give the rugged but burning words of Mr. McAuliffe, nor the suggestive and practical utterances of Revs. J. T. Butlin, and F. E. Marsh and other speakers. We must confine ourselves to the following on based a helpful address on Col. iii. 17—"And whatsoever ye do in word or in deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." Word and deed, speech and action, are the two forms that comprehend all the expression of life. We translate our thoughts into language, our resolutions into acts. Taking in all the multiform expression of human energy, to whatever source it may be traced, the exhortation of the text claims that it shall go forth in Christ's name—that the word, the act, the habit, the usage, all shall take their rise under Christ's authority, and subserve the purpose of Christ's mind. The inferiority of a particular function of life shall not disqualify it from the consecration; it is included with those of the highest rank. All this pre-supposes a new creation of the man: a new body, a new understanding, new passions, and a new will.

CHRISTIAN SERVICE.

REV. DR. E. E. JENKINS

To correct any impression that this is an extreme manner of presenting the Christian's dedication, let me ask you to study the Epistle to the Colossians, and the sister letter to the Ephesians. In these documents there are set forth two subjects: (1) the pre-eminence of Christ—Creator, Sovereign, and Saviour; (2) our derivation from Him, and our identity with him, in body, soul, and spirit. The author's mind is so dominated by these truths, that they are not only the main propositions of his argument, but they overflow into the salutations and doxologies of the Epistles. We are rooted in Christ; we are builded up in Christ; the structure of our character is a development following the law of his life. He is our life, and we are perfect in Him. "Christ is all and in all."

The speaker enlarged with point and power upon the practical character of the union of the saints with Christ. Holiness is the common privilege of Christian discipleship. It is not the monopoly of the priest, the confessor, the martyr. Our speech and our action, our influence and our possessions, are exercised and held under the name of Christ. We live by right of Christ, for, separated from Christ, life is a thing without meaning—a mere drift. We live for Christ's sake; the inspiring and governing principle of the new life is "The love of Christ shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost given unto us." If our love to Him is the supreme affection of our souls, we necessarily live for Him only. Our entire life must be "an epistle of Christ"—a thankoffering to Him.

REV. C. G. MOORE, of the China Inland Mission, observed that before God gives us more grace He closely tests the grace we have. Very forcibly was this illustrated in Simon Peter (Luke v.). Read the narrative. Simon had a boat, and lent it to his Master. He was tired after a night's toil. He was washing his nets, and we don't like to be disturbed when we are busy. If the Lord had needed Simon to take Him across the lake at night, or in a gale of wind, there was no man better able, nor one who would more willingly have placed his strength and skill at his Master's service; but a lad could paddle Him out from the shore, and sit in the boat with Him on a summer day. When he had washed his nets, Simon would have taken his much-needed rest. But the Master had asked this favour of him, and he willingly obeyed.

The Lord is delicately sensitive to the least thing we do for Him. Peter had put Him under an obligation, and when He had left speaking to the people, his first thought was Simon. The night's fishing had been an unusual failure; but Jesus bids him launch out into the deep, and let down his nets. Simon was an experienced fisherman; Jesus was a teacher, and not a fisherman. Men don't appreciate advice on what they know best, from those whom they suppose to know nothing about it. Besides, night, not morning, was the time to catch fish. Nevertheless, Peter obeyed his Lord; he made no mention of his weariness nor objected that there could be no fish about, or else they would have taken them; he named the fact of their fruitless toil, but unhesitatingly obeyed the Master's word, even to the particular side of the vessel which He named. Then came his reward; the net began to break with the multitude of fish.

God will be no man's debtor. Peter rendered what he had, and an unparalleled take of fish was his reward. But the fish were far more than fish to Simon. The transaction revealed him to himself: "I am a sinful man O Lord." It revealed Jesus in a larger sense than he had yet known him; so that he willingly forsook the gift for the Giver; quieted his spirit with the Lord's "Fear not," and cordially accepted the call and the promise: "Henceforth thou shalt catch men."

Mr. Meyer followed this address with a very searching confession and appeal. "We have all been interested in the lesson Mr. Moore has given us. Have we used the grace we have, so that God may give us more? Have we in heart and spirit forsaken all to follow Jesus, and catch men?" We cannot reproduce his words, but their effect was as in Deborah's song, "In the divisions of Reuben there were great searchings of heart."

On the last morning there was a goodly attendance at the early prayer-meeting, and much prayer was presented for souls to be converted, backsliders restored and believers quickened and helped.

The eleven o'clock meeting was presided over by Mr. John M. McAuliffe, who drew attention to the contrast between Saul's and Jonathan's estimate of David. Saul knew him as a sweet singer and a skilful musician, but Jonathan knew him as the conqueror of Goliath in the plains of the Oaks—typical of human strength, as Saul himself was a type of an outwardly religious man walking in the flesh. This knowledge of David led Jonathan to strip himself of his princely garments, of his sword, bow, and girdle, giving them to David, and placing at his disposal his right to Saul's throne, his service as a soldier, and his strength as a man. Jonathan had had his forty days of agony with all that powerless company of Saul's army. He had seen David's sling and stone work a victory for God upon Israel's enemy, and his soul was knit to the conqueror, David. So true consecration of the Christian is found in a heart knit to Jesus, and a stripped soul; and that soul and its strippings laid at the feet of Jesus. We dare not, like Saul, be content to know Jesus in the musical service, or simply get help from Him in a sermon or meeting, but in our forty days of tested strength, to realise, that—In me dwelleth no good thing; but God has given us the victory in Jesus Christ our Lord.

Gen. Sir Robert Phayre followed with faithful and clear words, bearing upon the Christian race, basing his address upon 1 Cor. ix. 24-27, and Phil. iii., setting forth that the knowledge of Jesus Christ so enables us to run, not in competition one with another, for all may obtain; but, casting aside our own righteousness, our confidence in human strength, we may press on in subjection to Christ to the prize of our high calling. True consecration consists in rightly knowing Christ in the power of his resurrection and being conformed to his death; and thus in all temperance running the Christian race.

Dr. Ebenezer Jenkins drew attention to laying aside weights, habits of life that hinder; perhaps not sins but hindrances; and the Rev. J. H. Horsburgh closed the meeting with a word on Rom. viii. 28. All things working for good; the loss of a key, missing a train, the interruption of a study—little things. Are we who are saved from the activities of sin also saved from the distresses of worry? Do we look for God's voice in little things? and are we conscious that blessing frequently comes from God by the way of little things?

The afternoon and evening meetings were set apart for the consideration of "God's claim upon his people for work among the heathen," and were presided over by General Sir. Robert Phayre.

In the afternoon the Chairman drew attention to missions in India. Speaking from an experience of forty years, he told several incidents of God's working in founding missions in our Indian Empire, and asserted that greater number of its missionaries were ly Apostolic men and women.

he Rev. C. G. Moore followed with an nest address, saying that the needs of the then can only be met through God's heart; simply a moved heart doing the business of iverance; that error Moses committed when slew the Egyptian, but our service for rist must be in Christ's power. We must to know the fulness; the joy, and not only t, the certainty of the principal of that in-rable law of God, "Give and it shall be en unto you" (Luke vi. 38).
Miss Matthews, of the Zenana Medical ssion, gave an account of women's work in zenanas of India, and in schools among ldren. One deeply interesting incident she d of a little English girl, of eleven, sending eference Bible, writing in it, "From Annie, o loves Jesus, and wants the one who gets s Bible to love Jesus also." Eleven years erwards, this same little girl, when herself a nana worker found this Bible in the home a Hindoo woman brought to Christ by its rusal.
Rev. J. H. Horsburgh dwelt upon the needs China; how these needs may be met if the rd's people will only be loyal to their King;
, if some of his people do not believe in mis-n, our Master did. One of our great dangers s in listening to the deceitfulness of Satan; ch as "I am not good enough." If this ould hinder, who is good enough; but, if in s mercy He opens to us a door, how thankful ought to be to fill it.
The evening meeting was crowded to excess,
d was opened by a joyous burst of praise,
lowed by prayer from one of the many clergy-en and ministers present on the platform and the hall. Gen. Sir Robert Phayre opened e meeting by a reference to the first Euro-an mission as recorded in Acts xvi., and enced in earnest words the importance of men's work in mission fields. Having to leave rly, this text was given to him from the Con-ence, acting by its convener, Mr. Alfred aley—"With long live will I satisfy thee
d shew thee my salvation."
The chair was then taken by Mr. John cAuliffe, and Dr. E. Jenkins, in a remarkable dress, replied to recent criticisms on missions, lling in as witnesses to their worth states-en, military officers, judges, blue books, &c., owing that the true friend to the heathen, evidenced by results, was the missionary.
ev. J. Horsburgh proceeded to show that the eat object of missionary enterprise was not change one religion for another of a higher rm, but to get spiritually dead men brought a personal knowledge of the true God and esus Christ as their Saviour and friend. The eepest solemnity rested upon his earnest, earching words. Here followed a most touch-ng incident—the presentation of the two young en going from this Conference to China, and ho, when this report is printed, will be on eir way to their future labours in connection ith the China Inland Mission. The names f these young men are Mr. H. French Ridley, te secretary of the Wakefield Y.M.C.A., and Ir. F. Deane, also a member of its committee.
Modestly and simply they told the story of eir conversion; the reason of their going rth to serve Christ, who had bought them ith his blood. Then the great company, neeling down, commended them by the chair-an to God and the word of his grace; the altering words of prayer, as they were uttered, ere broken by the subdued sob or response of any in the meeting, and many present will ever emember the holy influence of the Spirit as he hymn was sung, "Blest be the tie that inds." Then Mr. C. G. Moore followed with n address which cannot be reported; its arnestness, calm, and simplicity leading the Conference at length to the throne of grace where prayer was blended with praise, and hanksgiving with supplication, and so this most happy, blessed Conference was closed; nd yet, when closed, for full half an hour onger songs of praise and gladness were heard in the hall, on the stairs, and in the corridors, the people lingering behind, not wishing to go away. To God be the praise!

Mr. Haley says in a private letter:—"The closing meeting was simply marvellous; words of mine cannot describe. To God be the glory! I cannot thank Him enough for the joy and encouragement He has given and is giving me in this service for Him." We quote this for the encouragement of others.

British Y.M.C.A. Conference.

This important yearly gathering was, as usual, preceded by a meeting of the several secretaries, which was held in the Association Rooms at Walsall. About fifty secretaries attended. After the transaction of some official business, Mr. Henry Armstrong, travelling secretary for the Midland district, introduced the main topic for consideration, "The large Waste in the Membership of the Association: its Causes and Cure"—amounting, it was stated, to 33 per cent. per annum. After pointing out certain unavoidable causes which tended to reduce the number of efficient members, and about which it was idle to fret, he proceeded to point out several preventible causes of "leakage." The most important were—(1) the non-employment of members. If work, congenial to the taste and suited to the gifts of the members was not promptly provided, their interest in the Association was lost. (2) The Association rooms are too often ill-adapted and poorly equipped for the purpose of attracting and retaining young men. (3) The energies of the members were often dissipated by going outside their proper sphere of Association work for young men only. Mr. Armstrong's cautions were forcibly and alliteratively summed up during the discussion as being directed against dullness, dirtiness, and dissipation of energy.

A lively discussion was provoked in which the following points were emphasised:—The need of carefully prepared Bible teaching and the responsibility of the members each to bear his share of the work; the appointment of a committee to visit absentees; that the working committees of members should meet the general committee once a month, and report and confer about the general aspects of the work; that Association effort should be confined to reaching young men.

Two other items of interest were a resolution, to be forwarded to the National Council (unanimously passed), urging the publication of an English Association Handbook; and the appointment of a committee of three secretaries (Messrs. Armstrong, Burn & Oatts) to arrange for a "Secretaries' Week," a new opportunity for mutual instruction and conference, which it is proposed to institute next year. The Secretaries then proceeded to the Conference at Birmingham.

On Tuesday evening the Mayor of Birmingham invited the delegates and local friends of the Association to a reception in the Council House. His Worship (Mr. Alderman Clayton) was supported by Mr. A. M. Chance, President of the local Y.M.C.A., Mr. Richard Cadbury, Dr. R. W. Dale, and many resident and visiting Association workers, including the much-respected Founder and President. More than a thousand guests had assembled in the drawing-room, when the Mayor addressed a few hearty words of welcome to the delegates. He incidentally remarked that it was through the attendance of a personal friend of his at the International Conference at Rotterdam, twenty years ago, that his own interest had been first elicited. This led to his being enrolled as an honorary member of the Birmingham Association.

The vicar, the Rev. Canon Wilkinson, was to have addressed the assembly; being prevented, his place was filled by Mr. Chance, president. It was, he said, in Birmingham in 1882, that the first meeting of the English National Council, as now constituted, was held. Great progress in the development of Association work in England had resulted from that new departure. He quoted some interesting statistics, more than once repeated during the subsequent proceedings; and mentioned that more than half of the 4000 Associations scattered throughout the world belonged to the English-speaking peoples. The essential feature of Association work is that it is done by young men for young men.

Dr. R. W. Dale, who was received with hearty applause, expressed the great satisfaction with which the people of Birmingham regarded the visit to their city of the Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations. He trusted one result would be to extend the knowledge of what was being attempted and achieved by the Associations. While congratulating Mr. Williams, as founder, upon the number and variety of the agencies attached to the Associations, he ventured to think that, in connection with the Associations throughout the country, there ought to be attempted the very highest kind of teaching in relation to all subjects lying near to religious truth. This is their specific work, to cultivate amongst the members in religious truth. There were, for instance, such subjects as New Testament criticism, questions in relation to the history of the books of the New Testament and the history of the Church, questions concerning the development of religious life and thought, subjects which lie on the borderland of philosophy and faith, and questions concerning natural science and Christian faith, upon which it might be wise for the Association to secure the best and most instructive lecturers the country can supply. He believed that the religious life of large numbers of young men was seriously menaced at the present time because they had not the intellectual interest in religious truth that they had in many other subjects. It was not because doubts had been created in their minds with regard to the foundation of faith that many of them had gradually lost their fervour and intensity, and had drifted away from the old traditions; but because a rival intellectual interest had been created, and care had not been taken to make them understand that of all objects of intellectual interest religious truths were supreme. He believed that when the Christian Church lost its hold upon the intellectual life of the country it would not very long retain its authority over the country's religious faith.

Mr. George Williams responded to the welcome, expressing the gratification of the delegates at the reception given to them by the Mayor and citizens. After dwelling upon the development of the work of the Associations, and the almost unlimited scope presented in the young manhood of the country, he judged that the workers were still only upon the fringe of their task.

WEDNESDAY.

In the forenoon the Conference proper commenced with a devotional meeting conducted by the Rev. Walter Searle, of Birchfield Congregational Church. Mr. George Williams, president, took the chair at the first session. After the calling of the roll, an interesting paper was read by Mr. A. C. P. Coote on "Christian Discipleship, its privileges and responsibilities." Amongst the former were (1) The disciple was frequently with his Teacher; (2) He enjoyed the fellowship of his co-disciples; (3) He was subjected to discipline—chastening; (4) He became himself a teacher. The responsibilities were (1) To be like his Master; (2) To forsake all for Him; (3) To bear much fruit; (4) To hold fast; (5) To be filled with the Spirit.

Mr. John Macphail, ex-Chairman of the Scottish Executive, read a second paper on the same subject, which suffered greatly by the necessity of curtailment in its delivery. He said Christian discipleship was not mere outward profession. At the threshold of the gate of the school are these words: "Ye must be born again." Inattention to this requirement has filled the ranks with many mere professors Christian discipleship implies: (1) personal surrender to Christ; (2) entire consecration to Him; (3) ungrudging self-denial. Its privileges are: (1) a holy fellowship; (2) a noble lifework; (3) a glorious outlook. Its responsibilities were to be the salt of the earth, and the light of the world.

A special address followed by Rev. F. S. Webster, M.A., rector of St. Thomas's, Birmingham, who said: Responsibility signifies response to the privilege we have received. Privilege comes wholly from God. "As ye have received Christ Jesus the Lord (our privilege) so walk ye in Him" (our responsibility) (Col. ii. 6). Christ represents us before the Father (our privilege); we are to represent Him before the world (our responsibility). Christ belongs to us (our privilege); we belong to Him (our responsibility). Life is WASTED UNLESS USED FOR CHRIST.

Christ will never be to us all He ought to be, nor we to Him, until we are "filled with the Holy Ghost." At the conclusion of a lengthy and very earnest address, a few words were added by other delegates, followed by a few impressive words from the Chairman.

The noon meeting, which followed immediately, was conducted by the Rev. C. G. Baskerville, M.A., vicar of St. Silas', Birmingham. He read the whole of 1 Chron. xii. and part of xiii., which treats of David's mighty men, descanting with much interest on each verse.

The delegates dined in the Central Hall, a commodious building in the immediate neighbourhood, at the invitation of Mr. George Cadbury, who presided.

In the afternoon Mr. John Stevenson (Dunfermline) took the chair. The session was devoted to testimonies concerning the work of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association, by Mr. Leonard Courtney, secretary; concerning the Paris Anglo-American Y.M.C. Association, by Mr. Basil Hewer; concerning the Bombay Y.M.C. Association, by Mr. J. Morris, member of committee; concerning the Madagascar Association, by the Rev. A. S. Huckett, of the London Missionary Society. Speaking of his ten years' work in that country, Mr. Huckett said there had been a considerable growth of spiritual life amongst the people, who were living nearer to Christ than in former days. The Y.M.C.A. had contributed largely in bringing about this improvement. Delegates from the Tower Hamlets, Cork, Belfast, Cardiff, and Plymouth also spoke.

Mr. Mills, secretary of the English National Council, submitted its report. Since the reconstitution of that body substantial progress in organisation and development has resulted. In 1883 the Associations in England and Ireland numbered 188; in 1890 they have increased to 361; in 1883, members and associates numbered 29,214; in 1890, 51,702. In the same period the income of the Associations has increased from £30,259 to £64,641. In 1883 only 95 Associations reported the possession of reading-rooms, as against 233 this year; in 1883, 57 Associations maintained educational classes, now 117 do so; in 1883, 9 Associations reported gymnasiums, now 72. At the present time 143 Associations report the possession of athletic clubs. In 1883, 493 Bible-classes and religious meetings were held; in 1890, 688 Eighty-eight Associations reported one or more of their members having been sent forth into the home or foreign mission fields, or into the ministry, during the past year.

In the evening the Central Hall was filled with the general public, young men predominating, at a meeting for the furtherance of the national work. Lord Kinnaird presided. He said he rejoiced to see that Young Men's Christian Associations are into central positions in towns. Birkenhead was quoted as an instance. Those in the world who cater for young men don't go into back streets; neither should the Y.M.C.A. In England and Ireland they had only 51 paid secretaries. If they were in America they would have five times the number. All honour to the 234 honorary secretaries; but, unfortunately, some of them took holidays now and then; in fact, all kinds of things happened to honorary secretaries. More paid secretaries were urgently required.

Mr. Henry Armstrong, travelling secretary, in the midst of some interesting statistics, gave the present value of Association buildings in England as £326,000. This represented hard cash given by the Christian business men of England who believe in the Y.M.C.A. If the members are to fight successfully against the evils which ruin and oppress young men, the Association buildings, into which they desire to win their fellows, must be attractive and well-equipped—such as young men will be proud to come to and to invite their friends to visit. They need to be well provided in things temporal as well as spiritual to compete with the powers of hell; their snares are bright and clean and handsome. Mr. Armstrong proceeded to support the chairman's statement about paid secretaries, pointing out that there had only been an increase of six since 1882. There is a great need for fully qualified men. He trusted that the recent stir towards a more complete equipment, and a more thorough work would attract the attention of young men choosing their path in life to the glorious work for God presented in the Y.M.C.A. secretaryship. His short, bright address was full of practical points, graphically illustrated, and elicited hearty applause.

Mr. Robert Henderson Smith, travelling secretary for Scotland, pointed to the value of organisation. During the last eight years between sixty and seventy new Associations had been affiliated to the National Executive of Scotland, and they were adding new members at the rate of a thousand a year.

Mr. David A. Black, Belfast, whose speech was full of Irish humour, said that throughout Ireland there was a spirit of inquiry concerning the Gospel as much, if not more, from the Catholics as the Protestants. This, he believed, was mainly due to the efforts and agencies set on foot by the Y.M.C.A. With half a dozen more paid secretaries a splendid work could be accomplished.

Rev. H. Foster Pegg, M.A., vicar of St. Mary's, in compliance with a suggestion received from one of the secretaries, endeavoured in a brief address to combat the spirit of rationalism, which it was said was creeping into some of the Associations. Science, he said, was a kind of Witch of Endor, and she waved her wand and brought into the intellectual atmosphere sundry big words, such as "evolution," "law," "force," and "matter." But these must be looked steadily in the eye. Evolution, though in one sense a terrible word, was in another the grandest. None of these terms explained the creation of the world, however, but only told us something of the method by which God made it. Let them not be afraid of science. Science and religion were not antagonistic, for the same hand that wrote the Bible made the world. They might be walking along different paths, but the paths were bound to converge, and ere long religion would grasp the hand of science as they both bowed down before the cross of Christ.

THURSDAY.

A bright and hearty devotional meeting was conducted by Rev. Walter J. Mathams, Wycliffe Baptist Church. During the session which followed, the chair was occupied by Mr. Richard Wilkinson, of Belfast, who at once called upon Mr. William Brown, Edinburgh. He came as the bearer of a most hearty invitation from the Y.M.C.A. and fellowship union in that city to invite the British Conference to hold their annual meetings in Edinburgh in 1892. In 1891 no British Conference will be held, but the Triennal International Conference will meet at Amsterdam. On the motion of Mr. Newett (Manchester), seconded by Mr. McCann (Belfast), the invitation was unanimously and gratefully accepted. On the motion of Mr. Oatts (Glasgow), seconded by Mr. W. Hind Smith (London), Mr. George Williams, as president, was unanimously requested, in the name of the British Conference, to invite the International Conference of 1894 to meet in London to celebrate the Jubilee of the Young Men's Christian Association. In passing, it was intimated that in future the British Conferences would be held at a much earlier date in the year than the present, probably in June.

Mr. Samuel B. Hough, Birmingham, then read a paper on "The Work of a Y.M.C.A.: what it is, and how to do it." Amongst many were the following:—Although the work was widely extended, it had not yet taken hold of the young men of the nation as it might and should. Many regarded the Association with pity, and even contempt, as narrow and poor-spirited, not only in regard to religion, but also in all manly characteristics. It was the work of the Y.M.C.A. to undeceive and to win these young men. To this end, the intellectual, social, and physical sides of the work were most important adjuncts. Athletic sports, in which young Englishmen always would engage, greatly needed the purifying and elevating influence of robust Christianity and the men to exert that influence were surely the Y.M.C.A. members. The methods of doing Association work varied, but there were many points of agreement. The rooms should be clean, sweet, and comfortable and bright with flowers and pictures—but even these were not so vital as the quality of the workers and officirls, for the work was mainly done by personal influence. The appointment of a secretary was a most important matter. The Committee should be largely composed of young men, and should possess the confidence of the members. The opinion of the members upon all important points should be directly ascertained. A limit of age for active workers was suggested; the work was essentially one for young men by young men. The Association should support all movements for the improvement of the general condition of young men, such as early closing, &c. If an interest in the health and welfare of young men is evinced, more influence is gained in spiritual matters. As regards finance, if the work is being well done, support may be expected with confidence. Neighbouring Associations might in some cases be assisted by financial union, the poorer being helped by the richer.

Mr. David Dreghorn, of Glasgow, urged the importance of Bible study. He believed, too, that religion and intellectual culture should go hand in hand. The work of the Association was to build up the whole man: in proportion as that idea was acted upon would be the success of the Association.

Dr. Clark, Bessbrook, read an excellent paper (supporting each position with a Scriptural quotation), to show that the principles of the Association were securely founded. He drew some striking illustrations, based upon his professional experience.

A very animated discussion immediately ensued, thirty speakers from all over the country expressing their opinions in an hour and a half. We note the most salient features. Mr. Burn, London, accentuated the fact that the members, and not the secretary, formed the Association. One of the advantages of the American Associations was that the secretaries were learning to keep in the back ground and put the members forward. He also thought t the appearance and conditions of some sociation rooms was positively disgraceful.

. Fisher, North Liverpool, while earnestly irous to win young men to Christ, thought was a mistake to manifest the desire too arly in public. He thought thereby that ny young men were deterred from entering e Associations. (This position was strongly mbated.) Mr. T. Forsyth, Birkenhead, ked for an impromptu show of hands as to e desirability of introducing a smoking-room.
ie adverse manifestation was almost unani-
ous. Mr. Hunt, Harmondsworth, repre-nted a village Association, and desired to press upon the minds of those present the adiness of the villagers for the establishment
Y.M.C.A.'s. If country young men were

WON IN THEIR VILLAGES

r Christ they would strengthen the Associa-ons when they reached the towns. Mr.
OLLARD, Southwark, advocated careful atntion in transferring members. Mr. Bailey, rk, pleaded earnestly for the general estabshment of junior sections. Mr. Henry HITWELL, Birmingham, in reply to a criti-sm upon gymnastics, said the gymnasium was good thing in itself. It was better that a an should spend his evening in the mnasium than in the music-hall. In the rmer he was brought into contact with ristian men, and was within reach of bless-
g. Mr. McCann, Belfast, spoke of the high ne that Y.M.C.A. men had brought into hletic circles in Ireland.

Mr. Black, Belfast, said that if athletic ubs were consecrated to Jesus Christ a class men would be won who would make splend Christians. Then followed the noon prayer-eeting conducted by Mr. Fawckner, New-rt, Mon., who gave a very profitable exposi-on of Ps. xxiii. The delegates were enter-ined to dinner in the Central Hall by Mr.
OHN Wilson, after which they proceeded in akes to a garden party at Woodbroke, Selly ak, were they were hospitably entertained by
r. George Cadbury.

In the evening every seat in the Town Hall as filled, and many were standing. Never in e annals of the Association has such an mmense meeting of men only been gathered nder its auspices. The sight of upwards of 000 men, gathered, not for political or per-onal ends, but in

PROTEST AGAINST PREVAILING VICES,

as so thrilling and unique as to elicit an exression of gratified astonishment from every peaker and beholder. We hope to give a full eport of this notable gathering in our next ssue. We trust that Association workers will e encouraged to attempt and to expect similar reat things on future occasions.

FRIDAY.

After the devotional meeting, which was onducted by Rev. J. T. Butlin, B.A., vicar of
t. Clement's, resolutions of condolence with the amilies of the late Mr. W. Edwyn Shipton nd of the late Mr. R. C. L. Bevan were assed, and the secretary was instructed to uly forward them. Mr. Bevan was the first hairman of the Young Men's Christian ssociation.

Mr. E. J. Kennedy, London, then read a paper on "The attitude of the Y.M.C.A. towards the social questions of the day." The social questions contemplated in the paper were chiefly those which were the subject of consideration on the previous evening, intemperance, gambling, and impurity. The relation of the Y.M.C.A. to these questions turned upon the point whether separate organisations should be established, in connection with each Association, to promote reform in these matters, or whether the Association should direct attention to their primary work, and help forward these social questions by supporting the existing organisations which have taken these matters in hand. Mr. Kennedy advocated the latter plan; but his preference was by no means unanimously endorsed. Some speakers thought it was as reasonable to organise a White Cross Society in the Y.M.C.A. as to institute a gymnasium or an educational class; others deprecated the diversion of the energy of the members into matters of detail, rather than concentrating attention on bringing the Gospel to bear upon the hearts and consciences of young men. Another wise suggestion was that no hard and fast line should be laid down. In London, where thoroughly good organisations exist to battle with these vices, let them be supported; but in country places, where no such anxiliaries were available, local Associations might well form branch organisations.

Mr. Fisher, North Liverpool, introduced another social question in the matter of early closing. He advocated hearty sympathy and interest in all that concerned the welfare of shopmen.

Mr. Hind Smith commended the work of the Association in Ireland to the prayerful interest of the delegates. It was prospering most happily. A praise and testimony meeting was then conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, evangelist. Adjournment was then made to dinner, over which Mr. John H. Chance presided as host. This opportunity was embraced for a reference to Mr. Hind Smith's forthcoming tour in Australia, New Zealand, and India. Many friends had asked him to interview young men.

Afterwards votes of thanks were passed to the Birmingham Committee, including the Reception Committee and its chairman (Mr. Page), for their excellent arrangements for the Conference; to the Mayor of Birmingham for magnificent welcome to the delegates, to the hosts with whom the delegates had lodged, and to those who had entertained the delegates at dinner each day; and to Mr. Whitwell (secretray to the Birmingham Association), Mrs. Whitwell, and the staff of workers who had assisted in making the Conference a success.

MISSIONARIES FOR CHINA.

At the noon prayer-meeting on Tuesday at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., Mr. B. Broomhall, secretary of the China Inland Mission, attended with nine brethren about to leave for China. There are thirteen ladies now on the way, so that the staff of the Mission steadily increases. The present party was closely identified with the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Cormack was formerly secretary of the Dunfermline Association; Dr. Williams, a medical missionary, was a member at Aldersgate-street; Mr. Ridley was secretary at Wakefield; and Mr. Berg was president of the Jönköping Association. There were two other Swedish brethren, Messrs. Hahne and Gjerde; the latter acquired the English language in order to learn Chinese. The other members of the party were Messrs. Talbot, Goodall, and Marshall Broomhall, B.A. The last-named is a son of the venerable secretary of the Mission, and the fourth gift to God for China from Mr. Broomhall's family.

Short addresses were delivered by several outgoing missionaries, whose motives and hopes had the cordial sympathy of the meeting, by whom they were commended to the grace and blessing of God. Mr. Talbot stated that a desire to engage in foreign mission work was implanted in him by a Sunday-school teacher, at the time of his conversion twelve years ago. A pathetic interest attached to the occasion, because of the announcement by Mr. Broomhall that two more of the workers on the field had just entered into rest.

REV. Z. B. WOFFENDALE has been conducting a fortnight's mission at the King's Cross Theatre, and a ten days' mission at his church in Ossulston-street, Somers Town. These missions have been richly blessed. Two hundred and twenty persons have professed decision for Christ, and at the closing meeting, sixty-four of these gave in their names as applicants for membership in the Somers Town Presbyterian Church.

WORK IN SPITALFIELDS.

We were glad to understand, some time ago, that the young Earl of Shaftesbury had written to Mr. Charles Montague, hon. superintendent of the King Edward Institute and Schools, expressing great interest in the work which his grandfather had fostered, and enclosing a donation. The work carried on commenced as an ordinary ragged school more than forty years ago, and it has now developed into one of those many-sided enterprises for which London is remarkable. Among other things, an annual exhibition of work is held, the girls doing dressmaking, plain needlework, woolwork, &c., while the boys try their hands at carpentry, fretwork, art, and model-making.

A few days ago, the Hon. Evelyn Ashley, the eldest living son of the late Earl of Shaftesbury, presided at the distribution of prizes, when it transpired that the recreation of working for the annnal exhibition serves as a powerful counteractive to the pernicious amusements which invite the young on every hand. The success had been so great that on the evenings when the various classes for instruction were held, the rooms became literally hives of industry. Much of the work produced is now also of great excellence. The chairman referred tc the work done by his father as a ragged school pioneer, and then spoke of the growth or development of that enterprise. Half a century ago the schools were few, and were situated in the back slums, but now they had fine buildings, such as the one in which they met, and which deserved to be called a University. The King Edward Schools had shed light and comfort on all around. The chairman also referred to the service his father had rendered in regard to the Factory Acts; and to the difficulty which attended the passing of all reforms before ragged schools commenced their work. In regard to the statue to his grandfather to be erected at the Piccadilly Circus end of Shaftesbury Avenue, Mr. Ashley said that it was an unfortunate thing that a theatre, tavern, and similar places were named after the Earl his father. Lord Shaftesbury would not have shown any sympathy for such places; he rather laboured for such institutions as the King Edward Schools, which counteracted their baneful influences.

WORKING MEN AND THE LORD'S DAY.—Mr. John Burns and other Socialistic agitators are taking kindly to the holding of political or quasi-political meetings on Sunday. The movement, says The Record, is one which working men ought to resent. It is wholly without excuse, for the average artisan has at least as much leisure as busy professional or commercial men, and he has never yet shown any indisposition to attend political meetings upon other days in the week. It may be accepted as an axiom that the men who favour any encroachment upon the Lord's Day are no true friends of the working classes.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.—The 118th report of the Christian Community gives details of a varied work. Though now nearly 200 years old, the Society shows none of the signs of old age, but is, indeed, more vigorous than ever. The amount of work done last year may be gathered from a few figures:—Number of workers, 450; 15,000 inmates of 18 workhouses have been regularly visited on Sundays; 3,000 lodging-house inmates have been visited in various districts; 8 mission-halls have been supported, and are open nearly every night; 5,000 poor, homeless men were collected from the streets at midnight, sheltered and breakfasted; 14,959 breakfasts, teas, and cocoa suppers were given to the poor; 10,000 dinners, &c., were provided to School Board children; and 194,310 tracts were distributed. The bulk of the work may be judged from this sample. The Society is doing a silent though valuable work among the very poorest; its members are all voluntary workers, and the work is purely unsectarian. The Secretary is Mr. James Atkinson, 28, Enfield-road, Kingsland, N.

U.P. MINISTERS IN CONFERENCE.

An impressive and interesting Conference of United Presbyterian Ministers was convened last week in Bridge of Allan. The meetings, which extended from Monday to Wednesday, Sept. 22 to 24, were all held in the Hydropathic Establishment, where the whole of the ministers attending were put up. Precious memories of previous gatherings had brought brethren at their own charges from the remotest parts of Scotland. Considerably over a hundred were present at the opening service, and that number was increased to about a hundred and fifty on the following day. In former years, subjects closely personal to ministers were chosen; but, obedient to a general indication of opinion, the Committee selected a doctrinal subject, still touching immediately ministerial responsibilities, but of wider range. The topics were arranged progressively, so as to exhibit a somewhat complete view of the New Testament doctrine of the Holy Spirit in the Church.

Excluding the subdivisions under each head, the topics were as follow: (1) The Holy Spirit the Life of the Church. (2) Christ's Promise of the Holy Spirit to the Church—as a Spirit of Wisdom—a Spirit of Holiness—a World-convincing power. (3) The effusion of the Spirit in Pentecost. (4) The work of the Spirit in the Church. Rev. John Young, Home Secretary, presided, and among those who took part—in addition to not a few of the younger ministers—were some of the most representative men of the Church. Very welcome to all assembled was the presence of so many foreign missionaries on furlough. If in anything this conference differed from those of former years, there was less of direct heart utterance, and more of elaborate doctrinal statements. Still, the presence of the Spirit was profoundly felt, and in nothing more than in the liberty and power of prayer.

The Temperance Cause.

In Holland, Dr. Richardson's "Temperance Text-book" is eagerly read by the prisoners in the gaols.

It is stated, on good authority, that the prices paid for American breweries by the new English companies, lately formed, were considerably over the actual value, and that the shareholders will suffer accordingly.

Since April last, in accordance with the London County Council's General Asylums Committee, no intoxicating drink, as a daily ration, has been served to any patient in any asylum under the direction of the Council.

At Geelong, Victoria, at the end of last year, seventeen out of fifty-five public-houses were closed. The cases of drunkenness before the magistrates, during the six months January 1 to June 30, 1890, showed a reduction from those of the corresponding period of 1889, of about 37 per cent.

The fifty-fourth anniversary of the Western Temperance League has just been held at Frome. Sixteen counties in the West of England and South Wales are within the sphere of this organisation. A new agency among the educated classes has been begun, towards the cost of which one generous donor has given £100.

The centenary of the birth of Father Mathew the great apostle of temperance, will be celebrated in Cork on October 9 and 10. Sir John Pope Hennessy will pronounce the centennial oration, and an ode has been written expressly for the occasion by a well-known Irish poet. While he laboured Rome was indifferent to his work; now she is making preparations to do honour to his name.

In "Resting," a Sacred Song by S. Sydney Weatherley (Novello, Ewer & Co.), 2s. net, the faith of the Christian is made the subject for a very effective song, calculated to prove helpful to those who have dear ones "at rest." The music, while not at all difficult, is most appropriate to the spirit of the words. Indeed, the charm of the piece is its pleasing simplicity.

Letters to the Editor.

CHRISTIANS AND THE THEATRE.

Dear Sir,—In reference to the above, a little incident mentioned to me by one still living, who was formerly a clown at one of our large London theatres, may not be out of place. My informant, who has for years been a humble and faithful follower of Jesus Christ, and now has a business of his own, left the stage when he was converted, as—thank God—so many others have done also, and I believe many more would do, if only suitable occupation could be found for them elsewhere.

The incident referred to was as follows: In the early days of the movement for obtaining the use of theatres and-music halls for evangelistic services, a deputation of gentlemen waited on the manager of one of our largest London theatres, and asked him to let them have the use of the building on Sunday evenings for Gospel preaching. "Gentlemen," he said, "I quite understand your object, but may I ask you one question. You hope, by taking the theatre, to induce theatre-goers, and others who are not generally in the habit of attending places of worship to hear that which you desire may be the means of their conversion. May I ask you if—after they are converted—you would wish them still to attend the theatre on week nights as before?"

Of course we know what the answer was to this question. In two words, "Certainly not." "Very well then gentlemen, evidently your business and mine are diametrically opposed. If you succeed, I fail—Othello's occupation would be gone," and the manager respectfully bowed them out.

I was given the name both of the well-known manager and of the theatre, which, I am told, never has been used for evangelistic services.

My own experience has been—both for myself and many another young man—that theatre-going was the beginning of ruin, which, but for the wondrous grace of God in showing the danger, and in rescuing from it, might have been eternal. Oh, when will the Church learn that "Whatsoever is not of the Father is of the world," and that "because we are not of the world," and—in so far as we are not of the world—the world will hate the servant even as it hated the Master.

I am, yours in his service,

Algernon C. P. Coote.

SOUTH WALES.—Mr. T. M. Wintle, of Pontymoile, writes:—"The Bible Carriage is doing good work at Dowlais and neighbourhood; and the tent services at Sebastopol are being much used of God. We are greatly cheered."

MR. PHILIP COHEN, a converted Jewish evangelist, late of Russian Poland, now of Oxford, has been delivering addresses at the Temperance Hall, under the auspices of the "Workmen's Meetings," to large and attentive audiences. He explained, "Why he became a Christian."

MR. SPENCER WALTON is, we are glad to hear, decidedly better, although still suffering from sleeplessness. Acting under the advice of his doctor he has gone to the Smedley Hydropathic, Matlock, for further perfect rest and treatment, and has been ordered to abstain from active work for a few weeks longer. We are sure many of our readers will remember him and the Cape General Mission in prayer, and that his inability to address meetings will not decrease the practical interest shown.

GALASHIELS, N.B.—Mr. W. D. Dunn, evangelist, is preaching in the large town hall, which is crowded night after night with a people prepared by God to hear the message of salvation, and not a few are entering into the light of the Gospel. Mr. Dunn is here at the invitation of the Galashiels Home Mission, which was formed eighteen years ago, when Mr. Dunn and Mr. Scroggie first came here. Many of the ministers are standing by the evangelist in his work. Will your readers kindly pray for still greater things.—J. C. H.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON BIBLE TALKS.—On October 4, at three o'clock, Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., will commence a series of ten "Bible Talks" to young men at the City of London Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-st. The subject will be, "The Work of the Holy Spirit," divided as follows:—Oct. 4, Old Testament Allusions; 11, His Work in Inspiration; 18, His Relation to the Person of Christ; 25, The Baptism of Fire; Nov. 1, His Mission to the World; 8, His Ministry on the Church; 15, The Temple of the Body; 22, His Intercesions; 29, the Divine Teacher; Dec. 6, Our Power in Service. These meetings, which last just one hour, are open to all young men.

Obituary.

MRS. A. M. FERGUSON.

The death is announced of Mrs. Anne Ferguson for forty-six years the wife of Mr. A. M. Ferguson, senior proprietor and editor of The Ceylon Observer. Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson have given life-long support to the Baptist denomination in Ceylon, and missionaries of every Church going to or returning from the East were always welcome at their home in Colombo.

REV. DR. WILLIAMSON.

We regret to announce the death of Rev. Alexander Williamson, LL.D., the well-known explorer and missionary in China. He went to the East under the auspices of the London Missionary Society, subsequently becoming associated with the work of the United Presbyterian Church, and acting as agent for the Bible Society of Scotland. He rendered important service in connection with the recent Missionary Conference at Shanghai, and will be much missed on the field as a devoted labourer for God, and a sound adviser as to aggressive operations. Dr. Williamson was sixty years of age.

PROFESSOR JEAN RIGENBACH.

The removal of this learned and active servant of Christ has deprived the Bâle Missionary Society of its worthy President, and many evangelical societies of an earnest worker. He was in his 72nd year, and had studied at Bâle, Berlin, and Bonn. He started on his ministerial career associated with the then popular Hegelian School of Philosophy, but he very soon discovered that a negative system of theology did not satisfy the needs of his own soul, and he therefrom concluded that such preaching could not benefit his hearers. He, consequently, was soon found among the evangelicals, with whom he loyally laboured until the end.

REV. DR. RULE.

The death is announced of Rev. William Harris Rule, D.D., the oldest minister of the Wesleyan Methodist Connexion. The deceased laboured as a missionary in Malta, at Gibraltar, and in the West Indies, as well as in Spain, in which country he was the first Protestant missionary. While working in Spain he completed a translation of the Bible into the Spanish tongue, and later he was the pioneer of Wesleyan Methodism among the rank and file of the British Army, for whom he was instrumental in securing liberty of conscience and religious freedom. Dr. Rule was incited to take up this class of work while stationed at Gibraltar, where he saw some English soldiers flogged for attending a Methodist chapel. He was 88 years of age, and the author of several works of value to Bible students.

REV. HUGH McKELVY.

Much regret is felt on account of the death of this godly minister. At an early age deceased engaged in business at Belfast; but, desiring to engage in evangelistic work, he accepted an appointment as one of the General Assembly's colporteurs, and passed with great credit through Rev. Dr. Magee's training class in Dublin. He began his colportage work in Sligo, where he was in labours more abundant, and where he made many friends. At this time he was urged to study for the ministry, and with that view he became a student of the Assembly's College, and at the close of the session he entered on a course of evangelistic work in the neighbourhood of Belfast. From thence he passed over to Sunderland, where he was similarly employed, and from that place to Millwall, London, where he has just passed away at the age of thirty-three years. He was a most sincere and earnest man, and his early death is much lamented by those who knew him.

MR. J. S. HARRISON is, we regret to hear, suffering from extreme nervous prostration, and has therefore to abandon all meetings for at least three months to come. Prayer is requested for his recovery.

REV. J. F. T. HALLOWES' LIST of missionary engagements to the end of the year (for which he would request the prayers of Christians) are as follows:—Oct. 5-12, Baptist Chapel, Watford; Oct. 19-26, Hallfield Baptist Chapel, Bradford; Nov. 2-16, Countess of Huntingdon's Chapel, Tunbridge Wells; Nov. 23-30, Snow Hill Congregational Church, Wolverhampton; Dec. 7-14, Congregational Church, Marlborough.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 5.—Psalm CXLIX.

THIS Psalm, like the rest of these closing songs of Hallelujah, belongs to the days of Nehemiah and Ezra, when the long-restrained joy of the restored people broke into vigorous manifestation (Ezra vi. 22). The praises of the King are throughout the theme and substance.

1. We must not sing lonely songs. For this, if for no other purpose, we should frequent the meetings of God's people, to share the enkindlings of common worship.

2. Our first creation and our second; our making and re-making; our natural and our supernatural life, with all that belongs to them of provision and nourishment, suggest themes of constant praise.

3. The Kingship of Jesus is a matter not of terror, but of great and abounding joy. We never learn the secret of true joy till Jesus holds court in our hearts; then the joy bells ring, and the light feet pursue the fleeting hours, whilst the sounds of gladness attract outsiders to inquire the cause (Luke xv. 25, 26).

4. It is a solemn question with which to close each day, "Art thou pleased with me, O blessed Master?" And this is the one prayer for every morning, "May I walk to-day so as to please God!" (John viii. 29; Col. i. 10; Heb. xi. 5).

5. This may mean either that the saints already enjoy a foretaste of glory, or that they may be glad in anticipation of glory. But, though we devote our nights as well as our days to it, we shall never reach the limits of praise. The nights of the exiles' grief are exchanged for nights of song.

6. Whilst we praise God with our lips, let us never lay aside the sword, but imitate the servants of the good Nehemiah (Neh. iv. 17, 18). Then the devil will be resisted, the flesh crucified, and the world vanquished, to the music of unceasing adoration.

7. Not their vengeance, but God's. But the Divine method of vengeance was also nobly illustrated in the sending of a Pentecost on those who had been the murderers of the Lord (Acts ii. 23-33).

10. The law was very stringent in its denunciations of such as refused to acknowledge God (Deut. vii. 2, xxxii. 41). And there is coming a time when He shall put down all rule, and authority, and power; for He must reign. This Psalm may await the consummation described in Rev. xv. 2, 3. Then we will sing it, as Israel its song of deliverance on the shores of the Red Sea.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 6.—Psalm CL.

The last Psalm is a tumultuous outburst of praise. The sea of adoration is swept by mighty tempests of feeling, which roll the billows forward to break in thunderous acclaim upon the shore. "The Psalms," says Dr. Chalmers, "have their final and most appropriate outgoing in praise, that highest of all the exercises of godliness." "As the life of the faithful," says Hengstenberg, to whom we have often been indebted in these notes, "and the history of the Church, so also the Psalter, with all its cries from the depths, runs out in a hallelujah." "There is nothing in the Psalter," says Dr. Alexander, "more majestic or more beautiful than this brief but most significant finale, as if in emblematical allusion to the triumph which awaits the Church and all its members, when through much tribulation they shall enter into rest."

"We have the place (1), the theme (2), the mode (3-5), and the universality (6) of the praise to be presented to Jehovah. This Psalm is said by a Jewish tradition to have been sung by persons who came to present the first-fruits, while the Levites met them singing" (Ps. xxx.).

1. The sanctuary is the earthly temple; the firmament of his power the heavenly. Earth and heaven blend in common acts of praise. Every true act of worship on earth excites a response in yonder world—the home of praise.

2. For the enumeration of these we should turn to such recitals as Ps. cv., cvi., or to Col. i. 15-21.

3. We are not concerned as to the nature of these instruments. But let us remember that each of our emotions and faculties may be a musical instrument in the best sense. Praise Him with the sound of your love. Praise Him with hope and faith. Praise Him with meekness and patience. Praise Him with courage and strength. Praise Him in Christian work. Praise Him when tied by pain and weariness to a sick-bed.

6. Pull out every stop in nature's organ.

> Let the bright seraphim in burning row,
> Their loud uplifted angel trumpets blow.

Let the gnat make music with the vibrations of its wings. Let every creature which is in heaven, and on earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea be heard saying, "Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. Hallelujah! Amen."

THE BOOK OF PROVERBS.

THE title of this book is suggested by the first word, which is interpreted to mean "parable" or "proverb," and which appropriately describes the contents of the book. This method of instruction is very ancient, and, while specially adapted to the simplicity of the first ages, is also valuable for any age, however advanced. A proverb teaches truth in terse, pithy, sententious phrases, easily understood, and as easily remembered.

The authorship of these proverbs is attributed to Solomon (i. 1). In answer to his prayer (1 Kings iii. 9) God specially endowed him with wisdom, one outcome of which was his extensive writings (1 Kings iv. 29-34). He is said to have composed "three thousand proverbs"; in this book some of that vast number are collected and set in order under Divine inspiration.

The divisions of the book are clearly marked. The first part, chapters i. to ix., is chiefly addressed to the young man, who is warned against subtle and powerful temptations, and directed to the way of life. The second division, chapters x. to xxiv., is different in style, and contains counsel more appropriate to the man who is in the midst of business activity. There are no rules more calculated to make conscientious, industrious, and shrewd men of business than those which this portion contains. The third division, chapters xxv. to xxix., was compiled at a later date (xxv. 1). The book closes with the words of Agur (xxx.), and of Lemuel (xxxi.), two persons of whom nothing is known with certainty.

That such a collection of excellent counsels tending to produce practical piety should have been written by a man who so lamentably failed in his own life warns us against self-confidence. A man may preach to others, and yet sadly depart from his own teaching. The most brilliant gifts do not render a man secure. The best of saints need to "watch and pray."

The numerous New Testament references to this book place its canonicity beyond question. It is referred to by Jesus (xx. 20, Matt. xv. 4); by Paul (xxv. 21, 22, Rom. xxii. 20); John (iii. 11, 12, Rev. iii. 19); James (iii. 34, James iv. 6), and Peter (x. 12, 1 Peter iv. 8). These are only a portion of the references to this book contained in the New Testament, and are sufficient to assure us that a "Greater than Solomon" speaks through these words.

One striking feature of the book, which gives it special value, is the manner in which maxims that seem to refer to the affairs of this life are mingled closely with sentences that flash with beautiful Gospel teaching. This is a significant reproof to the too common custom of separating the sacred from the secular. There ought to be the closest possible connection between the two. A man of business need not be less devout, nor a man of true piety less business-like. Religion and common sense are not opposites. This book will teach us both.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 7.—Proverbs I.

The object of this book (2-6).—Superstition builds upon ignorance; true religion requires the exercise of the understanding. We must be made "wise unto salvation" (2 Tim. iii. 15-17). But salvation is more than safety; it means "justice, judgment, equity" (3). God aims at the formation of an upright and strong character. Holiness is very near akin to wholeness. "The simple" (4) are addressed. Over Plato's school were written the words: "Let no one who is not a geometrician enter." To Solomon's school of wisdom the simple, the foolish, the easily misled are invited. Is there anything significant in putting together "the simple" and "the young man" (4)? Unless the young man is willing to confess his simplicity, he is not likely to learn wisdom (1 Cor. i. 19, 20). To know that we know nothing is the first step to knowledge. The "wise man" (5) has not done learning. The best proof of his wisdom is his readiness to "hear" and to "increase learning." Even He who had "the tongue of the learned" still continued to hear (Isa. l. 4).

The lesson taught (7).—This one sentence comprehends the whole book. All that follows is but the branching out of this "fear of the Lord." Fear does not mean slavish, guilty dread; but reverence, love, obedience, trust, and a holy watchfulness against sin.

The application of this lesson (8-19).—The fear of God leads to obedience to parents (8, 9). This is "the first commandment with promise" (Eph. vi. 2). How significant that it should occupy the first position in this book! A young man who fails here cannot succeed truly in any other expression of the fear of God. "The instruction of the father and the law of the mother" are taken for granted. Have not some young men gone wrong for want of these? The best adornment for sons and daughters (9) is obedience to parental instruction. This fear, next, guards against evil companionships (10-19). The enticement of sinners (10) is certain. If they tempt to gross sin (11, 12) they will promise a great reward (13). The bait skilfully conceals the hook. Eve looked at the tempting fruit (Gen. iii. 6). Judas saw his thirty pieces of silver (Matt. xxvi. 15). But Solomon reminds us that there is destruction at the end (17-19). "Evil shall slay the wicked" (Ps. xxxiv. 21). The tempter keeps this out of view; wisdom reveals it. Our duty is "consent not" (10, 15). There is no guilt until we do. If we sin, the blame rests not with sinners for enticing, but with us for consenting. A bird is not wise enough to avoid the net spread in its sight (17); we must not act with equal folly.

Wisdom's message (20-33).—The cry (20), the place (21), and the promise (23), all recall John vii. 37-39. We cannot fail to recognise the voice of Him who was afterwards called "the wisdom of God" (1 Cor. i. 24. Comp. also viii. 22 with John i. 1). Wisdom expostulates (22), calls to repentance (23), promises the Spirit (23), and enforces all with solemn warning (24-32). The rejection of the message of Wisdom exposes to fearful doom, which will have a retributive character. The punishment recalls the sin, and grows out of it as the plant out of its seed (32). This is New Testament teaching also (Luke xiii. 24-29; and John vii. 34). As the oak is in the acorn, so the punishment is in the sin. The contrast (33) further strengthens Wisdom's appeal. Safe dwelling (Deut. xxxiii. 12) and freedom from fear (Ps. cxii. 7) belong to those who pay heed to Wisdom's voice.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 8.—Proverbs II.

The attainment of wisdom (1-6).—How remarkably God's readiness to give (6) is connected with man's diligence in acquiring (1-4). Though God gives liberally, only they who "gather" (Ps. civ. 27, 28) possess. "Receive" (1), not on, but into the heart (Luke viii. 15). "Hide" (1), so as to have them for constant use. Not in the memory only, but in the heart, like Mary (Luke ii. 19). See Ps. cxix. 11. "If thou criest" (3).—Prayer is as needful as hearing. God is the only teacher of wisdom, and He will be inquired of (Ezek. xxxvi. 37; James i. 5). No amount of reading and study will suffice, if prayer is neglected. "If thou seekest" (4).—Diligent, patient searching must accompany prayer. The treasures of the Divine Word, like those of the earth, do not lie upon the surface. The miner's toil is needed (John v. 39). No labour is more profitable. Success is certain (5, 6).

Practical piety (7-9) results from the attainment of wisdom. The way of uprightness (7) is not without its dangers. But it is a perfectly safe and sure way, because the Lord is there known as our "buckler" (7), and He "keeps" and "preserves" us. To forsake his paths is to lose his protection, and become a prey to our enemies.

From a twofold temptation (10-20) wisdom saves us. But only as it occupies its right place, and is our delight (10; Ps. cxix. 103; Jer. xv. 16). It then becomes "discretion." Obedience to the Divine Word makes us bold to reject the word of the tempter. Was not this the secret of our Lord's victory (Matt. iv. 1-10)? The first tempter is "the evil man" (12). One of the most alarming features in his description is the hint that he once knew something of "the paths of uprightness" (13). His sin is against light; and, not content with becoming evil himself, he seeks to corrupt others, even the young! Wisdom will keep young men out of "the way" (12) of such. Contact with them is injurious. The second tempter is "the strange woman" (16), who also has heard, and forsaken good counsel (17). To such persons past memories are often so painful that they are urged on to greater wickedness. She becomes the murderer both of herself (18), and of those who are won by her flatteries (16, 19). To heed the voice of wisdom is the only way to be delivered from this snare, into which strongest men have fallen (20).

The ultimate security and triumph of the upright (21), in contrast with the destruction of the wicked (22), enforces the previous lessons. Let young men take head to these valuable counsels.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9.—Proverbs III.

The advantage of remembering God's law (1-4).—Much sin and sorrow result from forgetfulness; and this is a fault of the "heart" (1). The Holy Spirit is our remedy (John xiv. 26). He writes the law upon the heart (3). See Jer. xxxi. 13; 2 Cor. iii. 3. A twofold advantage follows: A long and peaceful life (2), which includes not only the present, but the future (Ps. xxiii. 6; 1 Tim. iv. 8). Favour with God and man (4).—Instances of this are Joseph in Egypt (Gen. xxxix. 2-4, 21-23); David in Israel (1 Sam. xviii. 12-15); Daniel and his three companions (Dan. ii., iii., vi.). Consistent and fearless obedience lived down reproach. Jesus was a more conspicuous example still (Luke ii. 52).

Wisdom again expresses itself in a godly life. (1) Dependence upon God (5-8).—The highest wisdom is the distrust of our own understanding. Joshua failed through forgetting this (Josh. ix. 14). David brought himself into trouble through the same mistake (1 Sam. xxvii. 1). To have a life Divinely, and therefore wisely directed, there must be whole-hearted trust in God, for "all things." Truly to "fear God" leads us to "depart from the evil" of distrusting God, and ministers to the health both of body and soul (8).

(2) Giving for the service of God (9, 10).—Our substance is his, and our highest joy in connection with it is to use it for Him. And in this matter giving is the condition of true getting. So the widow of Zarephath found (1 Kings xvii. 10-16). As we sow sparingly or bountifully so we reap (2 Cor. ix. 6). Be concerned to fill the Lord's treasury; He will fill the life with blessing (Mal. iii. 10). For an instance of the opposite of this, see Hag. i. 2-11.

(3) Enduring Divine correction (11-12).—No son, not even the Perfect Son, is exempt from it (Heb. xii. 7, v. 8). To "despise" is to make light of it, to refuse to regard it as from God, and to be unhumbled by it. To "be weary" is the opposite evil—that of feeling it too much, being crushed by it, failing to see the love that prompts it. "Not to feel thy evils would be inhuman; not to bear them, unmanly."

The value of wisdom (13-20).—Though there is correction in the way of wisdom, yet "happy is the man that finds it" (13). Solomon knew something of what silver and gold could purchase, but wisdom secures blessings these cannot buy. "The Pearl of greatest price" is more costly than rubies. Hence Paul's willing surrender of everything for this (Phil. iii. 4-8). Both the hands of wisdom are laden with blessing (16). Comp. 1 Kings iii. 11-13. Her ways, however, contrary to our own choice, are always pleasantness and peace (17). "Some ways of the world are pleasant, but not safe; others safe, but not pleasant"; wisdom's ways are both. "A tree of life" (18).—The way to this was closed by man's sin. He who is the Wisdom of God has opened it to us again (Sol. Song ii. 3).

Wisdom again recommended.—(1) Its advantages (22-26).—These are life to the soul, beauty to the character (22)—the grace of God imparts true grace to his people—safety to the walk (23), see Ps. cxxi.; and quiet to the heart (24-26). Just these are the benefits the Gospel imparts. (2) Its precepts (27-31).—It saves from niggardliness (27-28). Note that what we can impart to those in need is their "due." We owe love to all men. From malevolence (29), from strife (30), and from envy (31). It is because wisdom's precepts are of such a character that her ways are pleasantness and peace. (3) Its contrasts (32-35).—The contrasts of these verses are remarkable. For the wicked, abomination (32), a curse (33), scorn (34), and shame (35). For the righteous "his secret"=intimate fellowship (32), blessing (33), grace (34), and glory (35). And these all from the Lord, aggravating the woe of the wicked, and intensifying the joy of the righteous.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 10.—Proverbs IV.

1-9. What Solomon teaches is "good doctrine" (2). "Take heed what ye hear" (Mark iv. 24). The doctrine is to the life what the seed is to the plant. His teaching is enforced by his own godly training (3-4). "Beloved and taught."—Parental love should always express itself in concern for the children's heart piety (4), and for their continuance in wisdom's ways (5-6). The promotion (8), and the grace (9), and the ultimate glory which wisdom secures, are worth infinitely more than the worldly advancement and culture to which some parents exhort their children. Many a young man's soul has been ruined because he has been taught to "get on" rather than to "get wisdom."

10-17. As earnestly as David had taught Solomon, does Solomon now teach others. A godly character requires attention. "Hear"—"receive" (10), "Take hold of"—"retain" (13). The soul is not saved from guilt, nor the life from evil, without diligence. Though Gospel blessings are "without money and without price," there are so many difficulties in the way of obtaining them that we must "seek diligently" (Heb. xi. 6). An indolent hearer cannot be saved. There must also be watchfulness. The enemies are vigilant enough, and are zealous in their work of destruction (16-17). To escape their snares needs a careful avoidance of their company (14, 15). As you would shun a fever den, so shun the way of the wicked. The lamentable fall of Solomon gives special force to this warning (Matt. vi. 13 xxvi. 41).

18, 19. This is a striking contrast between "the path of the righteous," and "the way of the wicked." The righteous "come to the light" (John iii. 21); are "children of light" (John xii. 36); "walk in the light" (1 John i. 7). Light is the symbol of knowledge, holiness, joy; darkness of ignorance, sin, misery. The light of the just grows—they never reach the limit of their blessing here. Each accession of joy in God creates the longing, and gives the capacity for more until the midday splendour, when they "shine as the sun in the kingdom of their Father" (Matt. xiii. 43). Are you in the light? or is your way one of darkness, ever deepening towards the hopeless "outer darkness"?

20-27. Yet again the call to earnest attention is repeated. Note, the words of wisdom get from the ear (20) to the heart (21). Then note the connection between the heart (23), the lips (24), the eyes (25), and the feet (26). "Above all keeping" (margin) guard the heart. What that is determines what the life is (Matt. xv. 19; xii. 34, 35). There is only one way of keeping it (Phil. iv. 7).

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11.—Proverbs V.

The subtilty and the strength of the particular form of temptation with which the wise man deals justifies the earnestness of his renewed appeal (1, 2). The Word of God in the heart (Ps. cxix. 11) is the only protection against this vice.

What a contrast between the beginning and the end of sin! As "the honeycomb" (3) at first. For is not all sin presented to us in its most attractive light? Where passion is strong, how great the temptation to present gratification. But the "end—bitter as wormwood," &c. (4, 5). This is skilfully concealed, but the wise man discloses it. "The pleasures of sin" are but "for a season"; the bitterness (4), the death (11), the accusing conscience (11-14), point forward to the eternal world. While all this is terribly true of the special form of sin here described, it is not less applicable to all sin. To keep the words of wisdom in the heart, and to make use of them as our defence (7) is the only way of safety (Matt. iv. 4, 7, 10). Forsake the Word, and you are as a man in the midst of the battle unarmed.

The opposite of this is enforced by the pure joys connected with chastity (15-20). Enjoy what God has given with thankfulness as the best corrective for unhallowed passion. He does not deny to us the pleasures of sin without giving something better far.

And who would dare thus to sin in the very presence of an Omniscient God, who carefully sees, and will not fail to judge every secret thing (21; Eccles. xii. 14)? Every sin tends to hopeless bondage (22; John viii. 34), and leads to death (23; Matt. vii. 13).

HOMERTON RAGGED SCHOOL AND GOSPEL MISSION.—This agency, which is twenty-two years old, has its headquarters in John-street, Homerton. Both sexes and all ages are reached by a variety of means. The work, which is described in a report recently issued, is not easy in the midst of a large working class population; but many evidences of God's favour have been witnessed. The hon. sec. is Mr. Henry E. Shaw, 15, Muston-road, Mount Pleasant-lane, Upper Clapton, London, E.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, October 12.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.—LUKE xxii. 7-20.

GOLDEN TEXT: 1 COR. xi. 25.

THIS lesson brings us to the last night of our Lord's life. Godet gives the following as the most probable order of events during the Passion Week: "The entry into Jerusalem on Sunday, the purification of the temple on Monday, the captious questions put to Him on Tuesday, and the prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem (xxi.) on the evening of that day, the temple scene, related John xii., on Wednesday; and Thursday was spent in retirement at Bethany with his disciples."

The Passover Feast in celebration of the Israelites' deliverance from Egypt (Exod xii.) was held in the first month—Nisan—from the 15th to the 21st. In preparation for the feast, the lamb was sacrificed on the 14th. The Jewish day began in the evening, about 6 o'clock. At the time of this lesson the evening of the 14th was about to commence. Or, as we should say, Thursday afternoon was just growing toward evening. Before the evening of the next day "the passover must be killed" (7). The words have a new meaning. They apply to Him of whom every lamb slain had been a type. And the service, which was a memorial of a past deliverance, was about to shade off into another feast, commemorating a greater deliverance still.

Preparation for the Feast (8-13).—Jesus had no home in Jerusalem—another indication of his poverty. He keeps the feast in a borrowed guest-chamber. A strange commission (10).—On the part of Jesus it indicates supernatural knowledge. "On that evening every father, according to Jewish custom, had to repair to the fountain to draw pure water with which to knead the unleavened bread." That the two disciples should meet such a man was therefore likely, but Jesus knew that they would meet the right man, and be conducted to the right house. On the part of the disciples it required the obedience of faith. If they had reasoned about it they would have found it easy to disobey. How like a fool's errand it appeared! "They found as He had said" (13). His word, however unlikely, never fails. Do not fear to do an apparently foolish thing at his command. Did not their obedience give them fresh thoughts of his power and wisdom? Besides which, it taught them that Jesus had some disciples even in Jerusalem.

The Passover Feast (14-18).—It was after, or in connection with this that the Lord's Supper was instituted. The ritual of the Paschal Feast is variously described by different authors. The following is Godet's account. First step: After prayer, the father passed round a cup full of wine, saying, "Blessed be Thou, O Lord our God, King of the world, who hast created the fruit of the vine!" Next there were passed round bitter herbs, recalling the sufferings of the Egyptian bondage. These were dipped in Charoseth—a sweet sauce, made of almonds, nuts, figs, and other fruits. Second step: The father circulates a second cup, and explains the meaning of the feast. Third step: The father breaks a piece of the unleavened cake, dips it in the sauce, and eats it with a piece of the Paschal lamb. Each one follows his example. Then the third cup is distributed, called the cup of blessing. Fourth step: The father distributes a fourth cup; then the Hallel is sung (Ps. cxiii.-cxviii.). It will be well to give the scholars some description of this feast.

Note the Saviour's deep emotion (15). Joy and grief mingle in this utterance. The presence of Judas, and the anticipation of the cross explain the grief. But He had joy in fellowship with his disciples, in observing an ordinance of Divine appointment, and in looking forward to the feast which should grow out of it. Note also his hopeful references to the future (16, 18). The time of his enemies' seeming triumph was at hand; but Jesus looks beyond that, and sees his own kingdom coming in power. These words suggest the "till He come" in 1 Cor. xi. 26.

The Lord's Supper (19-20).—The institution of this was probably connected with the second and third stages of the Paschal Feast. Hence Paul calls the cup by the name "cup of blessing" (1 Cor. x. 16), which was also given to the third cup in the feast. Have you wondered what the Lord's Supper means? Has it seemed a strange, meaningless Service? Learn something of its meaning. (1) It commemorates the death of Jesus (Golden Text).—The st important part of his history was not his —with its spotless purity, its words of wisdom, works of power—but his death. His great work s accomplished by dying. (2) It shows the pain-ness of his death.—He died by blood-shedding m every pore during the Garden agony, from thorn-pressed brow, from hands and feet and e. The cup tells us this. And the bread oken speaks of his broken body (Isa. liii. 5). That He died for others.—"For you" (19, 20). recalls love that was "stronger than death." hat we deserved, He consented to bear, in order t we might live. The Golden Text reminds us t it (4) anticipates his coming again. It looks ward as well as backward. The memory of hat He suffered, and the hope of coming glory e connected.

What an important feast it is! Are you able to rtake of it? It is not for adults only. Even a ild, who trusts Jesus as his Saviour, and looks for s second coming, may partake. All who love im may thus remember Him.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Tidings have been received of the death of Rev. T. Harvey, of the C.M.S. College, Ningpo, China. Mr. arvey, who was twenty-nine years of age, died while oyaging from Shanghai to Yokohama, on August 19, x days after his marriage.

The Bishop of Exeter has appointed Rev. Worthing-n Jukes, of Tiverton, to be vicar of Shobrooke, evon. Mr. Jukes was for many years a missionary the Church Missionary Society at Amritzar and eshawar, in the Punjaub, and rendered good service as int translator of the Scriptures into Pushtu.

A branch of the Church of England Zenana Mis-onary Society has been formed in Melbourne to work connection with the parent Society. Hitherto Rev. . B. Macartney has worked on its behalf single-anded. Now a committee has been formed to take it p. The Society has at present 488 agents at work.

The Archbishop of York is seriously unwell, and has een ordered to take complete rest for a time. Great isappointment is felt that he is thus prevented from ccupying his position of president of the Church ongress, which assembled in Hull on Tuesday. The ishop of Durham is acting as president in the Arch-ishop's absence.

As a result, says The Victorian Churchman, of the ission held by Rev. G. C. Grubb in Napier, N.Z., a veekly "Bible-reading," conducted by the Bishop, is eld every Wednesday afternoon. The attendances are arge and catholic in character, Churchmen, Presby-erians, Baptists, Methodists, and Plymouth Brethren neeting together on the most friendly terms.

Rev. J. Vernall, C.M.S. missionary, Lagos, West Africa, addressing a meeting at Macclesfield a few days ago, referred to the Soudan belt across Central Africa, in which one hundred and ninety-five distinct unwritten languages and forty-nine dialects were spoken, and declared that if the country was really to be touched by missionary enterprise they would want one thousand five hundred missionaries. Dwelling on the results of missionary labour Mr. Vernall observed that in 1845 the Church Missionary Society went first to the Yoruba country, which was on the mainland opposite the island of Lagos, and that now there were 16 ordained native pastors, 92 lay workers, 8000 baptized converts, 42 schools, and 2000 scholars. In Lagos they had a self-supporting church of 1900 members, which had raised several hundred pounds per annum for the native pastor fund.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Mr. R. Milne, late of Dundee, was ordained last week to the pastorate of South Kensington Presbyterian Church, in succession to Dr. Verner White.

Mr. George Wales has been ordained as a lay missionary to China in Highbury Church (Dr. Edmond's), of which he was a member. Mr. Wales received ordination as an elder.

An interesting meeting in connection with Clapton Sunday-school took place on Sunday week, when Miss Reid (sister of the pastor, Rev. W. Douglas Reid, M.A.), who is going to take charge of the girls' school of the China Inland Mission at Chefoo, gave an address on the needs of China.

Children's Day, by appointment of the Synod, will be observed in the Presbyterian Churches throughout England on October 19, when ministers will give a foremost place to the spiritual interests of young people. A circular, signed by the joint-conveners, Principal Dykes and Dr. Monro Gibson, speaks of the good work already accomplished by the Church's Committee on the Instruction of Youth in the way of fostering Bible-reading habits in the home, encouraging catechism learning, of giving directions to Bible-classes, of testing and rewarding the advanced study of Scripture, of qualifying Sunday-school teachers, and testing the results of their work, as well as improving the primary education given in the Presbyterian day schools.

Call Accepted.—Mr. C. F. Fleming to Newport-road Church, Middlesborough.

METHODIST.

Arrangements have been completed by the Free Methodists for holding a great united missionary demonstration at Newcastle-on-Tyne, which will include all the churches of the Newcastle and Gateshead circuits.

This year the Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists made a united attack upon Stanhope fair. The meeting was held in the Market-place, where numbers of showmen, stall-keepers, hobby-horse and round-about men, and others of a similar class gathered to hear the Gospel preached by working men of Weardale.

The death is announced of the widow of Rev. R. B. Lyth, of York, in her 80th year. Her life has been the romance of a missionary heroine. In 1836 she went out with her husband, a Wesleyan missionary, to the Friendly Islands, and for nineteen years laboured among cannibals, living a daily life which was a Gospel those savages could not resist. Subsequently she spent eight years with her husband in New Zealand and Gibraltar.

SALVATION ARMY.

A fresh contingent of officers is being prepared to proceed to South America, to assist in the Army's work in that country.

The Queensland Government have followed the example of Victoria and New South Wales, and have placed £100 a year on the estimates as a grant from the State for the Army rescue work in Brisbane.

The Mayor of Rojkjobing, Denmark, personally arrested the Captain of the Army there for keeping on a meeting after 9 p.m. The inhabitants of the town were indignant, and would not disperse until a definite promise had been given that the Captain would be released.

Commissioner and Mrs. Booth-Tucker have been successful in securing a large number of donations towards the £10,000 they are endeavouring to raise for the Army's work in India. During October they purpose visiting Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, Bristol, Plymouth, Exeter, Bournemouth, Eastbourne, &c.

The police authorities at Galle, Ceylon, seem to have a strong antipathy to the Army. A complaint was recently lodged by a resident in the town, who alleged that his horse had been frightened by the beating of the drum, although the Salvationists say that at the time they were in another street altogether, and that the drum had not been played in Bazaar-street or on the Esplanade. The magistrate gave the following decision: "You are fined 25 rupees each; and, of course, I know that you will not pay, and Government can't undertake to feed you, so this drum will be kept here till you pay the fine. Ultimately, however, the Secretary of the Court announced that they were sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment. There were four prisoners, one of whom is only twelve years of age.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Men's Own Sunday Afternoon Meetings—a movement in connection with Rev. W. Evans Hurndall's East London work—were commenced on Sunday week in the great hall of the Bow and Bromley Institute, Bow-road, E.

Rev. Henry Coley, on Sunday week, commenced his ministry at Park Chapel, Camden Town, as co-pastor with Rev. Joshua C. Harrison. In his morning discourse he referred in terms of affection and respect to the forty years' labour of the senior pastor, Rev. J. C. Harrison.

Special services have been held in connection with the opening of a mission chapel, which has been built by London-road Church, Derby, for the further development of its mission-work in Newtown, Osmaston, a rapidly-growing suburb. Rev. J. P. Williams, pastor of the parent church, was the preacher.

Spensley Hall—a new mission-hall, built under the auspices of Abney Church, Stoke Newington (Rev. W. Spensley, pastor)—has been opened. The hall will accommodate 250 adults. The building also includes an infant schoolroom, a soup-room and kitchen, vestry, &c., The total cost is about £1240. It is opened entirely free from debt.

Resignations.—Rev. B. W. Adams, the Countess of Huntingdon's Church, Basingstoke.—Mr. E. Child, Bodicote, the charge of the Banbury villages.—Rev. J. H. Deex, Norwood-green Church, near Halifax.—Rev. S. G. Jowett, the Tong and Windhill Churches, Yorks.—Rev. J. M. Richards, the Welsh Church at Greenfield.

Calls Accepted.—Mr. D. G. Evans, of Maenygroes, to the United Churches of Trewen, Bethesda, and Bryngwyn, Cardiganshire.—Mr. H. Bevan, of Abergwaun, the New English Church at Maindee, Newport, Mon.—Rev. J. Gwyronydd Evans, late of Tufnell-park, London, the joint churches of Sardis and Saundersfoot, near Tenby.

BAPTIST.

A new church at Rochester, to seat 300 persons, for the congregation under the pastorate of Rev. G. A. Miller, has been opened. There are now sixty members in fellowship, and the prospects of the church are cheering.

The congregations at Hope-street, Birmingham, have greatly enlarged under Rev. Peter T. Stanford (a coloured minister). During the first six months of his pastorate 72 were received into fellowship, and more in the following year. Mr. Stanford proposes to found a branch church in Priestley-road.

Rev. F. T. B. Westlake has concluded his first year as pastor at Radcliffe. During the twelve months the congregations have very largely increased, and there has been an increase of twenty-four members, mostly by baptism. Special sermons to young women, men, and miners have uncomfortably crowded the building. By special request the pastor has preached to working people in the large town hall. The prayer-meetings and inquirers' classes are well attended.

Rev. J. Thomas, the newly elected pastor of the church at Budleigh Salterton, having received from the church worshipping at Ebenezer Congregational Chapel a unanimous invitation to take the pastorate, has accepted the same, the church having decided to constitute themselves into a "Union Church."

Resignations.—Mr. John Battersby, the church at Christchurch and East Parley, Hants.

Calls Accepted.—Rev. J. Perry, of East Dulwich, to Stepney Chapel, King's Lynn.—Rev. W. Ruthven, of the Tabernacle, Willingham, St. Clement's Church, Norwich.—Rev. H. W. Meadow, pastor of the village churches at Wolston and Dunchurch, to Castle-hill, Warwick.—Mr. E. Ashford Smith, Bristol College, to Bovey Tracey.—Rev. W. B. Nicolson, of Broughty Ferry, to Kirkintilloch.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Dr. Magee, bishop of Peterborough, during his recent visit to Ireland, preached in the parish church of Meevah, where his father was incumbent more than half a century since.

The annual Conference of the Church of Ireland Young Men's Society was held in Belfast last week, and among those who took part in the proceedings was Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe.

Rev. F. T. Snell, who, during the last two and a half years, has rendered good service to the Baptist cause in Guernsey, where he founded All Saints' Church, has been compelled through ill-health to resign the pastorate; he is about to leave for America. Rev. G. H. Harris has undertaken the pastorate.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken, assisted by Rev. George Peters (of Liverpool), is to commence a mission in Armagh on Sunday next. Mrs. Crouch will specially address women. The Dean of Armagh, Dr. G. A. Chadwick, has issued an earnest preparatory address, in which he calls for prayer for blessing upon their efforts.

There is no cessation of opposition on the part of the Roman Catholic portion of the population to the open-air services in Arklow. About sixty extra police have to be brought into the town every Sunday. During the time of the service nothing can be heard but the blowing of fog horns and other unearthly noises.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Southport, Rev. W. H. Sargent, since 1832 in the Wesleyan ministry, and formerly governor and chaplain of Kingswood School.—Rev. Thomas Rogers, minister of the West (Established) Church, Fraserburgh.—Mr. Joseph Chatwin Parry, for many years resident in India, an active Christian worker.—Rev. Joseph Kendall, Free Methodist minister, Blyth.—While in the pulpit, Rev. Joseph Binns, Wesleyan minister, Southport.—Rev. W. Robertson, parish minister of Sprouston, N.B.—Mr. Samuel Studd, of East Dereham, for over fifty years a Methodist local preacher.—Rev. Peter Macfarlane, senior pastor of the U.P. church, Rothesay, Bute.—Rev. Thomas Nightingale, supernumerary Wesleyan minister, Bristol. Rev. C. B. Lewis, formerly a Baptist missionary in Ceylon and in Calcutta.

Appeals.

Rev. F. J. Hazzard (14, Lawrence-road, Bow, E.), whose work among East-end poor is well known to many of our readers, solicits help to enable him to carry on his many agencies with more efficiency. Among others a Workmen's Home is in contemplation.

Zenana Medical College, 58, St. George's-road. S.W.—A loud cry has come to us from Armenia. An Armenian pastor's daughter has entered our college to gain medical knowledge, in order to return to work among her countrywomen. Incited by her example, three other ladies wish to follow her, and join her for the same purpose. They are poor, and quite unable to pay for their training. We have not funds at our disposal to grant their request. Will not some of the Lord's people come forward and give us the means to answer the earnest entreaties of these four Armenian ladies?—G. DE G. GRIFFITH.

Christian Police Association.—At the Police Seaside Home, 51, Clarendon-villas, West Brighton, many of the visitors are now suffering from various injuries received in the course of their difficult and arduous duties, some being completely invalided. It is desirable that a bath chair should be provided for such cases, so as to enable them to benefit by the sea air. Illustrated papers, religious periodicals, &c., would also beguile the tedium of the long winter evenings. A police reading-room and mission-house has been also opened at 36, Trinity-square, London, S.E., for which gifts of furniture, kitchen utensils, and a harmonium would be gratefully received by Miss Johnson.

London Children in the Country.—During the summer the Sunday School Union has sent into the country for a fortnight's holiday nearly 1200 children, who were sadly in need of change and fresh air. Now the Union regrets to find itself prevented from continuing this good work, in consequence of a deficiency of nearly £150. Applications are still being made, which the committee are unable to comply with. Many of the children sent away come from some of the poorest homes in this great city, others from homes of terrible misery and want. Further information may be had from the hon. sec., Mr. FRANK CLEMENTS, Sunday School Union, 56, Old Bailey, E.C.

THE MAHARAJAH OF TRAVANCORE has given a donation of 5000 rupees to the funds of the London Missionary Society, which has a large number of of missio stations within his dominions.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1890.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O.Orders, not by stamps.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

The Herald of Mercy.

A MONTHLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE PEOPLE.

CONTAINS:

NARRATIVES, POETRY, CHOICE EXTRACTS, ANECDOTES, PAGES FOR THE YOUNG, &c.

Contents of OCTOBER Number.

"Some atonement must be made!"
"The Lord is thy Keeper."
"God sees to me."
A Place of Idols and Dog Ovens.
POETRY: The First Missionary.
Love makes it light.
CHILDREN'S PAGE: An Honest Boy.
How to spend your evenings.

WITH NUMEROUS ENGRAVINGS.

"This 'HERALD' ought to be specially welcome. The illustrations that abound on every page will make Gospel truth attractive to the eye as well as to the heart, and the simple poetry by different writers ought to help many weary souls. We most heartily wish 'God speed' to 'The Herald of Mercy.'"—Congregational Magazine.

"Few periodicals succeed in preserving their original fervour as 'The Herald of Mercy.' The editor has gathered around him a staff of writers who are animated by the same spirit which shone so brightly in Duncan Matheson. Primarily designed for humble homes, 'The Herald' is sure of a welcome in the mansion as well as the cottage."—Christian Leader.

OLD NOTATION. Demy 8vo., Containing 95 Pieces.

Tinted Covers	1s. 6d.
Cloth Limp	2s. 0d.
Cloth Bevelled Boards, Red Edges	2s. 6d.

"The Male Choirs throughout the country will welcome this selection. Mr. Sankey has given in this volume many new and a good number of old favourites. . . . Nothing is more effective in a Gospel meeting than a well-rendered chorus by male voices, and Y.M.C.A.'s would do well to organise local choirs, and introduce a few of these pieces at their open-air and other gatherings."—The Christian.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

SEVERE BRONCHIAL ASTHMA—CASE at ST ALBANS.

Miss S., who does not wish her name to be mentioned in print (but given only to any bond fide patient, who may enquire), applied to me for medicine and advice, in October last. She had then been four months under constant treatment without any benefit.

This asthma was brought on by bronchitis, which had troubled her for four years. The cough was now very bad, both night and day, with heavy and green expectoration. The breathing was distressing, with spasms. Constant pain in the chest. Secretions all wrong. Flushings were frequent, with great heats. Had been getting weaker as well as losing flesh.

The patient followed my instructions, and was speedily relived. A lady friend, writing for her, March 25th last, says:—"She was very, very ill in October last: but after she took your medicine she rapidly recovered, and has since been wonderfully well. We trust you may be spared for many years to work in God's service."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

"The Christian" Bible Readings.

BEING NOTES AND READINGS ON THE FIVE BOOKS OF MOSES.

"This remarkably cheap volume is a reprint of 'Notes and Readings,' which appeared in the pages of 'THE CHRISTIAN.' For Sunday School Teachers who have little time and less money, nothing could be more welcome. A commentary of this sort is within the reach of every teacher."—General Baptist Magazine.

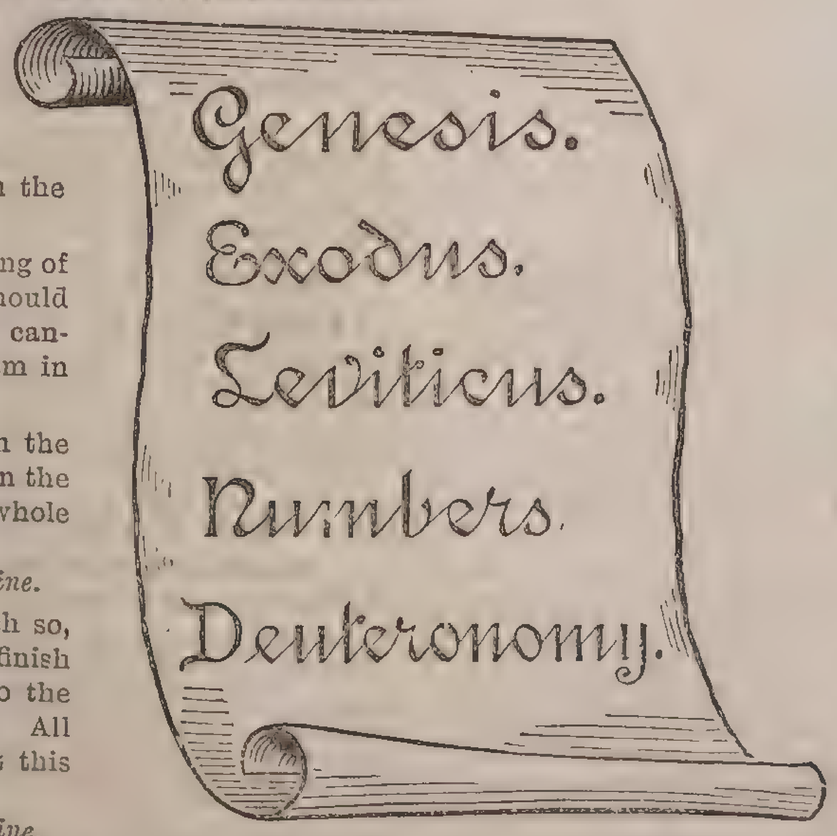
"A series of useful notes to accompany the reading of the Pentateuch. If any of our Bible-class friends should be thinking of studying this part of God's Word, they cannot do better than accept the guidance proffered them in this volume."—The Quiver.

"Industry and skill are evident on every page in the selection of the salient incidents for comment, and in the marshalling of really important information; while the whole is suffused with the evangelical spirit."

Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

"We are quite charmed with this volume: so much so, that when we commenced to read it we were obliged to finish it; it was so fascinating. It is a valuable addition to the literature already published on the Old Testament. All who want to understand the Pentateuch should get this book and study it carefully."

Irish Congregational Magazine.



"The book is intended to be used by Bible readers as a work of reference, and appears to have been compiled with a good deal of thought."—The Bookseller.

"The 'Readings' are short, simple, and lucid helps to Bible study. Admirable comments for family worship and private devotion. Used well, they will give 'light on the daily path.'"

The Cambridgeshire Congregational Magazine.

"This book is the first instalment of a course of 'Notes and Readings,' which it is intended to continue through the whole Bible. This first part covers the five books of Moses. It combines the instructive with the practical, and while unpretentious in form, contains a great amount of information. . . . We can cordially recommend the work to preachers and teachers, and all who desire intelligently and profitably to study the Word of Life.—Primitive Methodist.

"The Book on Birds seems to me entirely charming."—JOHN RUSKIN.

"There is an elevating and spiritual tone throughout every page of the little book; and the perusal of it will furnish many enduring lessons for good."
The Presbyterian.

"This book is beautiful both inside and out. The illustrations are excellent, while the lessons taught from the Word of God abundantly illustrate how rich the Bible is in making even the commonest things yield important truth. This book ought to be a treasure in every household."
Christian Commonwealth.

"The writer aims at leading the children to 'look through nature up to nature's God.' It will make a charming Sunday-school reward."—The Record.

Author of "Thy First Love"; "John, whom Jesus Loved"; "Behold, I stand at the Door and Knock," &c., &c.

"Just think for a moment what a marvel of divine wisdom and loving-kindness the Domestic Constitution is. How wonderfully and how graciously God has bound us together, by ties of parental, filial, brotherly, sisterly love, that knit the closer for their very tenderness! I believe there are few things that bring out more clearly what is in the heart of God. If the heavens declare His glory and the firmament showeth His handiwork, the family constitution does so even more. In that constitution God has assigned you mothers a special place under Him, and has committed to you a special trust, in educating those children for eternity. In the mere sight of a child, if only we have true eyes, there is something awe-inspiring. That feeble, helpless thing—that draws its life from yours, that lies and nestles in your lap, folded round with your love and sheltered from every wind that blows—what it may one day become! You look down into its eyes, as it opens the fringed lids: what a world of mystery, and fear, and hope, is there! What possibilities of being! Can you guess what passions and forces are there in embryo? Can you guess what those little hands will do? Can you guess into what grandeur of glory or of woe that life may yet expand?"—EXTRACT

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portraits and sketch of General and Mrs. Booth, of the Salvation Army.

We trust that many of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd will be able to call and congratulate them on the completion of their first decade of daily work on behalf of young people engaged at theatres. Their invitation to an "At Home" on Thursday, 16th inst., will be found on p. 26.

It is painful in the extreme to read the criticisms of some present-day progressionists. A correspondent of The British Weekly a fortnight ago spoke of having in his younger days heard much in Wesleyan Methodism of "blood-curdling references to the blood." This language was very suitably rebuked last week by Dr. Weymouth, who said of the Methodist preachers of the last generation:—

> They were men who delighted to remember and to tell how the blood of Jesus "cleanseth from all sin," and to recount the virtues of "the precious blood of Christ as of a lamb without blemish and without spot," apart from which there is no hope of salvation for us. They would dwell, moreover, on the necessity of our drinking (spiritually) of that same blood. Perhaps it is that which "curdled" the blood of Mr. W. Lile Stone. But these words (John vi. 53-56) fell from the lips of our adorable Saviour Himself! Are his words to be scoffed at and made the subject of a ghastly joke?

We heartily endorse these words. Those who are offended by "the blood" come very near to companionship with blasphemers. There is nothing harrowing in that view of Christ which regards Him as the great offering for sin; there is, however, much that is humbling, and here the fleshly mind affects indignation. A loving proclamation of Christ as He who "poured out his soul unto death," with assurance that "we have redemption through his blood," is good news, because it shows the way to God. We would that "the blood" were in the experience of all Christians all that God is prepared to make it for the blessing of sinners. Let it be more vigorously preached to the acknowledgment of the wisdom and glory of God, and we shall see greater things than hitherto.

Writing as we do at the close of the Church Congress of 1890, we cannot but regard its varied discussions as for the most part very timely and practical. There have been no sensational papers, and no exciting controversies. In one of the opening sermons, by the Bishop of Manchester, and in the presidential address of the Bishop of Durham, special attention was given to the questions of Capital and Labour, and this prominence was afterwards maintained. Two considerations were wisely urged—that clergymen should hesitate to take for granted that they were fitted to interfere as those who understood these questions, and workmen must be made to understand what was the Church's true position in relation to them. That position was—that while Christianity taught there was a common brotherhood, with its abiding duties, among men, the Socialistic theory of an absolute equality was baseless.

The Congress might with advantage have been spared much that was said on the subject of betting and gambling. It would, said the Dean of Rochester, be impudent and unjust to ask that the Prince of Wales should retire from the racecourse, because the withdrawal of men of position and education would only multiply abuses. To many persons who are behind the scenes in these things, it is painfully manifest that the patronage of the turf by men of position tends more than anything else to spread the all but universal mania for betting on races. Their open withdrawal would be a vast gain to national morality. On the matter of card-playing, the Bishop of Beverley said from the chair:—

> It was worth while to teach our children to play whist for whist's sake. (Loud cheers.) He was doing it himself just now, without any sort of points or gains. (Hear, hear.) Any game that was worth playing at all was worth playing without a stake. (Loud cheers.) He did not judge his brother, but they must try to educate their children rightly, and do what they could to fight against the terrible evil which was sapping the foundations of society.

This utterance was preceded by the following from Captain Judge:—

> He was fond of playing at whist. (Cheers.) He was the keeper of his own conscience, and nobody would make him believe that playing for threepenny points or losing half-a-crown, which he could well afford to do, was a sin against God. (Cheers.)

If this be so, and everywhere in modern society youths are brought into contact with men whose pleasures are in losing or winning half-crowns, those parents are to be commended who refuse to train their sons to be proficients in games which are attended by customs which "are sapping the foundations of society."

We have much more pleasure in commending a most useful discussion on "Systematic Instruction in Religion." Many adult church-goers, averred Principal Moule, did not know their Bibles at all in any first-hand sense. The remedy for this, he urged, was to take a good broad surface of Scripture for diligent consecutive exposition. "If," said the Bishop of Wakefield,

> "There was more of that sort of teaching than was the case, there would, perhaps, be less of what Bishop Wilberforce once described as 'a few texts floating here and there in the turbid wash of your own feeble fancy.'"

Such consecutive and thorough Biblical teaching would be a blessing almost without a parallel in thousands of English parishes, just as the absence of it is one of the greatest losses and perils congregations in English churches now sustain. On no topic before the Congress were papers more valuable than on this.

The discussion on "Home Reunion" led to no practical issue. Admirable was the tone of proceedings in relation to the deputations of Nonconformists with which the Congress opened, but there would appear to have been need for the advice of the Archbishop of Dublin, that before any general action could be taken there must be a personal cultivation on the part of the clergy of fraternal relationships. The brotherly and hospitable entertainment on the 29th ult. of ninety Nonconformist ministers of his diocese by the Bishop of Lichfield was a beautiful illustration of this counsel.

On the last day of the Church Congress at Hull, Archdeacon Farrar introduced the subject of the "Ethics of Commerce" with a tremendous indictment against modern methods of trading that was like a forewarning of doom; while a manifesto was presented on the same week by a special committee to the Union of Congregationalists at Swansea, which affirmed that "wrong was never so intolerable" as at present. The same difference obtained in these Swansea meetings themselves. The presidential address by Rev. T. Green spoke strongly of the existing dangers of the secular element in Congregational Church life, and this was followed by a paper of a young Leicester minister on the feebleness of Nonconformity in certain important parts of England. But in the discussion which succeeded, Rev. J. Guinness Rogers deprecated these depressing views. The truth is, "pessimistic" and "optimistic" are becoming utterly misleading terms, used without discrimination, and, instead of indicating the temperament of different men, do no more than emphasise the different standards they apply to the problems of society.

A discussion on Brotherhoods was provoked by Archdeacon Farrar. It is not surprising that earnest men should be concerned for the unreached masses of the population, but not by wandering friars or men under special vows is the work of thorough evangelisation to be done. The Bishop of Liverpool showed how fallacious are the arguments used by the advocates of Brotherhoods. He said:—

> We need neither Robert Elsmere, nor a revised Book of Sports, nor a Continental Sunday. We shall obtain no solid lasting results from a vague restless altruism, or music, or dancing, or pictures, or theatricals. These things may touch the skin of the evil; but they do not reach the heart. We need nothing new, nothing but the old story of the cross, the blood, the love, the power of our Lord Jesus Christ. The true solution of the problem is to rouse our lay communicants all over the land, and awaken them to a sense of their responsibilities and duties. We want a revival among our communicants quite as much as among our non-worshipping classes. The laity of our Church are not where they ought to be in the direct work of Christ. There is a sad gulf between the churches of the first century and the English Church in the nineteenth century. A mischievous habit of leaving all religion to the parson of the parish has overspread the country, and the bulk of lay Churchmen seem to think that they have nothing to do with the Church but to receive the benefits of her means of grace, while they contribute nothing in the way of personal active exertion to promote her efficiency.

We have here an indication of the true remedy for the ineffectiveness of present effort. The lesson is of more general application than at first appears, for active discipleship is a desideratum abroad as well as at home. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe writes:—

Possibly the Bishop's mind contemplated appealing to the laymen of England only. But surely his entreaty should be sounded out for the benefit of the laymen of the whole world, in order that the evangelisation of the untaught nations may be thus expedited as the Lord of the harvest would have it be.

At the Wednesday's meeting of the Congregational Union, Dr. Mackennal read a paper, which opened with these powerful words:—

There had perhaps never been a time in English history when a Christian profession had been so ostentatiously ignored in all departments of Government as during these later years. The disingenuousness of Parliamentary debate, the prostitution of Parliamentary opportunities to Parliamentary purposes, and the unscrupulousness of party tactics, base insinuations, calculated violence of language, the habit of irritating opponents in order to evade the point at issue, distinct falsehood of statement, the use of subtleties of speech to convey an untrue immediate impression—all these things, which characterised alike the four parties into which Parliament was divided, called for the sternest reprehension. The affairs of a Christian nation were conducted in an un-Christian manner.

Manners travel downwards, and the example of the highest assembly in the land is so much in danger of corrupting sources of action everywhere as imperatively to demand, far and wide, a like stern rebuke.

To some it might seem that the deliberations of these religious conferences will end in the utterances which marked them. We would rather hope that the attention given to the matters of discussion indicate an awakening to the terrible temptations and the shortcomings which are the grave perils now upon us.

Mrs. Besant has been endeavouring to explain to the people of the Irish Metropolis the mysteries of Theosophy, but our Dublin contemporaries assert that her audience in the end of the lecture "had just as much idea of what she was talking about as when she first took her stand upon the platform." Like her predecessors, Colonel Olcott, Madame Blavatsky, and others, Mrs. Besant has no message to convey which he that runneth may read, and her mission to the Irish people is, therefore, likely to be as unsuccessful as theirs. "Learn of me," says the philosopher, "and ye shall find restlessness." "Learn of Me," says Christ, "and ye shall find rest."

It is proposed to commemorate the centenary of John Wesley's death by the restoration of Wesley's Chapel in the City-road, London—a building which, erected in 1778, is still in existence. It is open to question, however, if some plan more in accordance with the object of Wesley's life and labours might not be found, and one too which would appeal to the wide body of sympathisers with Wesley's work who are found outside the Wesleyan communion. "The world is my parish," Wesley said, and perhaps the centenary would be most fittingly commemorated by an effort to send the Gospel of Christ to some part of that vast parish not yet reached.

We are not about to urge that too much prominence has of late been given to the consideration of social questions in connection with religion, but it is necessary to point out that the attitude of labour in regard to capital is not invariably in keeping with the teachings of Christ. The appeal to the Sermon on the Mount can be made from both sides, and if the master owes a duty to his servant, the servant is none the less bound to recognise Christian ethics in his dealings with the employer. The golden rule of Jesus applies all round.

The Congregational Union.

A very earnest and practical tone marked the meetings of the Congregational Union at Swansea last week. Among the subjects which came under consideration were the prevalence of gambling, which Rev. W. Spensley denounced in all its forms; the decay of Sunday observance, in the discussion of which Rev. T. Robinson (Colchester) said that "the scenes at the Pelican Club, where ruffians in broadcloth desecrated the Sabbath, reminded them of the scenes which preceded the fall of the Roman Empire"; and, of course, the question of Disestablishment. We only refer to this now because one of the speakers (Rev. Dr. Thomas, of Liverpool), in alluding to this subject, made an important reference to "Home Reunion." In Disestablishment he saw the hope of union between the Church of England and all evangelical Churches. While the Establishment continued, every attempt at union would prove a failure. But if free, the Church of England might still continue to be Episcopal, retaining all its forms and officers, and the sorely needed union would be possible.

The opening address of Rev. Thomas Green, the Chairman of the Union, sounded what seems to us to be a needful note of warning against the introduction of the secular element into our Church life. One of the evils which must result from this will be the practical extinction of some of the smaller churches, while churches in larger towns or wealthy suburbs may become "theatres of variety," turning on "all available force in the secular direction and finding nothing left for directly spiritual effort." Is not this a real evil? If by "literature, nursing, athletics, and entertainments," the Church becomes more popular, of what value is its popularity, if it becomes less spiritual? There are expressions of practical Christianity of which the Lord at his coming will take very special note (Matt. xxv.), and which the Church has too long neglected. We believe neither in Brotherhoods nor Sisterhoods, but we do believe that the spiritual work of the Church will be more effective when to the poor, the fallen, and the sick, a truer and more practical sympathy is shown. But while going far in this direction, it is needful to be warned against so secularising the Church that it would cease to be a spiritual power. For, as Mr. Green points out, the present development is giving theology a subordinate place, and often ignoring it altogether. This is a result disastrous in the highest degree.

If the Church ceases to be a witness for the truth, she might as well cease to exist. Savourless salt is worth less than nothing. And we are thankful to believe that where theology is ignored "the scantiest harvest is reaped, while the dogmatic Churches have hitherto taken the multitude." So long as sin exists, and men have a conscience that accuses them of it, so long will theology, dogmatic and evangelical, be needed, if men are to be saved in the highest sense.

In a paper read by Rev. T. Simon, of Leicester, it was stated that in that town "the Established Church had made advances in a greater degree than all the Nonconformist denominations in the town put together." The value of this statement depends, of course, upon the kind of teaching given in the Nonconformist churches. If the Church of England there teaches a clearer and bolder evangelicalism, that is enough to explain her greater progress, and the fact would then become a confirmation of the Chairman's statement.

We must allude to another point in the Chairman's address. "Many of the churches," he said, "were very busy at the present time in the formation of societies to supersede themselves. They must not let the Church idea be crowded out by the multiplicity of their organisations, though these organisations might be the offspring of the Church itself." This is, in our judgment, an evil that needs to be carefully watched. What are many of our societies and guilds and bands but so many confessions of the Church's failure? We endorse and would emphasise the statement with which the President concluded his address, that "by clinging to the spiritual ideal of Church life a greater amount of good would be accomplished than by dependence on the new developments of the secular element."

"BURIED-ALIVE" NUNS.

A Berlin telegram says:—"The myterious nunnery commonly called the 'Nunnery of the Buried Alive' at Naples, which has been closed against outsiders for four centuries was opened on October 4, by order of the Minister of Justice. In spite of the strenuous opposition of the doorkeeper, the police entered by the windows. Sixteen nuns were found within, in a state bordering upon insanity. They were covered with rags, and their surroundings were of the most filthy description. Many had forgotten how to speak, and the demeanour of all of them was more that of animals than human beings, but those who were induced to talk expressed themselves as perfectly resigned to their fate. The cause of the raid upon the nunnery was a desire to recover a young girl who had been banished to the place on account of a love affair objectionable to her family. The latter, being unable to communicate with her, had complained to the police, and an order from the Minister of Justice for her removal was obtained. She was found to be a mere skeleton, and her parents became half crazed at the condition in which she was discovered. The nunnery has been closed and a strict investigation ordered by the Governor of Naples."

A Times telegram from Berlin says:—"Ten more nuns have been released from the subterranean dungeons of the 'Nunnery of the Buried Alive' at Naples. Among them were eight young women who had been incarcerated against their will by order of their parents. The police have been ordered to visit all nunneries in Southern Italy which are closed to the public. Cardinal Sanfelice has left Naples for Rome, to obtain instructions from the Pope on the subject. Immense excitement has been created by the disclosures."

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Meetings to be held by Mr. E. Arrowsmith, for children and young people, in the Town Hall, Banbury, Oct. 19 to 27——A mission in the Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road, S.W., to be conducted by Mr. J. J. LIFE, LIGHT, AND LOVE.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

THE WORD IN CREATION.—John i. 2, 3. It is a distinct loss to many of us, whose lives are spent in the heart of great towns, that we miss those enlarged conceptions of Nature which are suggested by the far horizon of the sea, the outlines of distant hills, the snowy summits of the Alps, or the outspread panorama of woods, rivers, and pasture lands. And the privation affects us principally in this, that contracted views of Nature sometimes carry with them more limited views of God's being and glory than if we dwelt in habitual contemplation of the vastness and splendour of his Creation.

One of the first thoughts which occurs to the devout mind, on emerging from the straitened conditions of city life into the larger world of Nature, is to reproach itself that it has entertained such dwarfed ideas of God. And whilst it does not abate one note of the tender Our Father, it adds to it the deep bass of the Psalmist's awe, "Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised, and his greatness is unsearchable."

Such thoughts open straight on the passage before us. We look, and rightly, on the Lord Jesus, as Brother, Saviour, Friend; but do we always conceive of Him, as invested with the awful glory of Godhead? We cannot be too intimate and tender in our relations to Him; but we do well sometimes to go outside to see what He has done, that we may know how great He is, who is so near and dear.

"The same was in the beginning with God."—At first this seems merely to sum up and repeat the previous verse. But it does more. It tells us that He who was before the beginning was also at the beginning, and that that face-to-face fellowship, which had subsisted before all worlds, was in active exercise at the august moment when the ever-blessed Trinity proceeded to create. Do we not detect it in the sublime colloquy: "Let us make man"?

"All things were made by Him."—The Greek is very significant: All things became, i.e., came into being, through Him. This became is in striking contrast to the was of the previous verse, and indicates the passage from nothingness to being. Became, i.e., all things emerged out of nothing at the creative fiat. Became, the universe appeared, as a fairy palace or the fabric of our fancy in a dream, suddenly looming on the vision. There is a beautiful parallel in another passage of this Gospel, in which our Lord affirms, "Before Abraham came into being, I am" (viii. 58).

The preposition "through" is always used of the office of our blessed Lord in the work of creation (1 Cor. viii. 6; Col. i. 16; Heb. i. 2), and is full of meaning. It leaves God the Father as the origin and source of all things, so that the elders are justified in their perpetual ascription of worship before his throne (Rev. iv. 11); but God the Son, our Lord, is the organ through which the creative purpose moves. Through Him the infinite God utters Himself in his works.

In the archaic record of creation with which the Bible opens, two phrases are to be noticed—created (i. 21, 27) and God said (which occurs ten times). Into each of these we must now read the announcement of this text. Note those three acts of creation. Whatever else we may concede to men of science, we must insist on retaining these for God, and ascribing them to our Lord. And whenever God is said to speak, we must listen for the well-known accents of a voice we love.

It was the voice of Jesus that said, "Let there be light," and the new ethereal substance spread like a haze of glory through space. It was the hand of Jesus that made the expanse between cloud and sea, in which the birds fly (Gen. i. 20). It was the bidding of Jesus that drove the turbulent waters from the land into the ocean-bed which He had scooped. It was the thought of Jesus to splinter the mountain peaks, to thrust the frozen glacier down into the valley by inches, to pour forth the rivers, and to shake down over the hills the falling foam of the cataract. It was Jesus that carpeted the earth with flowers, and devised the innumerable sorts of plants, and planted the noble forest-trees. It was Jesus that rolled the stars on their orbits to tell forth the glory of God, and to keep time on Nature's dial. It was Jesus that made the fish to flash in the deep, the reptile to creep in the brake, the fire-fly to glance through the forest, the birds to sing in the woods, flocks to browse on the hills, and herds to traverse the prairies.

It was Jesus who created the human nature which, in after years, He was to assume. He made man in the image and after the likeness of what He was Himself to be in the fulness of time. What strange emotions must have filled his heart as he built up that first man from the red earth.

"Without Him was not anything made that was made."—This is added to make exceptions impossible. The Greek is very emphatic, not one single thing. You must not except angels because too great, or emmets because too small; not worlds because too ponderous, or dust-atoms because two insignificant; not electricity, or light, or heat, because too ethereal, or the ichthyosaurus or toad because too ungainly. The hand of inspiration writes the name of Jesus where artists put theirs, beneath all things in heaven and on earth, visible or invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers.

> "Not a flower
> But shows some touch, in freckle, streak, or stain,
> Of his unrivalled pencil."

"In Him was Life."—We must light up these words by his own: "As the Father hath life in Himself," the source and fountain of all being, "so hath He given to the Son," that is, in the subordinate position which He voluntarily assumed for the purposes of creation and redemption, "to have life in Himself." All life is of God in its original reservoir; and all life is in the Lord Jesus, as a cistern of supply, from which all demands for life of every sort are met.

All natural and physical life, all animal and intellectual life, all spiritual and religious life, is in Him. The whole universe of living things was not simply brought into being by Christ, but it is kept in existence and sustained in living beauty by the constant communications of his fulness, as a vale is kept in fertile beauty, luxuriant with vegetation, by the spray of a perennial waterfall. As the Word, He creates; as the Life, He sustains; as the Word, He declares God; as the Life, He communicates his essence. "As the Word, He is God without us; as the Life, He is God within us."

Apart from Christ, you may exist; but you have no life in you. "He that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." He may have many attractive and amiable qualities, much that is correct in behaviour, and beautiful in appearance, but he has no life.

But if you are in Christ, opening all your being to Him, door behind door, back into the most sacred chambers of your being, so that He has free and unhindered entrance into your entire nature, then, as the Nile, descending through the channels cut by the Egyptian peasantry, bears life and fertility into their gardens and cornfields, so will He bring his own life, the life of God, life indeed, into you, and though you were dead, yet shall you live (John xi. 25).

(1) Say No to your Self-life.—It is in proportion as we curtail the self-life that we increase the Christ-life. Michael Angelo was wont to say of the chippings that fell thick on the floor of his studio, While the marble wastes, the image grows; and so as we chip away ourselves by daily watchfulness and self-denial, the life of Jesus becomes more manifest in our mortal body (2 Cor. iv. 10, 11). A rosebud may be grafted into a briar, but the briar must never be allowed to put forth its own shoots beneath it, or they will drain away its strength, so the gardener is ever mercilessly budding them off. After the same manner must we deal with every assertion of self. "I have been, and am, crucified with Christ..Christ liveth in me."

(2) Yield to the Christ-life.—This is the law of all natural forces: if you want them to help you, you must yield them obedience. In using them, you are less their master, and more their slave, than you suppose. They are willing to toil for you day and night, but on the one condition that you should study and obey the laws of their operation. And it is so with respect to that greatest of all forces, the life of the Son of God. It is throbbing in every believer's heart. And the difference between Christians consists in this, that some ignore its presence, or, at least, are very careless of its promptings, whilst others are ever on the alert to translate into instant obedience, the tiniest impressions. As you yield to the Spirit of life which is in Christ Jesus, you become more conscious of his blessed strivings within, they increase in number and power, and bear you forward, as when the ocean pours its tides up an estuary or river, and reverses the direction of its flow.

(3) Replenish waste by going again to the source.—There is so much leakage in us that we soon exhaust what we have received. The oxygen absorbed by the blood is soon exhausted by its contact with the waste of our tissues, and needs to be drawn back through the veins to be soaked again in the air of our lungs; so does the freshness of the Divine life within us need to be daily renewed, and we must go back to Him in whom it is ever brimming, that out of his fulness we may receive, and grace for grace. It is in the reading of his Word, in waiting upon his ordinances, especially in the Lord's Supper, that the inner life becomes thus replenished and "fulfilled with his grace and heavenly benediction."

"The Life was the Light of Men."—All true life is luminous. The lowest forms of physical life are light, as when the keel of the vessel ploughs up the wave, and leaves long lines of phosphorescent glory in its wake. And who does not know of some community which has been lit up by the glow of some noble life! During his life in our mortal body, Jesus could not be hid; no bushel of obscurity sufficed to conceal Him. And now, when He enters into contact with any soul or life, that soul begins to glow, that life to shine.

We are like so many unlit candles, some of coarser and some of more refined texture, clustered together in a darkened chamber, but not one of us able to dispel its gloom, or cope with its dense obscurity; but just so soon as we touch Jesus Christ, or are touched by Him, we begin to sparkle and shine. His Life is Light. "Arise, shine, for thy light is come." "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead and Christ shall give thee light."

These then are our closing reflections:—

(1) How great must He be, through whom this great universe was made, who was one with God the Father in its inception, and one in its execution. He could not have been less than God, or the infinite, had not found adequate expression through his means. Only the Infinite can be the channel for the Infinite.

(2) We may learn something of the beauty of his mind. The beauty sleeping in a seed reveals itself by the colours of the flower as they unfurl to the sun, and the fragrance that fills the air. The beauty in the unexplored heart of a friend reveals itself in the verses we suddenly light upon, or the books which fall into our hand. The beauty of the artist's mind is discovered in the pictures or statues which he has produced. And what revelations are made to us of the beauty of the conceptions of our Lord as we arm our eyes with telescope or microscope and study the infinite above or the infinite beneath.

(3) We can trace some lingering remnants of the grandeur of our original nature, in that we ourselves, sinful and fallen though we be, are able to admire the works of his hands, and to repeat his "very good" of all that we can see of his power and skill. Devils seem devoid of this power, for they are pictured as haunting uninhabited and desolate places, roaming through desert places, and infesting the ruined heaps of the past.

(4) We can understand the miracles and parables better. In the one, our Lord was simply re-asserting his original power over nature; as when Ulysses returned after years of absence, and bent with ease the bow which had defied the efforts of all who had essayed to use it in his absence. And in the other, He simply read out the meaning which He had hidden in vines, and seeds, and natural processes; for all things around us are made after the pattern and type of spiritual realities.

(5) We may be sure that He who made can and must redeem. It is impossible to suppose that He through whom all things were made could stand by and see them vitiated and spoilt by sin, without making a single effort to arrest the progress of the devastator, and to restore the universe to its pristine beauty and order. We are not then surprised to learn that the same paragraph, which tells us that all things were created by Him, also tells us that it pleased the Father by Him to reconcile all things to Himself, whether they be things in earth or things in heaven (Col. i. 16-20).

He who is the Alpha must also be the Omega; He who created by a word must redeem by his blood; He who originated must see that He is not robbed of the fruits of his toil; He who said, "Behold, I make," must also say, "Behold, I make all things new."

Deleterious Literature.

AN ADDRESS AT DUBLIN CONVENTION,

By Rev. THAIN DAVIDSON, D.D.

The memorable bonfire at Ephesus (A.D. 59), when £2000 worth of pernicious literature was destroyed on one afternoon, may teach us a much-needed lesson. I suspect there are few private libraries that would not be the better for a considerable weeding; and as for the circulating libraries and railway bookstalls, why, there are tons' weight of printed matter that ought to be committed to the flames.

The historic conflagration I refer to was one of the direct results of St. Paul's powerful preaching of the Gospel; and, rest assured you may, that when God's pure truth is faithfully proclaimed, and is taking hold of the community, there will be a prompt endeavour to stem the tide of evil occasioned by an ungodly press.

The people of Ephesus were downright in earnest that day. No half measures would satisfy them. We read that "they brought their books together, and burned them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it 50,000 pieces of silver." They made a clean sweep of the whole business. A good afternoon's job, was it not? Don't you see the people running out of their houses, with their arms full of the deleterious stuff? Cumbrous papyrus volumes and pamphlets; great greasy rolls of vellum—fine stuff for a fire. See how it blazes! The little boys of the city dance with delight around the crackling, burning pile.

WHAT A SENSATION IN TOWN!

I haven't a doubt there were men looking on who were in a rage. They said: "What a shame to destroy all those interesting books and parchments! What fools you are to waste in this way hundreds of pounds' worth of property! If you don't want to read these books yourselves you might at least give other people the chance of reading them." "That is just what we won't do," said these sturdy iconoclasts, "if they are not good for us, they are not good for you, nor for anybody else. They have wrought quite enough mischief already." So they give a fresh poke to the burning mass, and won't leave it till the last leaf is consumed to ashes.

Now it is not too much to say that the light of that bonfire shone over all Asia Minor. "So mightly grew the Word of God and prevailed." It will always be so. Every blow administered to the prince of darkness is a stimulus to the progress of Christ's kingdom.

I only wish we could see such a bonfire, in London, Edinburgh, and Dublin, of the unwholesome literature which every week is being poured forth upon the country. To the spread of this poison is unquestionably due a large proportion of the impurity and crime and scepticism which we all so much deplore. There is not a greater hindrance to true religion in the land, and to that high moral tone in the community which is so essential to the national welfare than the issue from the press of sensational, indecent, and atheistical publications. Only check that issue, or destroy that production, and you will clear out of the way an immense impediment to the progress of the Gospel.

It is hardly possible to overestimate the power of the press for good or evil. There are waves of influence daily rolling out from Fleet-street and Paternoster-row and other well-known printing and publishing quarters in many of the large towns, which reach the remotest ends of the earth, and dash up even against the shores of the Antipodes.

Be assured, the great battle between truth and error is to be fought, not with swords and rifles, but with types and printing-presses; and it is a battle in which every one of us can and ought to take a part. Such are the facilities now presented by the press and the post office that everyone who is enthusiastic in any particular cause makes abundant use of paper and printers' ink; and when we see the enormous sale of frivolous and trashy literature and the untiring efforts made in certain quarters to propagate soul-destroying error, we must feel that every Christian incurs a grave responsibility, and is guilty indeed of a gigantic sin of omission, who is not making positive effort to scatter the seed of pure and saving truth. Everyone who does his best to stamp out a bad book and disseminate a good one is working for the benefit of his race.

If you ever visited the castle of Wartburg, you have doubtless been shown a great black blotch upon the wall, which they tell you was made in this way:—When Martin Luther was in this retired spot, he was so haunted by the devil that at last, in a fit of righteous indignation, he took up his inkpot, and hurled it at the imagined figure which he took to be his adversary. The pot broke upon the wall, leaving an ugly splash behind; but the devil vanished, and never troubled him in that fashion any more. I will not guarantee this story to be literally true, but I am very sure of this, that a well-administered pot of ink has often put the devil to flight. He has often had more reason to fear the pen than to fear the sword. Ah! had we an outpouring of the Spirit of God upon the land and a revival of genuine religion, certain it is there would be a clean sweep made of the vapid, trashy literature which at present abounds, and our libraries and bookstalls would be filled with a very different class of pabulum for the mind. There are newspapers, and periodicals, and pamphlets, and books, which men of the world daily devour to their moral detriment, but which they will not touch nor look upon from the moment they are converted to God.

Some of you, I believe, have scarcely a conception of the amount of moral poison that is every week being sent forth from certain printing-houses all over the land. It is simply awful. Infidel tracts in tens of thousands, attractive works of fiction in which a covert attack is made upon the Christian faith:

FILTHY AND DEMORALISING JOURNALS,

betting newspapers, and ton-loads of frivolous and sensational rubbish. The mischief that is done is incalculable. Our young people are inoculated with the deadly virus or ever they are aware, and an appetite is formed for a style of reading which blights and withers up every sound moral principle in the soul. Preachers, Sunday-school teachers, and Christian workers of all kinds labour under terrible disadvantage, solong as the young are filling their minds with the trash to which I refer. In our best efforts to build up the cause of God, our way is sadly blocked; and, like Nehemiah when he was eagerly essaying to rebuild Jerusalem, we may say, "There is much rubbish."

How many instances have come under my own notice, of young men who have come to disgrace and ruin, and have frankly owned that it was the perusal of some vile journal, or obscene novel, that first led them into the path of wickedness. I know it is a matter of grave concern to not a few Christian parents that agnostic views (just a genteel name for infidelity) are spreading in the public schools where their sons are being educated, and that through the dissemination of poisonous literature. And here is a brief extract from a letter received from a God-fearing youth in a small provincial town:—

Can you kindly advise me on the following matter? There is in this town a tradesman who is an atheist, and lately he has begun to exhibit in his shop window some of the writings of B—— and other infidels. Also he has in his window a print of the Crucifixion, and underneath it these words, "An Historical Fiction." In other ways he is trying to bring atheism before the public, and his shop is in one of the main thoroughfares. Can you direct me as to the best method of counteracting his influence?

It is a fact that the Secularists and advocates of what is called "Freethought" have determined to make use of the printing press to an extent that has not yet been attempted for the propagation of their mischievous principles.

With a zeal worthy of a better cause they are circulating their publications in workshops and factories, and in every rendezvous of working men, and are trying hard to create the impression that every form of religion is but superstition. Now, to be forewarned is to be forearmed. It may not be possible for us to get hold of these sheets, and make a bonfire of them; but the next best thing to destroying a bad book is to circulate a good one; and, thanks to the many excellent Religious Tract and Book Societies, there is no difficulty whatever in furnishing ourselves at a trifling cost with an abundant supply of such ammunition.

FIVE KINDS OF DELETERIOUS LITERATURE

are doing great injury to the faith and morals of the country.

First I must name such filthy publications as are unblushingly sold in the streets of London, especially in the more central parts, which pander to the lowest passions of human nature, and defile everyone that touches them. Nothing has a greater tendency to sap the vitality of a nation than the spread of such unclean sheets; nor is it less than a disgrace to our British civilisation, that periodicals of the kind I refer to are sold with impunity. It is more than time that the Legislature stepped in to put a stop to the loathsome traffic; and thanks are due to Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., and others who have been moving in this direction.

The venerable John Angell James, of Birmingham, once remarked that to advanced age he felt the baneful influence of a vile book which had been put in his hand when he was quite a boy. I refer, secondly, to atheistical and freethought literature. Much of it is so outrageously coarse and blasphemous that, happily, it defeats it own end; and no man, though not a professing Christian at all, who has a spark of refined feeling, can do otherwise than turn with loathing from it. I have been so freely pelted with tracts and periodicals of this sort, coming from an unknown source, that I am pretty familiar with the subject I am speaking of; and most of you would scarcely credit the depth of base profanity to which some of these writers descend.

Thirdly, I regret to have to allude to certain so-called Christian journals, which, by sapping and undermining the vital doctrines of evangelical theology, are doing more, in my firm belief, than all the infidel publications put together, to turn men away from the Gospel of Christ. Can anything be more unworthy, more mean, than the conduct of some of these journalists, who have amassed considerable fortunes by addressing themselves to the religious public of the country, and, having acquired position and influence, are now unscrupulously using these to uproot the Gospel from the land. Fourthly, I mention trashy and frivolous novels—2s. ones in gaudy covers, piled upon the railway bookstalls; and costly three-volumed ones in calf and gilt; which are throwing around gross vice an air of knight-errantry and romance, and unfitting their readers for the sober duties of common and prosaic life.

High up in yonder window you observe a dim light burning far into the silent night. You ascend the stair, and softly open the door, and ask, "What are you doing?" Replies a young voice, "I am reading." "What are you reading?" "A book." "I suppose; but—what book?" (for already it is stuffed away out of sight); and you find it is some sensational rubbish,* fitted only to emasculate and pollute the mind. How ill-prepared for the serious duties of life must that young person be who last night was wading through chapters of magnificent knavery and high-life wickedness. Ah! life is neither a farce nor a tragedy. Men are not all either knaves or heroes. Women are not all either furies or angels. Out with all that silly, foul, destructive literature, which tries to ennoble the mean and to whitewash iniquity! I bring against it this indictment, that it has proved the ruin, temporal and eternal, of tens of thousands of men and women, who at one time gave promise of a happy, honourable, and useful career!

In the fifth and last place, I mention the Sunday newspapers, which are doing a great deal of moral harm amongst our artisans.

Too few of our working men are found in the House of God; but even amongst those who do attend public worship on the morning of the Lord's day, I find many whose Sabbath afternoon is devoted to the newspaper and the pipe. And it does not require much spiritual discernment to see how unfavourable this must be to the growth of a real piety. But, indeed, it is not the Sunday newspapers only that are injuring the moral tone of society, for the prominence now generally given in the daily and weekly press to racing and betting news is making it a terrible instrument of evil. Some of you, probably, have scarcely a conception of the extent to which this curse of betting and gambling is spreading through all classes of the community; and I am grieved to say that the newspaper press is the greatest factor in propagating the evil. It is quite pleasing to know that two or three secular journals now refuse to admit betting and sporting intelligence to their columns, and it is a question how far we who profess to be Christians are justified in receiving into our family circles any periodicals that encourage this baneful vice.

What I have said has been under the profound conviction that the Christian Church is not fully alive to the enormous mischief which an unprincipled press is inflicting on the youth of our land, and that it is high time that a pious patriotism bestirred itself to grapple with the evil.

* Under this head I may include the "Penny Dreadfuls" and all the cheap frivolous trash on which multitudes of the young are daily feeding.

A NATIONAL PROTESTANT CONGRESS will be held in Portman Rooms, London, W., on Oct. 27, 28, and 29. The object of the Congress is to unite Christians of all evangelical denominations in the discussion and defence of our national Protestantism. The subjects selected for consideration embrace the most important religious questions of the day, and the speakers include many well-known exponents of Protestant doctrine.
